We are told that we must have international control. What does that mean? Mere registration? If so, by all means let us have it. But what is the use of that? Or does it mean some central, international body, which is to lay down rules as to how many aeroplanes any country may have? Will it lay down that Mrs. Mollison may not try a new flight because she is not to have an aeroplane until Latvia has had two more? The whole thing is preposterous. As for international administration, that will always be an example of incompetence and inefficiency. Every now and again, the " Times " newspaper correspondent at Tangier gives us some amusing descriptions of international government at that place. The last I remember was the end of the long-drawn-out dispute between France and Spain, which for years prevented the inauguration of a new fire-engine. It was finally settled by Spain providing the pipe and, I think, France providing the engine, while a third Power provided the wheels. If you have international control, who is to be responsible? All these things, to have any real effect, postulate an international government of the world, and we are very far from that.

Who is going to accept this preposterous suggestion? The United States have already announced that they will not have their civil aviation internationally controlled. The United States have 11,000 aeroplanes, more than the rest of the world put together. Will Canada have her civil aviation supervised, and is Australia going to put her rapidly developing scheme of civil aviation, which is doing wonders for the opening up of the country, under the control of some body at Geneva? The whole thing is unworkable, and an attempt to work it would only postpone the development of a great new means of communication which is calculated to contribute far more to an understanding among nations and to the cause of peace than any of the unreal and largely hypocritical discussions at Geneva.

The Lord President of the Council says that there is no immediate hurry for discussing these matters, and that they are not likely to come to anything for a very long time. That is not a fair way to treat the subject. It does not exonerate the Government from its responsibility for having brought forward proposals which would be dangerous to the security and peace of the British Empire, and which would mean the abandonment of the responsibilities that we have undertaken. They are proposals which show so little real thought, and such an irresponsibility in introducing them, that, in my case at any rate, they have seriously shaken my confidence in the capacity and fitness of the Government to be trusted with the control of our international relations. It is time that in these matters the Governmnt should bring forward honest proposals which they believe can be carried out, and which they mean to be carried out, and should not make gestures which only help to mislead the public at home, which do nothing for the cause of peace, and which, in the end, lead to disillusionment, if not disaster.

The Secretary of State, dismissing the wider Government proposals as requiring no comment, says that the "practical proposals" put forward for a general reduction are so-and-so, and refers to the fact that we have asked everyone to reduce to our level and then a further 33 per cent. That is a proposal which at any rate is workable in the sense that, if others adopted it, it could be carried out. But is it really any more practical? Here are we, the fifth air Power in the world, and it suits us, with our naval position, being the fifth air Power, to get every one down to our level; and we put that forward as a serious contribution to the cause of peace. Italy is the fifth naval Power in the world. What should we say if Italy came to the League of Nations and seriously proposed that the navies of the world should be scaled down to the Italian standard, and then 33 per cent. below it? We should regard that as a thoroughly dishonest proposal. I am afraid that behind a great deal of our self-righteous posing as the champions of the cause of disarmament and peace there is not a little of the prudence that belongs to the policy of "Disarm your neighbour first." I think it would be far better to omit the first sentences of that paragraph, and to tackle the last sentence, which records the fact that:

> "The modest defence programme of 1923 is held in suspense for another year."

Is it not time that that suspense were ended—that, in view of the admitted failure of the Disarmament Conference, we saw to it that our Air defence, without being excessive, without indicating any aggressive intention, was at any rate adequate to our security? I feel strongly that it is high time that we interrupted the endless circle of gestures and proposals which are not seriously meant, which are not really honest, which do not help forward the cause of peace. Let us get on with the problem of reconciling the world's difficulties, of finding solutions for the political problems which underlie those difficulties. They are individual and local solutions, not susceptible of being dealt with by any cut-and-dried scheme or any method of percentages. Let us work patiently, and, in the meantime, let us maintain at any rate a reasonable minimum of defence for our own needs, showing both that we are capable of defending ourselves and that we have no aggressive intentions towards others.

6.34 p.m.

Lieut.-Colonel MOORE-BRABAZON: I have listened with great interest to the speech of my right hon. Friend the Member for Sparkbrook (Mr. Amery), bearing in mind the fact that he had a very distinguished career at Harrow, and also that he was at one time First Lord of the Admiralty. I sometimes wish that he had supported the views he expressed this afternoon when he was at the head of the Admiralty.

Mr. AMERY: I did.

Lieut.-Colonel MOORE-BRABAZON: Not always. My right hon. Friend dealt with one or two interesting points with regard to objectives for bombing, and, before I pass to the remarks that I would like to address to the House independently of his speech, I would like to draw the attention of the Air Ministry to the fact that an aircraft factory is certainly a legitimate target for bombing, and it is, I think, the duty of the Air Ministry to see that not too many of our aircraft factories are situated in the south, because they are situated now in industrial centres, where an enemy could quite justifiably bomb them and at the same time cause immense damage to the surroundings.

I would like to pay a very hearty compliment to my right hon. Friend the Under-Secretary for the way in which he presented these Estimates. His speech was, indeed, one of the most pleasant speeches to listen to, from the point of view of a back bencher, that I have had the pleasure of hearing for a very long time. Of course, it was remarkable, not for what was said, but for what was left out; but we have to remember that this Debate to-day is really a continuation from the Debate which was finished by the Lord President of the Council the other night on Disarmament from the point of view of the air. It will be remembered that he stopped in the middle of an interesting speech, when there were still 10 minutes to go, a Division was taken, everyone was left gaping with his mouth open, and no one replied. I happened to be standing in front of the Bar, or I should have said a word, but I could not get forward.

[Lieut.-Colonel Moore-Brabazon.]

I felt that the Lord President, in that speech, did a grave injustice to many of those people, including many of my friends who are dead, who strove and gave their lives for the creation of aviation. He said that he wished that aeroplanes had never been invented. I think that that was an unjustifiable thing to say. After all, those people who made flying a possibility in this world never thought that they were inventing a great engine of destruction. They thought that they were producing something which was going to be of value to the world, and it is ridiculous to think, in these days, of the possibility that this great gift from God should be done away with and destroyed simply because it happens to be unpleasant during war. I know it is unfortunate that we have the brand of Cain upon the aeroplane, but I think that we ourselves are a good deal to blame in this matter. My right hon. Friend and I, and many others whom I see here to-night, have preached year after year on these Estimates and in the Press the importance of air armaments and the destruction that can be effected through the air. I think that we have over-exaggerated our case, and that, to use an old Air Force term, we " put the wind up " the population to such an extent that they came to think, quite honestly, that a place like London could be exterminated in a few days by aerial bombardment. That is absolute and entire nonsense. We have to understand that all things are relative, and, although a very intense aerial bombardment would be unpleasant, it really would not be so disastrous as that.

Mr. EDWARD WILLIAMS: The hon. and gallant Member is certainly an expert on these matters, and Members of the House are pleased to hear what he has to say regarding them, but, surely, we are under a misapprehension if we fail to realise what aerial bombardment could do to London. We read in pamphlets and in the Press of the enormous damage that could be done, and the hon. and gallant Member is advancing an entirely new idea, of which I should like him to give an explanation.

Lieut.-Colonel MOORE-BRABAZON: I do not know how far I could go ahead on that particular theme, but I might, perhaps, point out to the hon. Gentleman what happened in the case of Dunkirk. Dunkirk was bombed three times a night for months on end by a squadron of German aeroplanes, which had the easiest task to find the town by flying along the coast. No town was ever subjected to such an aerial bombardment for so long; and yet people lived in it with comparative comfort. It was not destroyed off the face of the earth. And it is quite a small town as compared with London.

Mr. E. WILLIAMS: What about poison gases?

Lieut.-Colonel MOORE-BRABAZON: Poison gases, I believe, consist to a large extent of hot air. We have not had experience of them from the point of view of dropping them from the skies, and we do not know much about them in that regard. Nor would they be particularly efficacious if there were any wind. We have now to deal with London fogs, and, compared with them, the case of poison gas is very simple. Coming back to the question of Geneva and of the control of aviation, I resent very much the suggestion that we could go into the consideration of this subject at all without including Russia, which is concentrating enormously upon the development of air armament, and without including America. America has put forward some of the most amazing suggestions with regard to her own position that I have ever seen seriously advanced.

I have been trying lately to help this subject by serving on a sub-committee of the League of Nations Union, and some of the dope that is poured out to the people at Geneva is brought to that committee. Really, some of these documents are absolutely the most consummate balderdash that I have ever listened to. There is a Mr. Gibson, who tells us the most amazing things about American aviation. He tells us—I think it has been quoted already—that there are 10,000 aeroplanes in America, only 70 of which can be used for military purposes. Can anyone imagine that to be the case? We are told also that America ought to obtain exemption from control, if there is to be world control, because of her curious meteorological conditions. I hope that too much attention will not be paid to those two nations and their objections to control. Certainly from our own side, as has been pointed out, some of the best half-baked schemes have been put forward by defeatist half-wits from the Foreign Office that have ever been seen. I should like to ask my right hon. Friend if those schemes have been "vetted" by the Air Ministry, or if they have ever said that they agree to them? Or were they just chucked off as a way of passing an afternoon, without reference to any of the experts in charge of the air side?

We have been told that the Air Forces of the world—including, of course, our own—should be done away with, and in that connection I would like to say this to the House of Commons. I have been plugging along every year since the War making speeches on these Votes, and we have not really had any enemy outside. The enemy of the Air Force is not across the Channel, it is in Whitehall. Everybody knows perfectly well that the people who want to do away with the Air Force are the Army and the Navy. That sticks out a mile. When we come to putting forward some question of policy to the Government, the Cabinet are guided by the advice of the right hon. Gentlemen who preside over the War Office and the Admiralty; but they should be out of court and out of the room when anything is to be decided about the Air. They have failed time and again in their frontal attacks with the object of doing away with the Air Force, and now they say that, if they cannot do it by a frontal attack, they will do it by a sweeping movement at the side. When the suggestion has been made that the Air Force should be done away with, was not that exactly what the Admiralty and the War Office wanted? Of course it was. It was their suggestion, ably backed up in the Cabinet by half-wits. Some time ago, when the Air Force said that they could take on the administration of Iraq, what was the advice given by the great General Staff to the Cabinet at the time? It was that it would be perfectly impossible, and that a great disaster would follow any such attempt. On the contrary, however, it has been a complete triumph for the Air Force; it saved us millions of pounds. And there are many other ways in which air power can be used instead of other and more expensive services.

I should like to say a word about civil aviation, because on that subject we need a little clear thinking. When civil aviation started, it represented a movement which automatically should have become an internationalising force. In every country in Europe to-day you will find the most excessive subsidies on civil aviation. Those subsidies do not really produce civil aviation machines. They produce war machines disguised as civil aviation. In Germany, which of ocurse is deprived of warlike aviation, they have a most elaborate system of subsidised civil aviation. It is not necessary in any way. It is really only a potential resource for war. We in this country have been, as we always are, the most honest of all people. Our service from London to Paris is the only one in the world that could exist without any subsidy at all. I quite agree that, when we are pushing those big lines right down to Africa and throughout the world, they could not be self-supporting if it were not for subsidies.

One of the troubles to-day is subsidies, and the fear of the use of civil aviation for bombing in the first weeks of a war, the fact of civil aviation being turned into military aviation. I believe that, if subsidies were withdrawn by agreement at the League of Nations, the amount of civil aviation would decrease—anyhow, that type of civil aviation which is really war aviation in disguise. Our defence against commercial aviation disguised as military aviation is a really efficient Air Force of our own. Although we keep on saying we are only the fifth Air Force in the world, it was always our pride that on the technical side our equipment was the highest. I sincerely hope that my hon. Friend can tell me that that is being maintained. The Government, as years go on, and as they continue to live in a world of self-deception and flattery in which all Governments live, get their ears off the ground. I hope they will understand that the country is feeling very anxious over the Air Service. They are not content to remain the fifth Air Power. They are not content not to have a basis of a one-Power standard. By all means go to Geneva and try to convince them that they should reduce their air forces, but, if you cannot make them reduce theirs, we ought at least to insist upon equality with them. It is preposterous that we should go on for ever in the position of being the fifth Power. I believe equality is vital to us and is desired by the country. The right hon. Gentleman knows that we could have put ourselves in that position by using only a third of the increase on the other two Services. That is a very serious thing for the Government to consider.

[Lieut.-Colonel Moore-Brabazon.]

I end on a note which I have repeatedly made year after year on these Estimates, that is, that the money that we are spending upon the Air, upon the Navy and upon the Army is only one thing, and that is the defence of the country; and yet year after year the great Departments will not allow the Government or the House of Commons to look at this as one subject. Again, this year I ask the House to notice that it was only by luck that we were allowed to see the Estimates of one Department before we were called to approve those of another. I do not come here to plead for a Ministry of Imperial Defence. That is, perhaps, going too far, but I think the House of Commons has a right to know to what it is committed from the point of view of expenditure on the safety of the Realm. That we should be allowed to debate the relative expenditure on one Service and another on some Vote is absolutely essential. I hope that another year we shall have plenty of time to consider the three Votes, from the point of money, together, and then we shall be able to show how one Service might be curtailed at the expense of another and vice versa, because it is only along those lines that we can see that we are getting true economy and an efficient defence of the country.

6.52 p.m.

Mr. E. WILLIAMS: I cannot claim to possess any expert or technical knowledge about aviation, whether civil or military, but I certainly think that our point of view ought to be advanced. If I am to accept most of the speeches that have been made, it would appear that humanity is doomed and damned and that, if science and technique advance during the next decade at anything like the same rate of progress that they have advanced during past years, we are in fact faced with mutual annihilation.

The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Epping (Mr. Churchill) delivered one of the most jingo speeches that I have ever heard since I have been in the House. He believes that it is only possible for this nation to save itself by continually increasing the number of aeroplanes, and I presume seaplanes, until we obtain a strength which will be substantially greater than that of any other nation. He asks that we should face up to realities. I ask hon. Members to reflect upon the position in Germany. Germany was considered to have been definitely beaten in the Great War, and the right hon. Gentleman endeavoured to place certain penalties upon her by way of reparations. To-day she is in the throes of a revolution. At this very moment it would seem that the Corridor which was founded by the Versailles Treaty is likely to be the cause of another war. Hon. Members are advancing the case for an increase in expenditure upon civil aviation in order that it may be used for military purposes as a protection against Germany, which was supposed to be destroyed as a military nation. When can we reach anything like the end of the tether if by mere circumlocution one is to go from one war to another?

The Lord President of the Council, I think, was positively wrong when he spoke of the consequences that would occur if another war broke out, and the dire effect that aviation would have upon the population. He was wrong when he said that the future depended upon young men. After the speeches that I have heard to-day, I am convinced that the old men are the enemies of human society. Every old man who has spoken has advocated an increase in armaments and in the weapons that the young men will be obliged to use in the next war. The old men are really a serious danger to civilisation and society, and not the young men. I endeavoured to ask myself, when listening to the Debate, why these conflicts are likely to arise which will cause the next war? I do not believe that the populations of the various countries desire war at all. If war takes place, it will probably be because there is definite economic conflict between one nation and another. I can see the possibility of civil aviation being utilised for military purposes. I can see Imperial Airways being utilised as a means not only of defence but also of offence by this nation, but at bottom the cause of the conflict will be commercial and economic. Consequently, I can see no possibility of abolishing war until we take control of the manufacture of armaments and abolish the conflicts of interest which obtain as between one nation and another.

I do not wish to impute anything like dishonourable motives. I should not like to impute, for instance, that hon. Members are desirous of maintaining the Army in order that their sons may obtain a profession, or that they are desirous of maintaining these Services not so much to defend the country against an aggressor as to provide an occupation so that their sons may become the rulers of the working classes and keep them in their place. I want to assume that they are quite honest about this matter; that they would like to abolish war; that they look upon war as a danger, and that they are prepared to make their contribution, if possible, towards that end. On the other hand, if I have to do that, I have to analyse the contributions which have been made. From the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Sparkbrook (Mr. Amery) we have had nothing with which I can agree except one thing, that is, his condemnation of the Government for their unfitness to produce a policy for dealing with civil aviation, and for the political circumstances in which we are placed. Apart from that statement, not one word was uttered by him to indicate how it is possible to eliminate the danger of war breaking out. For instance, there is the Locarno Pact, with which the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Epping had much to do.

If, as now seems very likely, trouble arises in Poland, in which there is a substantial proportion of French capital invested, and if along that Corridor trouble is produced, France will be inevitably inveigled into that struggle, purely on economic grounds. Because we are signatories to the Locarno Pact, we will at once be drawn in in support of France. Nothing has been said in this Debate by hon. Members to place before the Government plans to obviate what seems very imminent at this moment, if we accept what is said in the Press of this country. Surely the suggestion, advanced from these benches, of international control should be considerable. There is, I think, sufficient intelligence in this country—a sufficient number of educationists and scientists, as well as practical, broad-minded men, who would willingly give of their service to this nation—and I believe that obtains in most nations—to propound a plan which would obviate another war. I believe that there are persons in this country sufficiently humanitarian to realise the enormous consequences which will befall this nation if another war breaks out.

Yet there is nothing coming from right hon. Members at all, except jingo speeches. They say we must increase this new defence arm. It is known, as a positive fact, that it is not a defence arm at all, but an arm of attack. At a moment when something catastrophic takes place between the nations, that which is seemingly defensive becomes offensive. Certainly anything that can be done to destroy the moral of another nation will be one of the first phases of tactics considered by this nation, as it would likewise be considered by any other. The bombing of the City of London and our industrial centres, the bombing of Paris—these things are considered essential for military purposes to destroy the moral of the people. It is not that they desire to slay innocent people as such, but it will be done to produce effect upon those they consider their dire enemies. I certainly could not agree to a substantial proportion of the remarks advanced by hon. Members. They look upon war as being absolutely inevitable. They say that we must have a force at least comparable with one of the greatest forces in the world. They consider that the only possible means by which we can escape being annihilated in this country. It would seem to me that we are not really living many stages above savagery.

With science and technique at our disposal, and even this greatest and most revolutionary of things, aviation, which is abolishing boundaries and making humanity a fact, we still go back into the depths of barbarism and preach an increase of all weapons of destruction. That means in the ultimate the annihilation of the human race. I wish that hon. Members would put forward some proposals which would make us face realities as we see them to-day. Germany, apparently militaristically annihilated, is to-day in the throes of a revolution. We have to be prepared, using civil aviation, to place ourselves on equality with France. This, apparently, has got to go on until we get right back into savagery. As all national barriers have been annihilated by aviation, aviation ought to become a matter of international control. If national barriers do not prevent aviation crossing the world, obviously it is of itself, in factual truth, an international weapon, and it ought to come under international control. It ought to be used as an international weapon for policing the world, and not for defensive, which can be twisted into offensive, purposes that may be used to annihilate humanity.

[Mr. Williams.]

7.8 p.m.

Mr. WHITESIDE: Having addressed a meeting earlier in the afternoon, I have not been able to listen to all the speeches which have been made. I would, therefore, crave the indulgence of the House should I inadvertently use any of the arguments already put forward in discussing these Estimates. In discussing these Estimates we should bear uppermost in our minds the fact that they are of a dual character. They represent a morganatic marriage between military and civil aviation—a union which, in my view, should never have taken place. It was, perhaps, a little unfortunate that flying first came into prominence during the War. Flight as a means of reconnoitring the enemy's position became of paramount importance. Since the War a new Ministry, surrounded by all the paraphernalia and red tape of a Government Department, has become part and parcel of the organisation of most European Powers. As a result, civil aviation has been controlled and hemmed in by a military oligarchy. The effect has been two-fold. The public regard aviation almost entirely from the military aspect and commercial aviation has been retarded.

The extent to which this military psychology has permeated the minds of the public is shown by the sustained, almost hysterical, demands that aviation should be controlled by the League of Nations. In my view, any man in his right senses must wish the League of Nations well. But we, who are Members of this House, are responsible for the safety not only of our own nationals, but of our brethren throughout the Empire. It is a remarkable fact that those who vaunt themselves as the champions of peace make exactly the same speeches, whatever the size of these Estimates may be. If the House will permit me to say so, I think that those who make these criticisms would be doing a far greater service to this country and to the world if they would state outright whether they believe in the total disarmament of this country, irrespective of what other nations may do, or state categorically the level of armaments they consider it necessary for us to bear.

During the last year certain suggestions have been made with regard to the control of aviation. They fall under three heads. The first is the total abolition of all military aircraft. The second is the total abolition of all national military aircraft, and the substitution of a League air force. The third is the control of civil aviation, and the formation of international air lines. Let us briefly examine these suggestions. As long as military aircraft are in existence, there is no danger from civilian machines. Abolish military aircraft and every civilian machine, no matter how inoffensive, becomes a potential danger. Such a suggestion, therefore, if carried out, would not decrease the risk of aerial bombardment, but increase the dangers a thousand-fold.

The formation of a League air arm is impracticable. The machines of such an air force would have to be made in some country, or countries, and, under modern conditions of production, those nations could, if they should so wish, produce an almost unlimited number of similar machines in a very short space of time. The air arm of the League would have to possess a general staff. That staff would be composed of the nationals of some country, because the League of Nations possesses no corporate spirit. The duty of that staff would be to prepare plans to meet every eventuality. Every one of these plans would be known in advance, and would be futile. I read in the "Evening News" of 7th March:

> "Britain had accepted the French plan for the creation of an international air police, to come into being simultaneously with the abolition of military and naval aviation. The Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs specified, however, that each country's contingent in such a police force should be maintained in its own territory, instead of in some neutral country."

What in the name of all that is commonsense is the difference between that police force and our present Royal Air Force? Are we to suppose that the present Air Minister, rechristened by the League of Nations Air Chief Constable, will, if this country is declared by a majority of the League, through the casting vote of Czechoslovakia, to be in the wrong, set out to bomb his own house in Park Lane? Are we to suppose that if the League of Nations find it necessary in the future to send a punitive aerial expedition against this country, our own air police force will join in the slaughter? Or will they oppose it? The Prime Minister can come back from Geneva and tell such tales to the marines or to the League of Nations Union, but he cannot expect us in the Mother of Parliaments of an Imperial Empire to accept such suggestions with enthusiasm. Are we to continue to pay thousands of pounds for the upkeep of the League when we have 3,000,000 starving people on the dole in order that our Ministers shall come back to this country and talk such utter nonsense? I beg, I entreat those who are striving for world peace, those statesmen who are being backed up by the whole of the country, to be realists as well as idealists. We are living in a concrete world filled with many horrors but crowned with beauty, and not in a mythical land of make-believe.

But is the Air arm a danger to civilisation? War is resorted to by one nation in order to compel another country to submit to terms which the former considers desirable. It is resorted to by force of arms. Those forces are controlled by a central authority. Destroy that central authority and your forces will have no cohesion; peace must follow. It is the very object of aerial attack to destroy the enemy's headquarters and so end the war. The last War dragged on for four and a half years. It was ended not by force of arms, but by the slow premeditated starvation of a great people. It affected every man, woman and child in the enemy Powers, and as a result of under-nourishment and nervous exhaustion it will affect the lives of many yet unborn. For four and a half years none knew from one moment to another whether they were going to be attacked. For four and a half years nobody knew whether their loved ones were dead, alive or mutilated. War does not affect those it kills. Death is but the passing from one sphere to another in Eternity. The curse, the awfulness of war is that it destroys the soul, the manhood of the living. I say in all sincerity I would rather see a great city like London totally annihilated by an aerial attack for the war to end, than that 42,000,000 of our people should be compelled to pass through years of living hell. The formation of an international air arm is practicable, but what possible security that could be is beyond my comprehension, because in the event of war every one of the machines would be confiscated by the Government of the country in which it was housed.

As for the control of Civil Aviation, the League might just as well attempt to control the production, design, buying and selling of motor cars or matches. Nor is any form of limitation or quota possible. Upon what is a quota to be based? Is it to be upon area, the number of your population, your needs, or the enterprise of the individual people in the country? I can imagine such a quota being put into practice. One of my friends goes into Henly's and says that he wants to buy an aeroplane. The saleman puts on a mournful expression and says, "I am very sorry, Sir, we have already sold up to our quota, but we saw Mr. Smith flying yesterday, and we think that he will shortly crash and kill himself, and when he is dead and his machine is destroyed we shall be very pleased to sell you another one in substitution."

I will now turn to the Estimates which are before us. They are the result of a compromise between the Treasury, the Foreign Office, the Admiralty, the War Office, the Air Ministry and the Cabinet Committee of Imperial Defence. The ratio between the Army and the Air Force, and between the Navy and the Air Force is roughly two to one and three to one respectively. Is the Navy worth three times the Air Force? The Navy has guaranteed our food supplies in the past, but can the Navy to-day protect London, Karachi, Singapore, Malta, Calcutta or any other of our great cities from devastation from the air? What is the use of guaranteeing the food supplies of a great city if your population has been wiped out? Dead men do not eat. It is however impossible to wipe out a great city by aerial attack, and those vociferous pacifists who go about the country and tell people that sort of thing do not know what they are talking about. The air arm is, however, the most potent of the three Services. I believe that a great many of the duties at present undertaken by the Army and the Navy can just as efficiently, and far more cheaply, be undertaken by the Air Force. Surely the trouble in Cyprus and in other parts of the world has demonstrated that fact amply. It is often assumed by some hon. Members that the possession of arms makes for war. I do not believe it. Can any hon. Member of this House from the smooth, suave, cultured Member for Oxford University to the intellectual, pertinent, pugnacious Member for Epping (Mr. Churchill) seriously get up and say, because we have a highly efficient Air Force and Germany has no Air Force at all, that we wish to attack the Germans; or because France has a large Army and we have a comparatively small Army, that the French wish to fight us? It is not true. It is not armaments which make for war; it is the fear of war which causes the anxiety for armaments. I, personally, do not believe that armaments will give us any security in the future. They merely provide employment.

[Mr. Whiteside.]

When another war comes the danger will not be from explosives from aerial attacks. The danger will come from germs and gases. I do not believe that war will even be declared. When one nation wishes to wipe out another nation it will infect rats with anthrax and plague and let them loose, or it will send through the parcel post germs so potent that when the packet is opened that nation will be completely wiped out. That is the danger to civilisation, and no peace pact, convention or any other power in the world can prevent it. I believe that if men and women are not prepared to turn and bow before a wisdom greater than the wisdom of this world, civilisation will inevitably be wiped out. That is the answer which youth gives to the speech of the Lord President of the Council. The danger to world civilisation to-day, as I see it, comes from that great country Russia, whose leaders openly deny the existence of God and look upon Christianity as an idle superstition. But I believe that man's conquest of the air is one of the greatest tangible advances towards the securing of world peace. What greater power for peace is there than that of enabling men of all nations and races to get together and know and understand one another?

That brings me to the second part of the Estimates, that dealing with Civil Aviation. During the last few months a considerable agitation has been got up to free civil aviation from Air Ministry control. I do not believe that the criticisms are altogther justified. The Air Ministry has been the friend of civil aviation, and I do not believe that civil aviation would have progressed as it has progressed had it not been for the friendly co-operation of the Air Ministry. On the other hand, I think the time has now come when that grip might be relaxed. I refer to the A.I.D. inspection. I would not, on purely psychological grounds, suggest that the regulations governing public service aeroplanes should be loosened, but I can see no reason why constructors in approved firms should not now be permitted to design and construct light aeroplanes of a seating capacity of five or under without any Air Ministry control. The approved firms have a reputation to maintain, and such a suggestion, if coupled with compulsory third party insurance, would not, in my view, lead to any diminution of the factor of safety.

So far as I can see, the Air Ministry are confronted with one of two alternatives in this matter. Either they assume that the experts of the Air Ministry know more about stresses and design than the industry itself, or else those experts are relying on data obtained from the industry. But, as the science of aerodynamics is not fully known, they are of necessity examining new proposals on data which is out of date, and therefore retarding development. Civil aviation is fighting an uphill battle. It has to contend with this appalling military psychology. The papers are filled with pictures of new interceptor fighters. The Prime Minister, a pacifist, when he travels, charters a military machine. The greatest aerial pageant in the world—Hendon—is entirely military. The long distance and speed records are held by the Royal Air Force in co-operation with firms producing military machines. It is no small wonder then that ignorant men are alarmed at the prospects of future flying.

I mentioned previously that man's conquest of the air was a tremendous power for peace. I will now substantiate that statement. The air is truly international. The machines themselves are often of a composite character. There is the German Klemm fitted with a British Cirrus or Pobjoy engine. You have the Dutch Fokker flying with an American Pratt Witney Wasp engine, all purely a matter of efficiency. Pilots are international in outlook. They recognise no frontiers or barriers. It is the land folk, with their Governments, who compel us to carry passports, carnets, triptiques and a multitude of other inter-governmental red tape. Why cannot we be allowed free to fly where and whence we will? The pilot's job in life is to bring men together.

Let me give one further illustration to make my point. One hundred years ago, before the industrial revolution, each county in England endeavoured to make itself self-supporting. Then came the industrial revolution; men poured from the country into the towns, and the country, as a result, suffered. Later railways were invented and as a direct result business men carried out their business in the cities and had their homes in the country. England became one economic whole, and the whole prospered. To-day, the world is suffering from a similar upheaval. Nations have taken the place of the counties. Is it impossible to conceive that this new means of transport, the air, will not unite first the Empire and then the world into one economic whole in exactly the same way as the railways have united individual nations?

The Government are striving to cure the unemployment problem. I represent a constituency in the North. Although I believe there will be a revival in the iron and coal trade I do not believe that the heavy industries will ever again employ the same number of people as they have done in the past. The North must look for a new industry. Here is a new industry. It is no use going out trying to recapture lost markets. You must cut new virgin ground. The Empire has large tracts of barren land. There are such tracts in Canada and Australia, and they are waiting to be exploited. They will never be exploited until adequate means of transport are provided. Canada possesses two aircraft manufacturing firms, with four competing American firms. Australia has only two aircraft manufacturing firms. What a market for expansion is waiting ready to be exploited. Here is our opportunity. Years ago, Disraeli bought up the shares of the Suez Canal and his vision has since brought tremendous wealth to this country. What we want to-day is men with similar vision, who will exploit the air.

If I have proved my case and the air is a force for peace and not a peril for war, I humbly submit certain suggestions to the Government. Let the President of the Board of Trade when he enters into new agreements with foreign countries make sure that a clause is inserted saying that in future this nation may be allowed the freedom of the air over those countries. It is impossible to build up great international and imperial air lines if your concessions are liable to be cancelled at a moment's notice. We must have concessions for a period of 30 years. During those discussions I would suggest that the President of the Board of Trade enters into an arrangement with foreign countries with regard to the limitation and the final abolition of subsidies for civil aviation. Sooner or later civil aviation must fly on a proper economic basis, and the sooner the better. I would submit to the Minister of Health that in future when he sanctions any town and country planning Bill he will see that in that Bill adequate proposals are made for the provision of future aerodromes. It is no use having aerodromes which are miles from the centre of the cities. I would suggest to the Secretary for the Department of Overseas Trade that he should instruct his Consuls in future to push British machines. The Consuls of foreign countries are nothing more nor less than glorified salesmen, and I would suggest that our Consuls be the same.

The Minister who can do more than any other is the Postmaster-General. The Postmaster-General is a man of enterprise. He, in co-operation with his Department, has produced two types of telephones, which sometimes work. The Post Office is to-day going out on a great selling drive, and the Postmaster-General, with gigantic courage, has given instructions that his officers should paint those telephones red, blue, old gold and silver. Having done so, he comes down to this House, his face beaming with Pickwickian smiles, expressing: "What a good boy am I!" But there his enterprise stops. Does the Postmaster-General select slow cargo boats to carry the mail at a very low rate? No. He pays thousands of pounds to buy cargo space in fast ocean liners, tearing through the water at perhaps 20 knots, but he does not charge the public additional postage for that concession. He pays for it himself. But when it comes to the air mail he will not give one penny piece to Imperial Airways to carry the air mail at 150 miles an hour.

[Mr. Whiteside.]

If I should suggest to the House that in future when sending a letter from London to Nether Stowey one should be compelled to put a direction on the top of the envelope to show how that letter was to be carried, the House would consign me to Bedlam, but that is exactly what the Postmaster-General expects in regard to the air mail. If any hon. Member will go to the Post Office in the lobby and wishes to post a letter to Australia he will write on the envelope: "Australia Air Mail." But that does not mean that his letter will be carried by air mail to Australia. He will be charged 4d. extra, but his letter will go out to Australia by the normal land and sea routes and will be carried by internal air mail in Australia. If you want to send a letter to Australia by air you have to put a direction on the top of the envelope: "India Air Mail, London to Karachi, Internal Air Mail, Australia." You will be charged a further 7d. But if you want to send a letter out to Australia quickly you will not send it by British post at all. You will post your letter to Amsterdam and have it carried by the Dutch line KLM to Sumatra. For two and a-half years the Dutch have been running a regular air mail and passenger service to Sumatra in only one day outside our record to Australia. What is the Postmaster-General going to do about that?

In order to stimulate postage within the Empire the Postmaster-General charges one flat rate for all letters in the Empire. It costs no more to send a letter to Australia than to send a letter from S.W.1 to S.W.2. The procedure of the Post Office is to utilise the profit on one service to defray the loss which they make on another service, but so far as the air mail is concerned every stage of the service has to pay for itself. In order to stimulate postage within the Empire the Postmaster-General charges 1½d. Distance is of no matter. If you want to send a letter to a foreign country, say, France, he will charge you 2½d., but so far as the air mail is concerned he completely reverses his policy. He will charge you 4d. to carry a one-ounce letter to France and 2s. to carry it to South Africa, one of our own Dominions. I would ask the Postmaster-General to state the reasons for this complete volte face so far as the air mail is concerned.

I would make a very humble suggestion to the Postmaster-General. If he wishes to earn a public funeral from a grateful nation he should follow in the footsteps of his great predecessor, Rowland Hill. Rowland Hill, in spite of every opposition, decided to reduce the cost of postage and to carry the mail by the then fastest known means of transport. Let the Postmaster-General do exactly the same. Let him charge a flat rate of 2d., 3d. or 4d., and send every letter to the East by air mail. If he will do that he will capture for this country the entire air mail to the East for the whole of Europe and bring unbounded prosperity to his Department. There I will leave the matter. If the Postmaster-General will not give adequate reasons for this extraordinary discrimination against our own Empire and against the air mail services, I shall be compelled to pursue this subject further across the Floor of the House, in language enlivened with a plethora of adjectives. I will not detain the House longer. The Prime Minister has asked for suggestions with regard to unemployment, and I would submit the proposals to him which I have just made. The country to-day is longing to hear more about the air. A generation is growing up to whom the air is no more an unnatural phenomena than the motor car. They have never known a world without aeroplanes, and they are longing to know more about them. I would suggest that the Air Ministry, in co-operation with the air industry, should choose some man of character, personality, courage and enterprise to go round this country and Canada and Australia and explain to the people the truth about the air, so that when the air comes into its own, they will be prepared to travel by air from one end of the earth to the other, so that men of all nations and races will be able to get together and understand each other; for in the hands of knowledge and understanding lies the future of the peace of the world.

7.46 p.m.

Mr. McKEAG: I do not profess to be an expert on air services, and therefore I do not propose to follow the last speaker through the labyrinthine pathways which he has so exhaustively and elaborately explored. Nor do I propose to follow the general trend of the Debate this evening, which has been largely concentrated on a contemplation of what would be the position of our aircraft in the next war, which all parties seem to be agreed is becoming more and more imminent, except to say that it is indeed a most tragic and lamentable thing that in this year of grace 1933 the British House of Commons should be accepting the probability of another world conflagration in the near future with such remarkable equanimity.

I only want very briefly to examine one aspect of the Estimates and to mention two points in connection with them. That aspect is the subsidy to Imperial Airways, Limited, amounting, I believe, to a gross sum of over £500,000 per annum. That is a very large subsidy, and I do not know what measure of control the Government exercise with regard to this company. Indeed, I do not know whether any control at all is exercised. Whatever may be the position in this regard, however, I submit—and I think it will be conceded by the House—that where such a large amount of the taxpayers' money is given to a private undertaking by way of subsidy, steps should at least be taken to ensure that that undertaking is not operated in a wasteful or profligate manner.

There is, I believe, some disquiet in certain quarters as to whether this subsidy is being used by Imperial Airways to the best possible advantage, and I would like to ask the Under-Secretary of State if he will take steps to satisfy himself that every effort is made by Imperial Airways, Limited, to eliminate extravagance and waste. A subsidised concern is very apt to become overridden with unnecessary officials, and if the Under-Secretary of State will make investigations he will probably find that the number of those employed by Imperial Airways in managerial and official capacities is out of all proportion to the number of men employed on purely productive work. I think the House is entitled to ask that real vigilance should be exercised by the Government in this matter, having regard to the very large sum of over £500,000 per annum which is paid to that company by way of subsidy.

I would like next to ask the Under-Secretary of State if he is satisfied that proper treatment is being meted out to the rank and file of this company's British staff in Egypt and elsewhere. I ask that question because I understand—and here let me say that I am not entirely without information—that the English members of the rank and file of this company in Egypt are worked in such a way that they are contemptuously referred to by the natives as the white wogs of Egypt. It may be in the recollection of some Members of the House that the term "wog" in Egypt means the lowest type of native slave. Obviously, this sort of thing can only be very damaging indeed to our prestige in Egypt, and here again I would ask the Government to exercise real vigilance. Clearly, in any concern where there are too many bosses it is inevitable that there should be inefficiency and hardship created to the rank and file. I have endeavoured to make these two points in very moderated terms, but I ask that the Under-Secretary of State should take notice and make such investigations as will satisfy him, on the one hand, that not only are there not extravagance and waste, but that there is proper treatment meted out to the rank and file of the British staff of this company in Egypt and elsewhere.

7.53 p.m.

Rear-Admiral SUETER: I should like, first, to congratulate the Under-Secretary of State for Air on the able way in which he has put forward these Estimates. We always take great interest in him, because he is a practical airman, and I think he handles air matters very well indeed. But this year I am profoundly disappointed with him and with the Noble Lord the Secretary of State for Air, because they have let the older Services get away with too much of the swag or with what the right hon. Member for Carnarvon Boroughs (Mr. Lloyd George) used to call too much of the loot. This year they have let the Navy get away with £3,000,000 extra and the Army with £1,500,000 extra, while the Air Service is reduced, according to the figures given us by the Under-Secretary of State, by some £340,000. They have stopped a school of flying instruction and reduced the number of personnel by some 1,000 men.

[Rear-Admiral Sueter.]

When we consider all these defence problems, we must bear in mind that before the War the Navy and the Army were responsible for the defence of this country and the Empire, but during and since the War the Air Force has come into being, and one naturally asks oneself, Can the Navy prevent an aerial bombardment of London; can the Army prevent an aerial bombardment of our great manufacturing centres; can the Army and Navy prevent an aerial bombardment of our dockyards or even our homes? Surely home defence should be our first consideration. We could not carry on a war if our great cities, our manufacturing towns, our dockyards, and our homes were being bombed; and if it is accepted that home defence should be our first consideration, then the air becomes our first line of defence.

If hon. Members look at these Estimates, they will find that £108,000,000 is devoted to defence purposes. The Navy gets £53,000,000, the Army nearly £38,000,000, and the Air £17,500,000; that is to say, one-sixth of the total amount of money allowed for defence purposes is for the Air. The Navy and the Army cannot protect us in any way from aerial bombardment, and I submit that it is quite wrong that our homes should be open to bombardment from the air without any adequate protection. There is something wrong with these Estimates, that the air should get only one-sixth of the total amount, that we are going to vote £108,000,000 in this House, and we have not even our homes protected. I submit to every Member of this House that there is something wrong in the framing of these Estimates, and that is why many Members join with me in asking that there should be an unbiased committee set up to go into the whole problem of defence. I am certain that if that were done, and they took the air on its merits, they would see that the air got more than one-sixth of the total amount allowed for defence. I am very disappointed indeed that the Under-Secretary of State and the Noble Lord the Secretary of State for Air have not dug their feet in and got more money this year for the air.

May I approach this problem from a different angle? During the War we lost some 6,500,000 tons of shipping due to the German submarines, and on several days in the Mediterranean in 1915 we lost £2,000,000 worth of shipping a day. Suppose we had had our ships open to air attack as well as to submarine attack. We had to feed London by ships going up the Channel, and we could only feed London through its own port. We had these ships going up the Channel, and if hon. Members will look at the chart of our foodships and our trading ships that were sunk by submarines, they will see them all in the approaches to the Channel. If we had had hostile aircraft as well bombing those ships, we should have been in a very bad way in the War. At one time we had only 10 days' provisions in this country, and if we had had air attack as well as submarine attack, if we had had aircraft dropping bombs and locomotive torpedoes on our food ships, we should have starved in this country.

Therefore, I would say to the pacifists that what we are out to do is to try to protect their food coming up Channel, and I submit that at least we ought to have a one-Power standard in the air. Nobody can say what is going to happen in Europe. This week-end we were deluged in all the papers with most alarming statements about the Polish corridor, and even in the "Daily Herald" yesterday I saw that war was going to come in Europe in a very short time. I think it is prudent for us that we should have at least a one-Power standard in the air for that reason alone, because we never know that we shall not have to hold the balance in Europe.

We hear a great deal in these Debates about doing away with naval and military aircraft and having an international air force at Geneva under the League of Nations. Would that be in the country's interests? I submit that it would not. The League of Nations at the moment cannot define what an aggressor State is, and one of the delegates at Geneva said, "You cannot define what an aggressor State is, so you had better bomb both sides from the air." It would be against our interests to have a League of Nations military air force. Suppose we had serving in it some of our own nationals. Would they be called upon to bomb Portsmouth, and if they refused, would they be shot for refusing to do their duty? The whole thing is impossible. Also if we did away with the naval and military air forces and had a League of Nations air force, we would abrogate our sovereign rights, and I do not think there is anyone in the House who would agree to give them up.

Mr. G. MACDONALD: Certainly I would.

Rear-Admiral SUETER: We cannot give up our sovereign rights. It would be perfectly suicidal for us to do so. We are told that we should give up our naval and military air force and internationalise civil aviation. What would that mean? It would simply mean that the civil machine would tend towards military design. You could see that very easily last year at the French Aero Exhibition. We exhibited four straightforward military machines, but the French had many exhibits of civil machines which were all strengthened to take bomb rackets and to take guns. Exactly the same thing happens in Germany. There the machines swing towards a military design. It is said, "Oh, but you will have international civil aviation, and pilots would not learn to drob bombs; they would know nothing about it." But the knowledge of bomb sights and racks is in the nations of the world, and they would soon fit up machines for the dropping of bombs. Before the War we did not have any sights at all, and we had to drop bombs by hand.

It is nonsense to say that civil machines cannot be turned into military machines very quickly. The United States delegate at Geneva said that they had 11,000 machines, and that only 74 were of any military use. I have never heard such nonsense talked since I have had anything to do with the Air Service. During the War I fitted up school machines with bombs, and we sent four aerodrome machines to Friederichshafn, and my gallant naval service men destroyed one Zeppelin and part of a building there. It is idle for people to say that these machines cannot be easily converted to military use. Of course they can. It is really rather ridiculous to talk about internationalising civil aviation. The only way that you can stop bombing from the air is to do away with the whole of naval and military aircraft and all civil machines. That is impossible, for you cannot put the clock back 25 years. People say, "It is inhuman to drop bombs." There is no difference between a bomb from an aeroplane and a six-inch shell from a ship. It is not considered inhuman to fire a shell from a ship.

Air warfare is very humane indeed. Look at what is happening in Jehol. There, instead of the war going on for a long period, the Japanese are driving the Chinese before them with aeroplanes that drop bombs, and with machine guns. They are driving the Chinese ahead of them, and they will get a better control in Jehol and Manchuria than it has had for the last 50 or 60 years. The Japanese are a civilising force and will do a great good in the Far East. If the war had gone on for a long time without military control in the air, thousands and thousands more lives would have been lost. It is much more humane to have aircraft for keeping proper control than it is to have them for restoring peace when peace is broken. Would the internationalisation of civil aviation help us in any way with our civil machines in this country? I submit that it would not. We lead the world in design of machines. We have the finest designers and constructors and engine builders. If they were hampered by international control it might stop development. We have got the three great records in this country, the altitude record, the long distance record and the speed record, and we do not want any interference with our civil aviation.

If we look at the chart we see what a wonderful position we are in for developing great air routes. We have already developed one from this country to Egypt and Africa. We are developing one to Karachi and India, and it is hoped to extend it down to Australia, and thence on to New Zealand, and to have a branch up to China. But I think the Air Ministry ought to allow more money for the development of these great air routes. What has been done to help the development of the Atlantic air routes? It is most important that this country should lead the way in developing these great air routes, which do a tremendous lot for civilisation. I was glad to hear the Under-Secretary say what good they were doing in developing the air lines and linking up the lines in Australia and Canada and Africa. These lines bring people down from up country to the centres where men and women live, and they are doing a wonderful lot of good work in opening up distant trading.

[Rear-Admiral Sueter.]

To allow something under £500,000 for civil aviation is not enough. The Ministry ought to send for Sir Eric Geddes, the able chairman of Imperial Airways, and say to him, "You can have a million to develop these great air lines." He told us in Committee upstairs that air travel is becoming so safe that an air accident insurance policy can now be obtained at exactly the same rate as a similar policy for travel by liner or train. That is a great feather in the cap of Imperial Airways. I think the Under-Secretary ought to encourage Imperial Airways more than he does. I ask the Under-Secretary to urge the Prime Minister to get back to the air policy that was laid down by the Lord President of the Council when he was Prime Minister in 1923. The right hon. Gentleman then promised us a one-Power air standard, and said that our squadrons for home defence would be 52. But after 10 years' effort there are only 42 squadrons. I ask the Under-Secretary to press the Government to carry out the policy laid down by the Lord President. If we had that and more help for civil aviation, I believe that the whole country would benefit.

8.9 p.m.

Mr. EVERARD: I would like to say how completely I am in agreement with the words which have fallen from the hon. and gallant Member for Hertford (Rear-Admiral Sueter). As he stated, we have in this country to-day the three records which really count in the air, and I am sure that the Under-Secretary will congratulate the Air Force and those who are responsible for the manufacture of the engines and machines on the possession of those three records, which are the only records worth holding in the air. I want to state reasons why in my opinion more money should have been expended on the Air Force for the defence of this country and of the Empire. During the last year I have been privileged to travel by air through Europe several times, and to parts of the Empire where the Air Force is in operation, and I must honestly say, without wishing in any way to exaggerate, that I have been amazed at the extension, in practically all the European countries through which I passed, of their air forces and of their hangars and of other requirements for military aviation.

The people of this country would do well to realise that we are no longer an island Power, that the advent of the petrol engine in an aeroplane has done away altogether with our security as an island. From the point of aerial attack there is no difference whether there is 20 miles of channel between this country and the Continent, or whether there is not. There are aeroplanes capable of flying practically non-stop from Great Britain to the Cape. Of course, the whole complexion of the defence of this country has been altered by the advent of the petrol engine. For that reason I submit that there should be a redistribution of the amount of money which this country provides for defence between the three great fighting Services. I am convinced that the Air Force, being a new and young Service, does not get that credit and that authority in the defence of this country which it rightly ought to have with the Committee of Imperial Defence. At school the older boys can often get the best of the younger ones. It may not be that the older boys are better in any way than the younger.

I suggest that it is of vital importance that we take steps in this House to put before the Government our sincere belief that this matter should be considered with a view to an alteration of the allocation of money between the three great Fighting Services. I do not think I am over-estimating the opinion of this country, when I say that the bulk of the people are bitterly disappointed with what the League of Nations has been able to achieve. For that reason, because of what we have seen in the recent dispute between China and Japan, and because we know in our hearts that if there is aggression between one great country and another, those countries are going to fight whether there is a League of Nations or not, this matter must have our urgent attention. It is of vital importance that every person in this country should consider how best we may be enabled to protect ourselves and those people who look to us for protection.

I would use the same argument as the Government used over the tariff question. If we had a one-Power standard, that is to say an Air Force equal to the Air Force of any other great Power in the world, there would be far more likelihood of seeing a reduction of air armaments in other nations than there is while we remain the fifth Power. When the Government got the tariff, they said: "We are going to use the tariff as a bargaining power." While we had no tariff other nations perpetually raised their tariffs, but as soon as we protected ourselves with a tariff other nations came along and said: "Let us come to some agreement for a reduction all round." The same argument holds good in the air. While we are content to remain the fifth Power in the air other countries with larger air forces will say: "Why need we bother? We have a stronger air force than the British Empire, and we can take no notice of the programme put forward for a reduction in air forces." But as soon as we say that we intend to have an air force equal to that of any other country we shall be able to go to Geneva and say that unless other countries reduce their air forces we must, for the protection of our country and the outlying parts of the Empire, build an air force equal to those of other countries. The result, in my opinion, would be a general reduction of air forces throughout the world. It is a good argument and certainly more likely to carry out a reduction in air forces than anything the Government have put forward.

One word on the subject of civil aviation. It is quite clear that if you are going to reduce seriously the small number of fighting aircraft of the countries of the world the large air liners will be of great importance. It is exactly the same thing as when you reduce the forces of a country, as in the case of, Germany you see enormous numbers of so-called police on duty, and, if you do away with the ships of a navy, you see a merchant service able to take their place. So it is with the air force. But it has a peculiar difficulty for us. If you examine the numbers of large liners of the larger countries we have 33, Germany 186, and France 270. If we deplete our fighting aircraft seriously we are going to hand over air power in the proportion of those figures. Moreover, the British Empire is world wide, and some of our liners may be in one part of the world and some in another. All the great European countries have their air services to a large extent in their own country. France, Germany and Italy would always command a larger number of air liners than it would ever be possible for Great Britain to command at any one time, and, therefore, as far as the British Empire is concerned, it is more than ever important that we should not agree to any proposal which even if it gave us equality, would mean that our units because they were distributed over the whole world would be unable to mobilise in a short time while other countries would have the whole of their resources available for an immediate attack upon this country.

When I was in Transjordan and visiting the Air Force there, I was struck with the precautions which are taken, so far as the Air Force is concerned, for punitive expeditions against rebelling tribes. Reference has already been made to the enormous saving in expense which the Air Force in these districts has been able to make, but I put this point of view to the House. Very seldom, indeed not at all during the last year, has bombing taken place for punitive purposes. Pamphlets are dropped in every case, and very often a loud speaker is used to give warning to the tribesmen that if they do not behave themselves aircraft will take action against them, and when action is taken it is only by means of a machine gun, or two machine guns, mounted on aeroplanes to scatter the rebels who are creating the disturbance. May I say this to the Under-Secretary, that some of his armoured cars in Transjordan, which I understand have been through many campaigns, including the Russian campaign, were getting a little shabby and might possibly be replaced by some of a newer type.

In regard to the civil side of aviation the hon. Member for East Wolverhampton (Mr. Mander) asked some questions about Imperial Airways. He should know, as I think the House generally knows, that we pay less than almost any other country in subsidies to civil air lines, and anyone who has travelled in one of the new Hannibal type of Handley-Page aeroplanes which are used by Imperial Airways will agree that there is nothing comparable with them in the world for comfort, silence, keeping time and for general efficiency. Whatever money we may spend, and it is a large sum, £600,000, on the development of these air routes is money well spent, and it is now beginning to give a reward. When I was in Cairo the officials of Imperial Airways told me that they are now carrying over twice the number of passengers they carried in the corresponding period a year before.

[Mr. Everard.]

Let me put one or two questions with regard to the weather reports. I cannot agree that the meteorological side of the Air Ministry is not good. I think the weather reports are good and easily obtainable, but there is one question I should like to ask from the point of view of civilian flying and club flying. A very valuable service is rendered from the Heston Aerodrome by the air reports which are sent out every few hours. I understand that the Air Ministry is going to provide a similar station at Manchester; there is in the present Estimates a sum of £1,000 for that purpose. Can the Under-Secretary give any assurance that the air reports at Heston will be continued. There is some question as to whether they may not have to be altered in some way, but I can assure him that from the point of view of clubs as far north as Newcastle it is of enormous advantage and saving to be able to listen-in to these reports instead of having to worry the Air Ministry.

Now that we are having a larger type of private aeroplane to carry five or six people there ought, I think, to be some reconsideration of the methods of licensing. They are all right for men who fly themselves and by themselves. The "B" certificate is all right for a man to take one or two people in an ordinary small light aeroplane, but when we get to the larger machines I think there should be some other method of licensing. There are a great many people with "B" licences, some of whom could not easily find their way across country and would not be altogether safe, in my opinion, in charge of a large type machine carrying six or seven people. Yet in fact there is nothing to-day, except the regulations of the Imperial Airways themselves to prevent a "B" licence holder from flying the Hannibal machine to-morrow morning. I believe that apart from those regulations the "B" licence pilot is in a position to undertake to fly almost any type of machine.

It is, I think, generally known that in the case of a great many countries abroad, flying permits are required. It is not a bad system. Anybody who wishes to travel abroad by air and to pass over those countries knows that he has to get a permit and the permits are not difficult to obtain. But I would draw the hon. Gentleman's attention to the position of Turkey in this respect. In Turkey a permit is required, but they will not give you a permit in writing. In the case of other foreign countries permits are given, either by the Consulate in London, or by some other office, in writing and on an official form. In my own case I was travelling across Turkey, and, although I had a permit from the Air Ministry to fly there, when I landed at Konya I was told that no permit had been received for my machine. Had I been able then to show something in writing to the effect that I had the privilege of flying over Turkey I should not have been held up in that not very beautiful place for over three hours.

I would also like to ask my right hon. Friend to take steps through the Colonial Office to see what is being done to assist private flying in Palestine and Egypt. Apparently Palestine is to be regarded as the only really rich country in the world at present. I read a wonderful descriptive magazine about Palestine the other day showing how the budget of that country was balanced and how it was the only prosperous part of the world to-day. If that be so, I am sure my hon. Friend will use his influence to see that at least they provide one or two landing grounds for aeroplanes. It is absurd that if any civilian wishes to go to Jerusalem by aeroplane he has to land at the Air Force station 30 miles away from Jerusalem. There is a smaller Air Force landing ground nearer, but there is a site where a municipal or private landing ground could be made, and in my opinion such a scheme could be pushed on if the Air Ministry took up the matter.

In former years I have raised the question of National Flying Services and have always urged upon the hon. Gentleman the desirability of looking into the arrangements between the Government and National Flying Services. It has not been possible to carry out those arrangements owing to lack of funds, and it will be seen that the subsidy figure does not occur in these Estimates. Personally, I think that is a pity, and I hope that steps will be taken whereby the clubs affiliated to National Flying Services may be able to get this subsidy for training people in their own areas. It would be a great disaster if, in some of the big centres of this country, where National Flying Services have been operating, these clubs should cease to exist. I hope the Air Ministry will be able to make some other arrangements, possibly of a local nature, to enable these clubs to continue.

Mr. DEPUTY-SPEAKER: I hope the hon. Member will not anticipate the Amendment which is to be moved.

Mr. EVERARD: I am obliged to you, Mr. Deputy-Speaker for reminding me of that fact, and I do not wish to pursue that subject further. I can assure my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary that I join with other hon. Members who have spoken in offering him congratulations on the excellent way in which he has presented these Estimates.

8.30 p.m.

Captain CUNNINGHAM-REID: I listened with the greatest interest to the lucid and comprehensive statement which we had from my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary on the introduction of these Estimates but as he progressed I thought I noticed a slight note of restraint. I somehow felt that there were times when he would have liked to have said more to the House, but that in view of his position it might be unwise to do so. Perhaps he would have liked to have said to the House that in the consideration of the total money voted by this House towards the defences, the Air Force is invariably treated as the Cinderella of the Fighting Services. For the few minutes that I intend to occupy the time of the House I should like to attempt to show that this treatment ludicrously resembles the attitude towards gunpowder that at one time was adopted by those people who considered themselves handy with the bow and arrow. The value of the Air Force in policing difficult countries and, for that matter, seas and the relative economy of air units as compared with other units is already too well-known by hon. Members to need any elaboration.

It is also well known, indeed it has practically become a platitude, that the war of the future will be in the air. Though it is a platitude it is none the less true, and at any rate wars of the future will be settled in the air. My hon. and gallant Friend who spoke a short time ago drew attention to the interesting situation that arose not long ago in Manchuria. I think that example went to show that the aeroplane has come into its own as a war weapon. I, with many others, was surprised at the amazingly rapid advance made by the Japanese only the other day, and I was interested to note that the Japanese themselves attribute their success on that occasion to the efficiency of their air arm and the demoralising effect which it had upon the enemy.

Only the other day I came across some interesting German statistics concerning the last War. I notice that they claimed to have dropped on this country during the War 300 tons of bombs, and no doubt they are in a position to know. I ask the House to consider the enormous strides that have been made in aviation since that time, the technical advance of both machines and engines, the far greater range which the modern aeroplane possesses, and the large increase in the number of machines that are to be found on the Continent; and I think the House will agree that if the Germans were able to drop 300 tons of bombs on this country during the War, such a figure, in the event of any future aerial attack, will prove to be absurdly small. I should not be surprised if that number of bombs could be dropped on the country in 12 hours. This is a fact which is not often disputed, but it annoys me considerably when I hear responsible people blindly telling us that such a contingency would be circumvented because of future disarmament.

There is a great deal of loose talk about Disarmament. I hope that I desire universal disarmament as passionately as any hon. Member, but, on the other hand, I feel very strongly that to make a fetish of words will not help the situation. There has been recently a great deal of juggling with the word "unilateral," and the juggling theorists are now throwing up what they term "a convincing lead." We have heard a great deal about a convincing lead. If that lead meant that we were going to see to it that we did not poke our noses into the business of other countries, it would be all to the good, but that is not what they indicate. When they glibly talk about a convincing lead, they mean this nation has to continue to give convincing leads in Disarmament to other nations. Why in Heaven's name should we? Who cares whether we do, anyhow? Certainly not Germany, and certainly not France, and I presume that these are the two nations on which we have our eye when we talk about giving a convincing lead and an example. Neither of these two countries is in the least frightened of us. They know that the one thing that this country does not desire is war. They know that perhaps this is the only country in the world that could gain no advantage whatever from war. The only country that they are frightened of is each other.

[Captain Cunningham-Reid.]

Consequently, I believe that if we were to continue our convincing lead to its logical conclusion and this nation were to disarm itself to the very last man, ship and aeroplane, it would not have the slightest effect upon the arms policy of either France or Germany. On second thoughts, I declare that in all probability those two countries would resent any further disarmament on our part, for they are looking to us for security in any time of trouble. Consequently, I suggest that we finish once and for all with all this humbug and that we leave behind us these Socialist-cum-Liberal day-dreams and that we get down to realities that are more in keeping with the circumstances. Further than that, let us face the fact—and I suggest that hon. Gentlemen on the Front Bench opposite should face the facts also—that there is no hope for a long time to come of sufficient international disarmament to prevent war. I have always been led to understand that the main idea of Disarmament is to prevent war, though recently one has wondered whether that is so. But things being as they are, what would encourage a European war in future more than anything else would be a vulnerable and impotent Great Britain, when we should no longer have to be reckoned with. Though it is a serious statement to make in the House, I am sure that these convincing leads will sooner or later lead to war. The net result has been that our land is now vulnerable from that attack which we fear most.

In what I am about to say, I speak with some slight practical experience, having taken part in one or two raids myself. It is to-day no fairy tale that this city of London could within 20 minutes be reduced to a smouldering collection of ruins over which would hang a cloud of poisonous vapours. Here I part company with my hon. and gallant Friend the Member for Wallasey (Lieut.-Colonel Moore-Brabazon) who said that such a contingency was unlikely. I would rather join issue with the Lord President of the Council, who, in his eloquent remarks some time ago, suggested that what I have just said was certainly a possibility. In substantiation of what I have said, I would ask the House to consider the number of aeroplanes that are to be found on the Continent to-day and the number that existed just before or during the War and note the enormous increase. I suggest that we should next contemplate how every one of those machines, civil and otherwise, down to the smallest single-seater monoplane, can be converted into a bomber in a very few hours. Then I would ask hon. Members to compare the unstrategic position of our capital from the geographical point of view and that of aerial attack, and compare its position on our coast with the central and ungetatable position of large European capitals such as Paris, Berlin and Rome. It will then be seen, taking into consideration the enormous increase in machines since the War and the unstrategic position in which we find ourselves in this country, especially so far as the capital is concerned, that if a hostile fleet of bombers were allowed unmolested and in sufficient numbers to bomb this city, the war would be over in no time and we should be lost.

I would point out that we are in a peculiar position. London is the main artery, indeed the only artery, to the whole of this country. All our communications, all our mobilisation orders, go out from London, and if a colossal fleet of bombers came over London and disorganised it completely what earthly use would our Army be then? Modern conditions of warfare make an army in England, at any rate for defence purposes, completely useless to-day, and that being so I suggest that it may be that there is there the germ of an idea for effecting immense economies in the future. I would suggest that if such a saving were effected, part of those economies could be used, with very great advantage to the safety of the nation, in increasing our air arm as a defence against the catastrophies which I have attempted to envisage. My last word is this. Is it not possible for us to eradicate our inherent bigotry on this particular subject? Could we not, for a change, move with the times and turn more completely to our Air Force, both for security and for economy, at home and abroad?

8.47 p.m.

Mr. SIMMONDS: I think the most forceful, the most eloquent and, if I may respectfully say so, the most inspiring speech to which I have listened in this House fell from the lips of my right hon. Friend the Lord President of the Council when he spoke not long ago upon the horrors of air warfare. In the course of that magnificent speech he placed on the shoulders of old and young alike certain responsibilities. In the light of what has been occurring at Geneva in the last few weeks I think it is germane for one of the younger generation to voice the abysmal disappointment we feel at the phantasy of make-believe in which all the delegations, our own included, have wallowed at the Disarmament Conference. I turn to the "Times," which reports my Noble Friend the Secretary of State for Air as saying:

> "In the view of my delegation any such scheme"—

That is, a scheme for control and disarmament generally—

> "must satisfy at least the following conditions. In the first place, it must be so framed as effectively to prevent all possibility of the resources of Civil Aviation being used for military purposes in the event of an outbreak of hostilities."

I would submit in all sincerity that that is a frankly futile hypothesis. There are two definite propositions with which I think nobody will for one moment disagree. The first is, as my hon. and gallant Friend the Member for Hertford (Rear-Admiral Sueter) has said, that if an aeroplane can fly it can bomb. The second point to which I would draw my right hon. Friend's attention, is that however perfect the control of civil aviation may be prior to a declaration of hostilities it becomes worse than futile as soon as hostilities break out. If we bear those two premises in mind it seems that one point alone can emerge when discussing air armament, and that is that if the nations are willing to forego bombing from the air then all our difficulties of the control of military and civil aviation are wiped out, but if that is not possible it is very difficult indeed, unless one is going to fall back on this hopeless phantasy, which can lead us nowhere, to see that these discussions can usefully proceed any further.

I would like to turn from the pseudo-military side to the purely civil side. If we offered the Air Estimates to any experienced foreigner who happened to be in this country and asked him to express some views upon them I feel certain that one point he would make would be this: How comes it about that in a volume devoted almost exclusively to naval and military aviation there is sandwiched in between the two a scant reference to Civil Aviation? That, unfortunately, is a story which for this country, and, indeed, for the Empire, is having very bitter consequences. Civil air transport can be divided into five categories. First we have the clubs, which will be discussed later, then we have private clubs, taxi services, inland air services and external services.

Possibly the House will forgive me if I say that in my observations here I am endeavouring to speak with the information which I have culled over the last 10 years first as a member of the Airworthiness Department of the Air Ministry and latterly as an aircraft manufacturer, and therefore that the feelings which I express have been borne in on me in the day-to-day routine of the aircraft world. Clubs and external air lines are the two subdivisions which have been handed over by the Air Ministry lock, stock and barrel to somebody else, and those are the two sides of civil air transport which have flourished. I was sorry to hear my hon. Friend the Member for Durham (Mr. McKeag) who spoke from the Liberal benches, casting some aspersions on Imperial Airways, because, speaking with some little knowledge both as an engineer and as a frequent passenger on Imperial Airways Services, I can find nothing but praise for the magnificent organisation which that company has built up.

[Mr. Simmonds.]

The House may possibly be interested to know that in the course of a flight from Paris to England about a fortnight ago one of my fellow passengers who got into conversation with me told me that he was the new Minister for one of the South American Republics. He had just come over from America to Cherbourg by one of the express Atlantic liners and had then gone on to Paris, but although he had not ever flown before the reputation of Imperial Airways was so great in South America that he determined to finish his journey to England by proceeding from Paris to London by our own British air line. I can think of no higher tribute than that a gentleman of such eminence should have his first flight when taking up that important diplomatic position.

Perhaps I might interpose an anecdote which will be of use to those who, possibly, are timid of taking to the air. In the course of a journey which I had to make late last year by Imperial Airways a veritable gale was blowing on the ground. Had I needed to proceed by the antiquated and obsolescent method of transport from Folkestone to Boulogne that day, the report in the "Times" newspaper would have filled me with dismay. What did we do? We took off from Croydon and immediately climbed to a height of a mile and a-half, 8,000 feet, and there we proceeded with absolute peace and calm, and I was able, addressing the soup that was served to me in the course of the excellent luncheon, to observe: "Surely no soup served to me in a railway restaurant-car was ever so peaceful as thou." That is typical of the immense efficiency of that organisation. I am satisfied that, should my hon. Friend the Member for Durham have any real grievance, it would immediately be investigated by the management of the company.

Let me turn from the two happier sides, those that are free from Air Ministry control, in its day-to-day application, to those less fortunate aspects, the air-taxi service, the inland services, and private flying. These three aspects of flying are suffering from the intolerably rigid interference of Air Ministry regulations and inspectors. We so frequently hear that internal civil flying is unnecessary in this country, that the climate is not quite suitable, that the size of the country does not call for it, or that the train service is so excellent. All these are poor excuses made in an endeavour to cover up our own lack of pushfulness in the operation of a new development. The other day I was in a very important centre on the North-East Coast, and I required to get to Preston, an important centre on the North-West Coast. The best train that I could get to cover the distance which, as the crow flies, is about 70 miles, took no less than six hours, and yet we say that an air-taxi service, which would have got me there in 45 minutes, is not worth while.

Mr. BUCHANAN: The hon. Member was lucky to get there so soon.

Mr. SIMMONDS: Very likely I was lucky, but I am giving the very best time in which you could do that journey. I dare say that you could take twice as long, if you did not exercise good care. We have this harsh, rigid attitude of interference in civil aviation from the Air Ministry. One may fairly ask what is the civil aviation department of the Air Ministry? Having investigated that question, anybody would come to the conclusion that the department is nothing more nor less than a grandiose filing department, situated hard by in Whitehall at a point where the red tape is thickest, simply purveying the decisions of the military departments, so so far as their wishes for civil aviation are concerned. Let me give a slight example. If I wanted an aircraft investigated as to its strength, I would have to hand it to the military establishment at Farnborough. If I want it tested, I would have to send it to a squadron at Martlesham Heath. If I had to discuss a matter of inspection, I would go to yet another military department at Alexandra House in Kingsway.

All these departments deal with what is going to be the lifeblood of our Empire. Not only will the military side of the Air Ministry refuse to allow the civil aviation department to have its own view, but it even prevents that department from co-ordinating the various military views as they are collected. For this purpose there has been set up in the Air Ministry a special section, R.D.A.C., whose job it is to co-ordinate all the restrictions that can be thought of, and to press them upon the wretched civil aircraft manufacturer. One of the most important duties of that department is to have scouts perpetually travelling over the whole of Europe, finding out any new repressive idea that different countries may have, in regard to civil aviation.

Mr. BUCHANAN: Surely, never.

Mr. SIMMONDS: Indeed, I can tell the hon. Member for Gorbals (Mr. Buchanan) that on the last two occasions in the last four months that I have flown from this country to the Continent, curiously enough, an officer from that department, going to find some new regulation, happened to be a passenger on the machine.

Mr. BUCHANAN: Was that on the road to America, and what did the hon. Member carry in the aeroplane?

Mr. SIMMONDS: No, this was when flying normally from this country to the Continent. There are plenty of regulations that we have not yet adopted, and I hope that we shall never adopt the one suggested by the hon. Member. Let us look at the matter from the point of view of the motor industry. There is no question that, in a few years time, unless it is completely strangled by the Air Ministry, civil aviation will develop into as important an asset in our national life as the motor industry. Suppose Sir Herbert Austin had to send his next 12-horse-power model down to Lulworth Cove to the Tank Section for it to go through a manœuvring test; suppose he had to send the chassis to Woolwich Arsenal to have it investigated as to strength, the engine to this establishment and the carburettor to that. The whole thing would appear so farcical that it would not be tolerated for a moment.

Why then do we tolerate this position in civil aviation? Simply because civil aviation started from small beginnings at the end of the War, when it was not necessary to set up a separate department. Now civil aviation has grown, and it is absolutely essential that the Air Ministry should realise the changed position. With the repressive attitude, we have unfortunately the consequence that one might expect, and that is, that it is ignored. Very frequently one gets more at the truth if one notices a little slip than if one listens to statements of high policy from a Minister. On the 6th July last, I asked the Under-Secretary of State:

> "The number of British aircraft that have been set on fire since 1918 by night landing flares carried on the aircraft; and the number of deaths resulting therefrom."

My right hon. Friend replied as follows:

> "There has been no recent fatal accident of this kind."—[OFFICIAL REPORT, 6th July, 1932; cols. 425-6; Vol. 268.]

The "Aeroplane" newspaper, dealing with this matter, made the apposite remark:

> "What about the fatal accident at Jask, when two passengers were killed."

That, however, was only a civil aircraft. When the Air Ministry refer to British aircraft, they think solely of service aircraft, quite rightly, and when my right hon. Friend was looking up the various accidents that had occurred, it did not strike him at all that "British aircraft" included British civil aircraft.

It is a very keen point throughout the aircraft industry that we are not, on the civil side, getting fair and reasonable treatment from this preponderatingly military organisation. One might fairly ask, is this repressive attitude a definite policy on the part of the Air Ministry, or is it simply the enthusiasm of some junior officials? Unfortunately, we know the answer, because some couple of years ago a committee was set up, on which some of the most able members of the senior Air Ministry staff served, and also some of the most eminent men in the industry, and, as a result of the deliberations of that committee, it was unanimously decided that a certain lightening of the restrictions on civil aircraft should immediately take place. But, as soon as the military mind saw that it was to lose some of its power over civil aviation, the whole report was jettisoned, and to-day we have a truncated committee which is scarcely permitted to say yea or nay. Therefore, I would, without any exaggeration, say to my right hon. Friend, and to all hon. Members, that the British aircraft industry is thoroughly roused about the manner in which it has been treated on the civil side. Indeed, the matter was so much talked of in air circles that the Royal Aeronautical Society, the most important aeronautical scientific body in the world, called a special meeting, at which views were very freely stated on this subject.

[Mr. Simmonds.]

It is indeed time when the Air Ministry should review its attitude on this important matter. We have had in the last few weeks a Bill—I believe that many right hon. and hon. Members think it is a miserable Bill—for the co-ordination of London transport; but, if London transport needs co-ordinating, no less does the whole attitude towards transport throughout the country. If a Ministry of Defence is necessary for all the defence services, so, surely, is a Ministry of Transport which would cover land, sea and sky. I realise that we cannot get that overnight, but, until we can arrive at that hopeful——

Mr. DEPUTY-SPEAKER: I must remind the hon. Member that he is now touching on matters which would require legislation.

Mr. SIMMONDS: I defer to your Ruling. For the moment the Air Ministry could, I suggest, be very helpful if it would take these three steps: In the first place, we should have somebody in authority dealing solely with civil aviation—an Under-Secretary, it may be, but someone who would be thinking out these problems, giving some guidance, and putting some drive into the administration of civil aviation. In the second place, it is essential that the Air Ministry should hand over its present powers over civil aircraft in the lesser categories—I am not here referring to the big air liners—to some body such as Lloyds, or some other organisation of that kind, who have certain truncated powers at the moment. I am not here referring to type aircraft, but all subsequent aircraft, after the first type machine has been approved by the Air Ministry, should be taken entirely out of the ken of the Air Ministry organisation. In order that that should be effective, we should have to have third-party insurance, which would mean that Lloyds or the underwriters meeting together in some corporation would be able to have their hands on the whole of British civil aviation.

Although I have tried to voice, somewhat ineffectively I am afraid, the fears of the British aircraft industry on this subject of the attitude of the Air Ministry to civil aviation, yet we are not in any way dismayed. Progress has been made in certain directions, and we trust that the co-operation, late though it be, of the Air Ministry may contribute to this immense development, which can not only knit together the different parts of the Empire, but can also, by providing freer communication between one foreign country and another, prevent misunderstandings and enable us to get more together mentally. If my right hon. Friend, during the remaining years that he is at the Air Ministry—and may they be many—would divert some of the energy and some of the constructive mental effort that he has given to the service side into the civil side of flying, both the country and, not least, this House, would indeed be grateful.

9.10 p.m.

Sir ALFRED BEIT: In the first place, may I say I regret very much that, owing to a long-standing engagement in my constituency, I was unable to be in my place when the Under-Secretary introduced the Estimates this afternoon? Consequently, if I should express any fears which he has already allayed, or should ask for any assurances which he has already given, I hope he will treat me with indulgence. I propose very briefly to address myself to certain aspects of civil aviation. The first is one of which I have personal knowledge, namely, the African service operated by Imperial Airways. My hon. and gallant Friend the Member for Chippenham (Captain Cazalet) and myself were the first Members of this House to use that service, and, indeed, we were the first individuals who paid for passages in the ordinary way. That was through the heart of tropical Africa at the height of the rainy season, and we were both enormously impressed by the excellence of the aircraft, the comfort, the adequacy of the ground organisation, and the skill of the pilots. That trip was taken only a month after the rather lamentable stoppage due to the violence of the weather which caused the first planes to become befogged and the pilots got lost. In spite of that bad beginning, it is gratifying to learn, therefore, that in 1932 less than 3 per cent. of the services of Imperial Airways were cancelled owing to bad weather.

Since then there has been a vast improvement in the service all round. There are bigger and better aerodromes, and more of them. In the very rainy districts the aerodromes are better drained and better surfaced. There are better meteorological arrangements, and more wireless direction finding stations. The most noteworthy improvements have been made in Rhodesia, but it is to be hoped that Kenya and Tanganyika will shortly follow suit. I understand that a general meteorological survey is planned for the whole of tropical Africa from the Sudan to Southern Rhodesia, and I very much hope that the Air Ministry will give, in collaboration with the East African Governments, such support as they can to this scheme, which I believe to be of paramount importance to aviation in these tropical districts.

A certain amount has been said on the cost of the subsidies. I think the general feeling of the House has been that the subsidy is very modest in extent. That is certainly my feeling. It is not much —£490,000—compared for instance with 217,000,000 francs in France in 1921, say, £2,500,000, or with 23,000,000 marks, £1,500,000, in Germany. In the United States the postal subsidy for 1932 was 20,000,000 dollars for inland services and 7,000,000 dollars for foreign. It is said that only a quarter of that sum ever comes back to the Exchequer in the form of revenue, so that three-quarters of it may be considered subsidy. This is rather in conflict with the statement made by a number of American air lines that they are operating entirely without subsidy and yet at a profit. The subsidy has, I think, enabled our services to be so much improved that it is really possible now to contemplate its ultimate abolition. Its efficiency may be said to have sounded its own death-knell. Lack of accidents brings more passengers and Imperial Airways are now insured by Lloyds at the same rate as surface transport. I would urge greater generosity on the part of the Post Office in the matter of the air mail contracts. I am afraid the Post Office is inclined to snuff out at its start this infant service by demanding a profit, and not to foster it so that in course of time the profits may accrue naturally. Cheaper newspaper rates, certainly in the African service, are highly necessary. It costs 7s. 6d. to send a copy of the "Times" to Central Africa by air. The only concession that has been made so far is in the rate for post cards.

We supply fuel to commercial machines, both our own and foreign, without duty when they are for overseas destinations. This concession is not reciprocated by Germany and, above all, by Iraq. I feel that in this matter there should be reciprocity all round and the same freedom should be accorded to commercial air lines as is accorded to merchant ships of all nations, which are able to purchase their fuel free of duty.

This leads me to the general question of the freedom of the air. I fail to see why innocent freedom of passage cannot be given to nationally owned aircraft, just as nationally owned merchant ships have freedom of passage outside territorial waters and freedom of passage through territorial waters to any port of their choice. I fail to see why any distinction of nationality should be made in this respect and, in the view of many authorities, the Air Convention should be amended—it would not require legislation—in such a way that complete freedom of passage should only be refused on reasonable and, above all, on stated grounds. There are three lesser, but nevertheless important aspects arising out of the subject of innocent freedom of passage. The first is the postulate which I make, that monopolies should not be granted for flying over territories. To give a small example, it is impossible at present to organise an air mail service between Southern Rhodesia and Portuguese East Africa, which is the natural outlet of that Dominion to the sea, because the Portuguese colonies have given a monopoly to France to organise air mails and commercial flying services.

We were unable to continue our services along the Persian side of the Gulf because the Persians wished us to establish an aerial corridor through the centre of their country, which we considered impracticable. The result has been that we have changed to the Arabian side of the Persian Gulf. The change over is considered satisfactory, and there is no desire to revert to the original route, but the principle arises that, although Persia is a signatory of the Air Convention, by her attitude she caused us to abandon our former route, whereas France and Holland are to this day maintaining regular air services to the East which are following the old Persian route.

[Sir A. Beit.]

Finally, I should like to call attention to Italy's chameleon-like changes in regulations. First of all, she does not allow us to enter her territory with our aircraft coming from France, although at the time she laid down that regulation French aeroplanes were themselves entering Italy from France. She then forbade us to use the Genoa, Naples, Corfu route across Italy and informed us that the only route we could use for our eastern services would be Milan, Brindisi, a service which in winter is impracticable because of the bad weather conditions which generally prevail around Milan. We have given Italy rights to fly over Cyprus and Malta, and we have given them our good will to assist them, in so far as we can, to get similar privileges in Egypt and the Sudan. We have given Italy about as much as we can give them, and yet it seems to me that we have not had from them any fair quid pro quo. The right that we have to fly from Brindisi or Milan does not seem to me a fair measure of return for what we have given to Italy. The machinery for the modification of the Air Convention exists. I hope it will be possible for the right hon. Gentleman to bring his influence, and that of his Department, to bear upon the next meeting of the International Commission for Air Navigation in order that some of the irregularities and irritating restrictions may be rescinded and that we may arrive at what I am sure is the spirit of the Air Convention, innocent freedom of passage in time of peace for all irrespective of nationality.

9.25 p.m.

Mr. LOVAT-FRASER: I should be glad if the Minister would reply to two questions. Last year I raised the question of the noise caused by aeroplanes. This year I wish again to ask him what progress he has made in eliminating noise. Noise may not be affecting people inside the machines, but it is affecting people on the surface of the earth below. I have been told by experts that, noisy as the aeroplane may be now, they believe they may be made so silent as to produce no sense of a noise. I was reading the other day a book by a former Duke of Argyll in which he says that when the first steamer, the "Comet," was put on the Clyde by Henry Bell and made its way through the water, the noise was so intolerable that nobody on the boat could be heard. Is there any prospect of a similar transformation in regard to aeroplanes? The other question I want to ask is with regard to something that gives trouble in flying, namely, the formation of ice on the wings and fuselages of aeroplanes. What success has the Minister had in dealing with ice? With those two questions, I make way for the Minister.

9.26 p.m.

Sir P. SASSOON: I think the House will agree that we have had a most valuable and instructive Debate and one which reveals once again the keen, vital and well-informed interest which hon. Members take in all the varied aspects of Service and civil flying. We have listened to many eloquent speeches. We have heard a good many constructive suggestions and not too much destructive criticism, and I myself have been asked a few questions which I shall hope to try to answer to the best of my ability. As was to be expected, disarmament bulked very large in the Debate. It is a useful thing that it should be ventilated here in all its aspects but, as I said at the beginning of my speech, as long as these proposals and discussions are sub judice in Geneva, it is impossible for me to say anything which might prejudice them.

The hon. Member who followed me this afternoon, the Member for Govan (Mr. N. Maclean) raised a number of points, to some of which I will give an answer now, although I am sorry he is not here. He may, perhaps, read them in the OFFICIAL REPORT to-morrow. They were most of them rather small points, as a matter of fact. He asked me about the number of marine aircraft. There is provision for 28 craft used by the Service for a variety of purposes. Then he asked a question about the promotion of men in the Service, and whether it was possible for men to go the whole way up the ladder. It is very possible. In fact, the whole basis of promotion in the Air Force is very broad and democratic. Twenty-five per cent. of the permanent commissions are given to men promoted from the ranks. The hon. Member next asked me about the pay of officers and whether they could live on their pay. I should certainly say they can. Every effort is made to scrutinise the cost of messing in the different units and stations to see that officers are not charged more than they can afford. As regards the skeleton staff at Cardington, there is, of course, a small staff there collecting information, but it is only holding a watching brief, and we have absolutely no commitments of any sort in the nature of proposals for building any future airships.

We had the pleasure of listening to an extremely delightful and well-informed maiden speech from the hon. Member for Deptford (Mr. Hanley), and there was nothing in it with which I did not agree whole-heartedly. In fact, he echoed and voiced many opinions which I should have liked to include in my speech had I had time. The all-red route to Malta and Gibraltar is one. These are things we have very much under consideration. Then there is the development of flying boats which we have always done our best to foster and which will be, of course, immensely valuable in that direction. I believe the longest flight which one would have to take in connection with Empire communications would be England to Gibraltar, and if a flying boat would do that particular hop it would be immensely valuable. One of the things about which I agreed with the hon. Member was the unfortunate appellation for the particular weapon which the aeroplane possesses. The word "bombs" has a much more disagreeable sound than "shells," and it has been the cause and originator of a great deal of confused thought on this particular problem.

My Noble Friend the hon. Member for Central Bristol (Lord Apsley) showed himself rather anxious about the short service commissions and wondered whether it would be possible to have a greater number of permanent commissions. I should like to assure him that short service commissions are essential for a service like the Royal Air Force where there is so large a proportion of officers and competition is extremely keen. The type of men now coming into the Service for short service commissions could not possibly be better. Then the hon. Member raised some points about co-operation with the Army. In my speech I mentioned an occasion of such co-operation, and said how much the Air Force welcomed that kind of co-operation.

We were very fortunate to have such an extremely intresting speech from my right hon. Friend the Member for Sparkbrook (Mr. Amery). He echoed many of the sentiments which I expressed in my speech. It was particularly interesting to hear these things from him, because he has a first-hand knowledge of them. When he was Secretary of State for the Colonies he was naturally immensely interested in everything which went on in those parts of the world, and he also went there on more than one occasion and saw it all from the air. It was agreeable and encouraging to hear from him how much he welcomes the beneficient and creative side of the work which the Royal Air Force does overseas in the performance and discharge of its essential military duties. I must apologise to my hon. Friend the Member for South Leeds (Mr. Whiteside) for not being in my place when he made his speech. I will read it with care and answer him later on, but I gather that some of the points he made could be made, perhaps, with better and greater effect if they were addressed to the Postmaster-General on the next occasion of the Post Office Vote.

My hon. and gallant Friend the Member for Hertford (Rear-Admiral Sueter) was kind enough to start his speech with congratulations addressed to myself, but hardly were the words out of his mouth before he watered them down with an expression of disapproval and disappointment. He accused the Secretary of State for Air and myself of what he described as letting the Army and Navy get away with the loot. The only thing I regretted was that there were two Admiralty Ministers sitting on the bench next to me one minute before, but unfortunately they went out and did not hear his remarks. If I have disappointed him he has also disappointed me. This is the first year, I think, on the occasion of the Air Debates that my hon. and gallant Friend has not mentioned the subject of Farnborough. I have noticed every year that his criticisms have been getting weaker, and this year they have died out altogether, which makes me believe that he is entirely satisfied.

[Sir P. Sassoon.]

The House listens always with the greatest interest to my hon. Friend the Member for Melton (Mr. Everard), who raised his usual points of interest. I was glad to hear the tribute which he paid to the Hannibal machines of the Imperial Airways Service, a tribute which is voiced and echoed by all who travel on that line. My hon. Friend the Member for one of the divisions of Birmingham left us in no doubt as to his views about the Air Ministry, and especially the attitude they take towards civil aviation and the development of the civil aircraft industry in general. He complained that our measures were so oppressive and so shackling that one wondered whether there was any future or hope for the industry of civil aviation in England at all. But I must say that we have the principal air records, that our Imperial Air Service is the best in the world, and we have the greatest sale of civil aircraft of any country. I know that there is a great deal in what he said, and, when I answer in that way, it is not that I want to be discourteous. I think he was drawing almost too dark a picture, but if there is anything in the suggestions that he has made which may be of any use it will be very carefully considered.

The hon. Member for South-East St. Pancras (Sir A. Beit) in his very interesting speech, gave us a first-hand report of his experience of the Cape route, and mentioned its great importance and the fact that we were going ahead on that route. We know how much we are indebted to the Trust which bears his name and of which he is a director and how sympathetic they are towards anything which has to do with civil flying in Africa. My hon. Friend the Member for Lichfield (Mr. Lovat-Fraser) raised two points. I think that he has raised the question of noise in aeroplanes on previous occasions. We have been doing everything possible to please and to satisfy him in that connection. I do not know whether he has flown lately in the large cabin machines of Imperial Airways—it is after all, in the enclosed machine one suffers most from noise—but if he has, I am sure he will agree that the strides which we have made to counter this very disagreeable phenomenon have been extremely successful. Whereas one used to have to introduce a large piece of cotton wool into the ears, one can now converse quite as easily as in a motor car or train, and I only hope that he will without delay sample what I am telling him, and realise that the conditions in aeroplanes to-day will even satisfy his friend the Duke of Argyll. He raised another point in connection with ice. It is very troublesome to pilots flying at great altitudes to have to encounter the formation of ice on the wings and the fuselage. There again we have made very definite strides. New kinds of dope have been tried with considerable success. Dope has sometimes been made of the most curious materials such as treacle, sugar, soap, seccotine and things of that sort. I can assure my hon. Friend that considerable progress has taken place in this matter during the last year or two.

AMATEUR FLYING.

9.40 p.m.

Mr. GODFREY WILSON: I beg to move, to leave out from the word "That" to the end of the Question, and to add instead thereof the words:

"this House is of opinion that, in order to develop civil aviation and to ensure an adequate reserve of qualified pilots for military purposes, greater assistance should be given for the encouragement of amateur flying and the formation of light aeroplane clubs."

The privilege of introducing this Amendment is due to the fortune, or perhaps I should say at this late hour, the misfortune of the Ballot. It has two important aspects, first, the development of civil aviation in relation to the growth and increasing importance of the air service in commerce, transport and in international relations, and, secondly, the provision of adequate reserves of qualified pilots who will be ready in a national emergency to act in the defence of the security of the country. It may seem that there is something inconsistent in these two aspects of the question, but there is no more inconsistency between the development of civil aviation and the importance of civil aviation from the point of view of military requirements than there is between the Maritime forces and the Navy, each of which is complementary to the other. The remarkable successes recently attained by British aviation have been referred to more than once to-night, and the great successes in that respect give convincing proof that this nation is, if not the very best, at least equal to any other nation in the world. Therefore, it is time that we took advantage of that opportunity.

There are one or two particular things to which I wish to make reference. One is the security and safety, now a prominent feature of all aircraft. The other is the very remarkable reduction which has recently taken place in the insurance rates which apply to passenger traffic. It was only announced, I think yesterday, that insurance rates had gone down from 12s. per £1,000, per hour flying, to 1s. per £1,000, per hour flying. Surely, this is the time to do everything possible to increase and to encourage this new and growing industry. We should take advantage of the unique opportunities presented to us to foster what will be one of the most important developments in trade and international relations. It is impossible to exaggerate the far-reaching importance of what may happen with regard to the development of transport and passenger traffic in the air. Every country in the world is undoubtedly purchasing and developing aeroplanes and flying services, and with our established reputation we have an opportunity to seize the moment and by so doing may expect to increase our export trade, help to reduce unemployment, and help coal, iron, steel, shipping, engineering, railways, and many other industries.

One point of view that I should like to urge upon the Under-Secretary is an increase in the number of our aerodromes and landing grounds. The lack of these is a serious handicap to development. There should be facilities near every large town for aeroplanes to land, and I hope the Under-Secretary will be able to assure us that attention is being paid to that matter. The immediate point which I wish to urge is that, through the encouragement given to civil aviation and light aeroplane clubs, we should get an increase in the number of trained pilots. Every pilot mean more machines, more engines, more equipment, and generally that is the crux of the whole problem.

In the Air Estimates, Vote 8, there is a sum of £568,000 devoted to civil aviation, of which sum £20,000 is for light aeroplane clubs. That represents more that double the corresponding Vote last year, and I should like the Under-Secretary to tell us exactly how that £20,000 is to be used. The last report of the Air Ministry on civil aviation, published in 1932, gives a statement of the sums which other nations are spending in the development of this branch of aviation. It appears from the figures quoted that this country is spending about one-fourth of what Germany is spending, one-third of what France is spending, and a little more than one-half of what Italy is spending. I was unable to get any information from the figures as to how much of the money which those foreign countries are spending on civil aviation was devoted to what corresponds to our light aeroplane clubs, but I think it is probable that at least it is three or four times what we are spending.

The object of the subsidy to light aeroplane clubs is to give members an opportunity to learn and to practise the art of flying, and that is done by giving subsidies and capitation grants to those members who succeed in getting one or other of two licences—licence "A" for those who intend to be amateur pilots and to engage only in private flying, and licence "B," which is a higher qualification, the professional qualification, which a pilot must have before he can take up passengers for hire or reward, or before he can engage in commercial flying. I have the figures for the last six or seven years showing the numbers who have been successful in getting "A" and "B" licences. I will not weary the House with the figures in detail, but they gradually rose from 1927 to 1930 in the proportion of "A" and "B" licences, but since 1930 there has been a gradual reduction. Perhaps the Under-Secretary will tell us the reason for that reduction.

The total number of licences held for the last three years compared with the number of privately owned aircraft shows rather notable results. For every six or seven "A" licences there is about one privately owned machine in this country. This gives ground for the fair inference that the number of pilots does bear a very distinct connection with the progress of aviation generally. In the year 1929 the experiment was tried of subsidising seven professional clubs and the National

[Mr. Wilson.]

Flying Services Limited. They were under contract during three years to put down 20 aerodromes and 80 landing grounds, but I understand that they were unable to fulfil their contract. I hope the Under-Secretary will be able to tell us whether these seven clubs are to be kept in existence or to be allowed to die out. I hope that some help will be given to them.

I pass on to the military side of the question. We can only consider that in relation to the policy laid down by the Government on disarmament, and this is not the time for me to discuss that policy. It has already been dealt with very fully by hon. Members who have spoken, but I cannot help saying that our efforts in that direction have not been attended with any remarkable success. Our example has not been followed by any other country, and the time has come to put aside any attempt to persuade any other nation to follow our example. We should think only of our own security. There can be no doubt that the reductions in our armaments of all kinds, Navy, Army and Air Force, have been such as to make people who are not mere scaremongers anxious as to our national security. Until other nations are prepared to agree to the proposals which we have made, we should see to it that our own defences are secure and that we are in a position to make our voice heard in any international trouble that may come about.

In this respect I cannot help feeling very strongly that half measures are absolutely useless. We must either see that we have a really good force which will give us the right to be heard in any international question, or, failing that, we ought to be content with what would be merely an adequate police force. Anything in the nature of half measures would fail to satisfy anyone. They would simply provoke and encourage other people to take advantage of our position. Unless, therefore, we are prepared to rely on the goodwill of other nations, it is necessary for us to obtain an adequate Air Force, and for that purpose we must look to getting an adequate reserve of trained pilots, ready in a national emergency, with an intensive course of instruction in military aircraft, to take their places as officers in the regular Air Force.

Times have changed. Hitherto this country has depended for its existence on sea power. That day is past. I cannot help feeling that security in the air to-day is of more importance to us than, or equally as important as the security of the sea has been to us in past years. When one considers the relative cost of a battleship or a battle cruiser with the cost of an aeroplane the ratio is most remarkable. One can build 8,000 military aircraft at the cost of one battleship. One can build many thousands of military aircraft at the cost of one cruiser. I cannot help wondering what chance a battleship or cruiser would have if attacked by even one hundred aeroplanes. We have had a recent example of what an aeroplane can do in attacking an armed naval vessel. The recent revolt on a Dutch ship was quelled by one bomb dropped from an aeroplane, and if that can happen in the Dutch Navy, it can happen anywhere else. To my mind, 100 aeroplanes attacking a single battleship or cruiser would wipe it out of existence in a very short time.

We have heard anxiety expressed on all sides of the House in regard to the position which we occupy in this matter of air power. We are fifth among the great Powers in regard to air defence, and that is a position which has been commented on so seriously on all sides that I need not refer to it any further. I submit that, by giving assistance to aeroplane clubs, we should be enabled to build up a reserve of pilots who would be ready in a national emergency to take their places in the regular Air Force. They would be, by their previous experience, trained in flying, and in air-mindedness, and they would very quickly be able to act if an emergency should arise. I would like to suggest to the Under-Secretary of State that he should consider giving an addditional subsidy to a pilot who holds an "A" licence, who passes a medical examination, and who would be prepared to sign on for, say, five years to serve if the occasion arose.

There is one other source of flying to which I should like particularly to draw attention, and that is the universities. There are already in existence two university air squadrons, one at Oxford and one at Cambridge. Those squadrons were started in 1925. They began with an establishment of only 50 members, but that has recently been increased to 75. It was possible to start those squadrons at the two aerodromes, Abingdon, near Oxford, and Duxford, near Cambridge, and, notwithstanding the somewhat pacifist resolutions to which attention has been drawn, I say that if an emergency should arise, this House and this country need have no anxiety as to what the students of Oxford and Cambridge would do. I should like to remind the House that these two squadrons are strictly civilian. Their members do not serve under any military contract nor under any Air Force contract. They have to go through a medical examination, and they are selected very carefully from among a very large number, a much larger number than the establishment permits to be chosen. The instruction is given on service machines by Royal Air Force officers, who have been trained themselves at the Central Flying School.

By means of these two squadrons the young men of Oxford and Cambridge are thoroughly trained in flying, elementary ground subjects, airmanship, air pilotage, rigging, and engines, and it is held that at the end of their course they have qualifications about equal to half what a regular pilot gets when he passes through a regular flying training school. The purpose for which the squadrons were founded were three. They were, first, in order to send into civil life qualified civil pilots who may themselves some day become private owners; secondly, to ensure a high standard of safe airmanship, given under the best instruction and under strict discipline, and by that means to raise the standard of aviation throughout the country; and, thirdly, to build up a reserve of officers for the Reserve and Auxiliary Air Force who would accept the obligation to serve for five years in the event of war.

The combined output of the two universities is about 60 pilots per annum, and if it is assumed that the flying life of a man is about 15 years, it means that in the course of time we should, under our present establishment, have about 900 trained pilots, who, with a further intensive course of instruction, would be ready and willing to take their part as officers in the Royal Air Force. The competition to enter these two squadrons is keen, and if only the establishment could be increased, there is no doubt that we could double our output. All that is necessary for them are a few additional instructors and further machines for training purposes. I do not intend to keep the House any longer, as there are other hon. Members to follow who have experience of their own, which I cannot claim to possess, but from whatever point of view we look at this question, whether from the civil point of view of the development of trade and commerce, or from the military point of view in order to get an adequate reserve of trained officers, I wish to press the importance of this Amendment on the House.

10.2 p.m.

Captain HAROLD BALFOUR: I beg to second the Amendment.

In the speech of the right hon. Member for Epping (Mr. Churchill) to-day he drew a picture of the position of this country as a maritime Power in the old days, and he enlarged on the possibility of this country being an air Power in the future. Quite apart from the military or service aspect of the question, I think we have in this country to-day a great opportunity, because in every age there has always been one development. There was the steam age, the age of the iron ship, and usually this country has led. We have now an opportunity of leading in this flying age, just as we led in the maritime and shipbuilding age. I think we have made a good start, and not the least part of our good start is the light aeroplane club movement, which is characteristically British, which was developed in this country, and which has been copied throughout most of the Continent, in other parts of the world, and in our British Dominions.

The growth of this movement is really remarkable. I do not wish to weary the House with figures, except to give two sets as a contrast. In 1928 the flying members of our light aeroplane clubs numbered 1,520; in 1931 they numbered 3,433, or over 100 per cent. increase. In 1928 the flying hours were 10,400; in 1931 they were 24,250, a thing that I think every Member of this House, particularly those who have light aeroplane clubs in or near their constituencies, can very well be proud. This country geographically has disadvantages as regards the development of civil aviation, when we compare ourselves with the wide open spaces of the United States, but, true to the British tradition, we are not going to be downcast by these disadvantages and we are offsetting them by the development of our own particular line of flying. The light aeroplane club movement has done two things towards offsetting those disadvantages. It has provided the majority of the all too few facilities that we enjoy for landing in England to-day—the landing grounds of our municipalities and our seaside resorts and other places—and, secondly, it has gone far to educate the average man and woman in this country to realise that when they see an aeroplane going over head the aeroplane is not about to fall upon their heads, but is a safe and reasonable means of transport.

[Captain Balfour.]

In the United States there are over 2,000 landing grounds, of which less than 100 belong to the Army and Navy. We in this country have approximately only 450, including those of the Royal Air Force, and if it had not been for the clubs the number would have been very much lower than that to-day. I hope that the right hon. Gentleman the Under-Secretary, when he is considering the extension of the number of subsidised flying clubs up to the maximum, will also consider the geographical position of the various clubs that make the application, in order that we can gradually ring England around with a series of landing grounds which will give the flying facilities that are essential if we are to develop our internal air communications.

As regards educating the public, the light aeroplane club is the only possible way in which the average man can fly at a reasonable cost. It is a truly democratic movement. There is a messenger boys' flying club, and there are a Press flying club and a London omnibus men's flying club. Everyone in the House will agree that it is a truly democratic movement and worthy of support without thought of party. If the Government are satisfied that the clubs have fulfilled usefully their dual purpose of developing landing facilities and educating the public, it is the Government's duty to give them some further encouragement. I suggest that there are two ways in which the Government can give that encouragement. The first is by extending the subsidy, and the second is by freeing private flying from some of the restriction under which it at present suffers.

The Mover of the Amendment suggested that there should be an extension of the subsidy to "A" licence pilots who have passed a medical test and would give an undertaking to serve at home or abroad if called upon to serve in a national emergency. Such a stipulation as regards the granting of an extra subsidy should appeal to everyone. A national emergency might arise, and there might be the incursion of outside capitalists on a Socialist State. In that case those who were running the Government of the country would be very glad to get these men to defend the country in such a state of national emergency. I think there should be an additional subsidy for certain young men who have not means of their own but wish to fly, and who have the necessary qualifications, in the same way as there are technical scholarships. If Government money is to be granted to help the young men of this country to fly, let us see that it is evenly distributed, and that those who can pass a means test will at any rate have an opportunity of participating in the benefits of such a subsidy.

The second way in which I think the Government could help would be to remove some of the present restrictions on private flying. I want to make it quite clear that any remarks I make do not apply to fare-carrying aeroplanes that fly for hire or reward, because the State and the Department have a duty towards the public who are being carried in public transport machines. We always used to say that an Englishman's home was his castle. The Air Ministry have upset all that now, because if I happen to own a castle I could not build an aeroplane out of my own money in my own workshop, and fly in my own ground, and perhaps kill myself in my own particular fashion, without the permission of the Secretary of State for Air. I think that that is taking Government interference rather too far and is seriously encroaching upon the liberty of the subject. One has to have one's drawings approved, the construction approved, and even the operation of the private aeroplane approved.

Anybody can buy a motor car for a £5 note without any provision as to examination of its condition, and one can drive it down Piccadilly and have an accident through the breaking of the steering, and one can cause more damage than probably the average aeroplane falling on the ground would cause; but there is no provision in the Ministry of Transport regulations for the compulsory examination of second-hand cars. In practice accidents to such cars are few and far between. So it is with aircraft. In practice if restrictions are lightened the law of supply and demand will operate, and manufacturers will not make bad aeroplanes, because they will be unable to sell them. I think that the present system is costly to the taxpayer, because the charges made to the average private owner for the looking-over inspection of his aeroplane do not cover the total charge which these services entail. It is costly to the owner, and it is very inelastic in its operation.

The future of private flying lies with the aeroplane which is going to be built in the future. Where to-day there are tens of young men who can pay £1,000 for an aeroplane, there are hundreds who will pay £250. There is being built to-day a new type of light aeroplane, call it the motor bicycle of the air if you like. I went to Shoreham the other day and flew one of these machines, which had a six horse power engine. I went rather prepared to jeer at what I thought would be a useless toy, but I came away thinking that there was a great deal more in this idea than I had thought when I started on my flight. At present they fly possibly 40 miles an hour, but on a windy day a strong man on a bicycle can pass underneath. But we are getting beyond that.

There is undoubtedly a future for these aeroplanes. At present they cannot be flown without the special permission of the Department, because they cannot reach certain operational figures for which there is a stipulation of the international convention at Geneva, neither can they be made at a reasonable price because of the heavy charges of the Government standards for military and other large aeroplanes imposed during manufacture. These aeroplanes are supposed to be dangerous to fly because you cannot get them over a certain height within a certain distance, but you can take one of them into a field of 150 yards with high trees all round and you can get in and out of that field by a corkscrew flight.

The present restrictions are definitely inelastic. They are based on legislation which was passed when none of us knew what the development of flying would be. In seconding this Amendment I ask that there should be two things considered—the possibility of the extension of the subsidies to the maximum number of flying clubs, the possibility of the extension of the subsidy so as to enable more young men to fly and so make it a more democratic movement, and the setting up of a committee, not a private committee which works within the walls of the Ministry, but a committee which will have the confidence of all private owners of aircraft and of the aircraft industry and whose findings will be recognised by this House as authoritative findings—a committee to go into the question of the restrictions on the aircraft industry in making machines for private flying, and the question of compulsory third party insurance. I hope that the Amendment will have the sympathy of the whole House.

10.15 p.m.

Mr. PERKINS: I am opposed to the Amendment not because I disagree with the principle but because I disagree with the way in which the principle of these subsidies has been put into practice by the Air Minister. This large increase in the subsidies is unjustified, and unnecessary. I believe that the light aeroplane club movement can fly without any subsidies, without any help at all from the Government. We have been told over and over again in the past, in this House and in the country, that the fundamental reason for these subsidies was to encourage the British public to become air-minded. What exactly is this disease of air-mindedness? I should like to have a definition of this mysterious and elusive disease. It is rather like foot-and-mouth disease; no one has yet defined it. And we are asked to spend £20,000 of the taxpayers' money at a time when we have not money enough to pay unemployment insurance benefit, when we cannot pay the police or the Civil Service. We are asked to vote £20,000 in order to inoculate the general public of this country with this mysterious germ of air-mindedness.

I claim that there is no justification whatever for these subsidies to the light aeroplane movement, in order to inoculate the public with this germ. If you want to make the general public take an interest in questions affecting the air, it would be far better to subsidise some form of travelling circus, such as was headed by Sir Alan Cobham some time ago, which actually got into the industrial areas, reached the large towns, and thus came into contact with the masses of the people, whereas this light aeroplane movement only touches a fringe of the population, at the outside 3,000 people. I should like to congratulate the hon. Member for Cambridge University (Mr. Wilson) on having come out into the open with the brave and gallant statement he has put on the Paper in this Amendment, that the real and fundamental reason for these subsidies now, and in the past, was to make sure that in this country we had a substantial reserve of war pilots for war purposes. Let me congratulate him on laying the bogey of air mindedness, and upon coming into the open and telling the truth. Of course the subsidies have been provided in the past for three purposes—one, to provide reserves, two, to provide a large number of aerodromes which can be used in time of war, and, thirdly, to keep our manufacturers busy in order to have a skeleton organisation which might be increased if we were unfortunately dragged into war.

[Mr. Perkins.]

I propose to examine the position with regard to the granting of these subsidies. Who are the people who can claim them? Who gets the subsidy? Who can get the subsidy? Any man or woman over the age of 18 years, provided they are physically fit, and provided they can get a pilot's licence, can get the subsidy, or rather the club to which they are attached can get the subsidy, and the result is that you have women and men of all ages, totally unfit for any war service, getting these subsidies. If a man aged 100 likes to go to a light aeroplane club and get a pilot's licence, and there is no reason why he should not do so, that club gets a subsidy from the Government, and the British taxpayer has to pay. I suggest that no man or woman should get a subsidy who is over the age of 50. He can be of no use to the country in time of war. He is over war age and to go on handing over subsidies to men, irrespective of age, is indefensible.

I now come to the very important question of women. I know that a large number of Members of this House believe that woman's place is the home, but I dissociate myself from that view. I have no objection to lady pilots flying in the air. My quarrel with the present system is that to give lady pilots these public monies, in the hope that they would be of some use to the country in time of war, cannot be justified. Women pilots could not be used by us in time of war because we are tied by international agreements on the subject. There is a third type—the average pilot. The average man goes to a flying club, learns to fly and flies, perhaps, for 15 or 16 hours. He gets his licence and, from that moment, the club loses all interest in him. There is no more money to be got in respect of him. They do not encourage him to go on flying and when he has done perhaps four or five hours more, he drops out altogether. It will be found, between these three categories, that 90 per cent. of the money now spent on teaching the general public to fly is sheer waste and that the country is only getting benefit to the extent of 10 or 15 per cent. of the pilots turned out under this system.

If my hon. Friend insists that this money should continue to be paid out, I earnestly implore him to consider barring women pilots, all men pilots over the age of 50, and all pilots who have not flown at least 25 hours every year. I would like to see all these subsidies abolished. If that were done we would have a howl or a loud squeal from the clubs involved, but when one faces the facts, one realises that out of 30 clubs in this country 14 get no subsidy at all and if 14 exist without help from my hon. Friend, it is only logical to demand that the other 16 should also exist without subsidy. If 14 can exist without subsidy surely every single flying club can do likewise. I give one simple illustration. At Reading aerodrome there are two clubs. Both have been there for four years. One of these clubs receives a subsidy or received it until last September, and the other never had a subsidy at all. They use the same aerodrome, fly the same machines, are among the same people and are in acute competition. Yet the club that receives the subsidy has gone down every year, whereas the club which has not received any subsidy has gone forward by leaps and bounds.

I submit that it is unnecessary to give any of these clubs any subsidy from now onwards, and as I say, I would like to see subsidies abolished. At the same time, I support the plea so ably put forward by my hon. and gallant Friend the Member for Thanet (Captain Balfour) that some of the present restrictions should be removed from the light aeroplane club movement. As he has pointed out, a new kind of light aeroplane is coming forward—almost a glider, with a motor cycle engine. It costs about £200 or less. It has been said of these machines that "they stall not, neither do they spin." I am informed, although I have not had the luck to fly one—owing to the restrictions imposed by my hon. Friend's Department—that they are absolutely fool-proof, and that it is almost impossible to kill one's self in one of these machines. Here is a machine coming forward which I think will eventually become the motor-cycle of the air. It will provide very cheap flying for the masses of the country, and it is foolish to impose on these machines the same restrictions and the same standard of quality which are imposed on the faster machines which are capable of flying round the world. I should like to see all the irksome restrictions and the subsidies removed, and civil aviation will be very much better off.

May I put in a plea for the private owner? I claim that from the point of view of war purposes the private owner will be of more use than any of the other types that I have mentioned. First of all, he buys the machine, and by doing that provides the aircraft industry with work. Secondly, he flies in all weathers. He does not fly only in good weather as we very often find at the light aeroplane clubs where the chief instructor does not want to risk his machines flying in doubtful weather. We find as a general rule that clubs only fly in good weather, and much the same thing is true in the Air Force. They do fly in doubtful weather but, if it is really doubtful, the officer of the aerodrome orders no flying because he does not want to risk human life. The private owner, however, if he wishes to go to his constituency or to a friend in another part of the country, will, although there is a wedge of dirty weather, very often try to get through and does get through. If you really want to find 10 pilots whom you could trust to get through in any weather, you could not do better than take your pick from some of the private owners. I would like to point out one rather interesting fact about private owners. If hon. Members will read the British register of aircraft, they will find that out of 921 light aeroplanes only 60 are owned by subsidised light aeroplane clubs, and 450, or nearly eight times that number, are owned by private individuals—in other words, eight to one. Surely, therefore, it is only common sense to stop encouraging by subsidies the light aeroplane club and to concentrate instead on the private owner who has already shown that he is efficient and capable of existing without any subsidy at all.

I would like to draw the attention of the House to another side of the question. We have often been told by our war-minded pacifists that the aeroplane is essentially an instrument of war. It is perfectly true that anything that flies can drop a bomb. I am prepared to admit that, but I also claim that the aeroplane which is in private hands, although it is a possible instrument of war, is also an instrument of peace. A large number of British pilots in a rapidly increasing number go year after year across to the Continent. They go round Europe, jumping over barriers of one kind and another, flying over frontiers, making friends here and there, and thoroughly enjoying themselves because of the freedom and simplicity of the life, accepting people's hospitality and getting to know and to understand the difficulties of other people and other countries.

This flying abroad will eventually do a great deal in the interests, not of war, but of peace. British pilots last September sent out a request to all foreign private owners and asked them to come to this country for a week-end. About 50 or 60 accepted, they came here, we gave them our best, we entertained them for three or four days, and gave them an extraordinarily good time. It did not cost them a penny, and they went back thoroughly satisfied with Great Britain. These little trips up and down the Continent, and these friendly parties in all parts of the world, will do a great deal for the cause of peace. Already the countries in Europe are to the amateur pilot like the English counties are to the motor cycle fiend or to the motorist. One day last year I myself, coming back from Constantinople, without any effort at all, without even hurrying, had breakfast in one capital, had lunch in a second capital, had tea in a third and dined in a fourth—and I never hurried once. That is possible now and I ask hon. Members to visualise what we shall see in the future. When we can buy an aeroplane for a few hundred pounds hon. Members, instead of going to Brighton for week-ends, will go off to Vienna, or to Rome or to Madrid. Will not that result in a better understanding of the troubles of other peoples and other countries; will it not tend to reduce international friction; will it not finally wipe away all the barriers and all the frontiers which at present exist? I believe it will.

[Mr. Perkins.]

I believe that light aeroplanes, particularly the one owned by the private owner, to be one of the greatest instruments for peace in the world at the moment, and I do hope that my hon. Friend will encourage it by every means in his power. There is one respect in which the Air Ministry could encourage this development of flying. When we go abroad we often find ourselves in difficulties. For Austria and Spain it is necessary to get certain permits, to get visas, to take passports and to get carnets, and I would ask the hon. Member whether he cannot take a bold lead in saying to other countries that we will relieve their pilots of all these irksome restrictions when they visit us if they will do the same for British pilots visiting their country. All those restrictions will have to go in time, they cannot stand for ever. They will have to go in the same way as the turnpike roads or the red flag in front of the early motor vehicles have gone.

Sir P. SASSOON: I think it will be agreed by all hon. Members that this has been a very useful and enjoyable Debate. I confess that I was surprised to hear my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud (Mr. Perkins) inquiring how we could create air-mindedness, because I thought his speech, in which he described air parties, and pilots going from one country to the other and making friends everywhere, was a good example of the means of creating air-mindedness. That is what we are trying to do. The light aeroplane movement is one in which the Air Ministry has always taken the greatest possible interest. From the start we have done everything we possibly can, so far as finance would allow, to help that movement and foster it. In 1923-24, when there was no such thing as a light aeroplane at all, we did a very reprehensible thing in the eyes of the hon. Member, we actually went so far as to give prizes to stimulate the industry and to act as a competitive spur in the production of light aeroplanes. In the summer of 1925 we introduced the first scheme for giving financial assistance to a limited number of clubs, since the Air Ministry was desirous of bringing flying within the range of the man in the street, and clubs afforded the only means by which he could possibly learn to fly.

I will not trouble the House with the details of successive schemes introduced since that date, but will only say that when last year we were satisfied that the existing subsidies were not sufficient we introduced one on more generous lines. The grant for each pilot trained by one of these clubs has increased as much as 150 per cent. We anticipate that during the current year these clubs will earn twice as much as they earned last year. The figure shows an increase to £20,000, and in times like these that is a very practical manifestation of the interest the Air Ministry takes in this movement. We hope to reduce expenditure, in order to make the money go as far as we possibly can.

It has been suggested that we started this movement with some militaristic idea at the back of our minds. That is not so. These people get no military training. The movement has been started entirely to encourage people to make use of the new and young form of transport. Technically, we lead the world. I do not think that I need say anything more about the part that we are playing in fostering the light aeroplane movement. We have done as much as we possibly can in that direction. The hon. and gallant Member for Thanet (Captain H. Balfour), who seconded the Amendment, raised the point about the inelasticity of the restrictions that are imposed upon civil flying, and he suggested that a committee might be appointed to look into the matter. It is a most interesting suggestion, and I will certainly convey it to my Noble Friend.

Mr. G. WILSON: In view of the statement that has been made by the Under-Secretary of State for Air, I beg to ask the leave of the House to withdraw my Amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Question put, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair."

The House divided: Ayes, 249; Noes, 35.

Division No. 81.] AYES. [10.37 p.m.

Acland-Troyte, Lieut.-Colonel
Agnew, Lieut.-Com. P. G.
Albery, Irving James
Allen, William (Stoke-on-Trent)
Anstruther-Gray, W. J.
Aske, Sir Robert William
Astbury, Lieut.-Com. Frederick Wolfe
Atkinson, Cyril
Baillie, Sir Adrian W. M.
Baldwin, Rt. Hon. Stanley
Balfour, Capt. Harold (I. of Thanet)
Banks, Sir Reginald Mitchell
Barclay-Harvey, C. M.
Barrie, Sir Charles Coupar
Bateman, A. L.
Beaumont, Hon. R.E.B. (Portsm'th,C.)
Belt, Sir Alfred L.
Bevan, Stuart James (Holborn)
Bird, Ernest Roy (Yorks., Skipton)
Blindell, James
Borodale, Viscount
Bossom, A. C.
Boulton, W. W.
Bowyer, Capt. Sir George E. W.
Braithwaite, J. G. (Hillsborough)
Broadbent, Colonel John
Brocklebank, C. E. R.
Brown, Col. D. C. (N'th'l'd., Hexham)
Brown, Ernest (Leith)
Browne, Captain A. C.
Buchan, John
Buchan-Hepburn, P. G. T.
Burghley, Lord
Burgin, Dr. Edward Leslie
Burnett, John George
Caporn, Arthur Cecil
Carver, Major William H.
Castlereagh, Viscount
Chapman, Col. R.(Houghton-le-Spring)
Christie, James Archibald
Churchill, Rt. Hon. Winston Spencer
Clarry, Reginald George
Clayton, Dr. George C.
Cobb, Sir Cyril
Cochrane, Commander Hon. A. D.
Colfox, Major William Philip
Colman, N. C. D.
Colville, Lieut.-Colonel J.
Conant, R. J. E.
Cook, Thomas A.
Cooke, Douglas
Copeland, Ida
Craddock, Sir Reginald Henry
Craven-Ellis, William
Crooke, J. Smedley
Crookshank, Col. C. de Windt (Bootle)
Cruddas, Lieut.-Colonel Bernard
Davies, Maj. Geo. F.(Somerset,Yeovil)
Dickie, John P.
Doran, Edward
Drewe, Cedric
Duckworth, George A. V.
Duggan, Hubert John
Duncan, James A. L. (Kensington, N.)
Dunglass, Lord
Eastwood, John Francis
Ellis, Sir R. Geoffrey
Elliston, Captain George Sampson
Elmley, Viscount
Emrys-Evans, P. V.
Entwistle, Cyril Fullard
Erskine, Lord (Weston-super-Mare)
Essenhigh, Reginald Clare
Evans, Capt. Ernest (Welsh Univ.)
Everard, W. Lindsay

Fleming, Edward Lascelles
Ford, Sir Patrick J.
Fremantle, Sir Francis
Fuller, Captain A. G.
Ganzoni, Sir John
Gibson, Charles Granville
Gillett, Sir George Masterman
Gledhill, Gilbert
Glossop, C. W. H.
Gluckstein, Louis Halle
Goldie, Noel B.
Goodman, Colonel Albert W.
Graham, Sir F. Fergus (C'mb'rl'd, N.)
Greene, William P. C.
Gretton, Colonel Rt. Hon. John
Grimston, R. V.
Gritten, W. G. Howard
Guinness, Thomas L. E. B.
Guy, J. C. Morrison
Hacking, Rt. Hon. Douglas H.
Hales, Harold K.
Hall, Capt. W. D'Arcy (Brecon)
Hanbury, Cecil
Hanley, Dennis A.
Harbord, Arthur
Hartland, George A.
Harvey, Major S. E. (Devon, Totnes)
Haslam, Sir John (Bolton)
Heilgers, Captain F. F. A.
Henderson, Sir Vivian L. (Chelmsford)
Heneage, Lieut.-Colonel Arthur P.
Hope, Capt. Hon. A. O. J. (Aston)
Hornby, Frank
Howitt, Dr. Alfred B.
Hudson, Capt. A. U. M. (Hackney, N.)
Hurd, Sir Percy
Hutchison, W. D. (Essex, Romf'd)
Jackson, Sir Henry (Wandsworth, C.)
Jesson, Major Thomas E.
Joel, Dudley J. Barnato
Johnston, J. W. (Clackmannan)
Johnstone, Harcourt (S. Shields)
Jones, Henry Haydn (Merioneth)
Jones, Lewis (Swansea, West)
Ker, J. Campbell
Kerr, Lieut.-Col. Charles (Montrose)
Kerr, Hamilton W.
Knox, Sir Alfred
Lamb, Sir Joseph Quinton
Latham, Sir Herbert Paul
Law, Sir Alfred
Law, Richard K. (Hull, S.W.)
Leckie, J. A.
Leech, Dr. J. W.
Lees-Jones, John
Leighton, Major B. E. P.
Lennox-Boyd, A. T.
Lewis, Oswald
Liddall, Walter S.
Lindsay, Noel Ker
Little, Graham-, Sir Ernest
Llewellin, Major John J.
Llewellyn-Jones, Frederick
Lloyd, Geoffrey
Lockwood, John C. (Hackney, C.)
Lockwood, Capt. J. H. (Shipley)
Lovat-Fraser, James Alexander
MacAndrew, Lieut.-Col. C. G. (Partick)
McCorquodale, M. S.
McEwen, Captain J. H. F.
McKie, John Hamilton
McLean, Dr. W. H. (Tradeston)
Macmillan, Maurice Harold
Mallalieu, Edward Lancelot
Margesson, Capt. Rt. Hon. H. D. R.

Marsden, Commander Arthur
Martin, Thomas B.
Mayhew, Lieut.-Colonel John
Merriman, Sir F. Boyd
Mills, Major J. D. (New Forest)
Mitchell, Harold P. (Br'tf'd & Chisw'k)
Mitcheson, G. G.
Moreing, Adrian C.
Morris, Owen Temple (Cardiff, E.)
Morrison, William Shepherd
Moss, Captain H. J.
Muirhead, Major A. J.
Munro, Patrick
Nation, Brigadier-General J. J. H.
Nicholson, Godfrey (Morpeth)
Normand, Wilfrid Guild
Nunn, William
O'Connor, Terence James
O'Donovan, Dr. William James
Oman, Sir Charles William C.
Palmer, Francis Noel
Patrick, Colin M.
Pearson, William G.
Peat, Charles U.
Percy, Lord Eustace
Perkins, Walter R. D.
Petherick, M.
Peto, Geoffrey K.(W'verh'pt'n, Bilst'n)
Pickford, Hon. Mary Ada
Pike, Cecil F.
Powell, Lieut.-Col. Evelyn G. H.
Raikes, Henry V. A. M.
Ramsay, Capt. A. H. M. (Midlothian)
Ramsay, T. B. W. (Western Isles)
Ramsden, Sir Eugene
Ratcliffe, Arthur
Ray, Sir William
Reed, Arthur C. (Exeter)
Reid, David D. (County Down)
Reid, James S. C. (Stirling)
Reid, William Allan (Derby)
Remer, John R.
Rhys, Hon. Charles Arthur U.
Roberts, Aled (Wrexham)
Robinson, John Roland
Ropner, Colonel L.
Rosbotham, Sir Samuel
Ross Taylor, Walter (Woodbridge)
Runge, Norah Cecil
Russell, Richard John (Eddisbury)
Rutherford, John (Edmonton)
Rutherford, Sir John Hugo (Liverp'l)
Salmon, Sir Isidore
Salt, Edward W.
Samuel, Samuel (W'dsworth, Putney)
Sandeman, Sir A. N. Stewart
Sassoon, Rt. Hon. Sir Philip A. G. D.
Selley, Harry R.
Shakespeare, Geoffrey H.
Shaw, Helen B. (Lanark, Bothwell)
Shepperson, Sir Ernest W.
Shute, Colonel J. J.
Simmonds, Oliver Edwin
Skelton, Archibald Noel
Smiles, Lieut.-Col. Sir Walter D.
Smith, Louis W. (Sheffield, Hallam)
Somervell, Donald Bradley
Somerville, Annesley A. (Windsor)
Somerville, D. G. (Willesden, East)
Spears, Brigadier-General Edward L.
Spencer, Captain Richard A.
Stewart, J. H. (Fife, E.)
Strauss, Edward A.
Strickland, Captain W. F.
Sueter, Rear-Admiral Murray F.

Sugden, Sir Wilfrid Hart
Sutcliffe, Harold
Templeton, William P.
Thomas, James P. L. (Hereford)
Thomson, Sir Frederick Charles
Thorp, Linton Theodore
Titchfield, Major the Marquess of
Touche, Gordon Cosmo
Tryon, Rt. Hon. George Clement
Wallace, John (Dunfermline)
Wardlaw-Milne, Sir John S.
Warrender, Sir Victor A. G.
Wedderburn, Henry James Scrymgeour-
Wells, Sydney Richard
Weymouth, Viscount
White, Henry Graham
Whiteside, Borras Noel H.
Whyte, Jardine Bell
Williams, Charles (Devon, Torquay)
Williams, Herbert G. (Croydon, S.)
Wills, Wilfrid D.
Wilson, G. H. A. (Cambridge U.)
Windsor-Clive, Lieut.-Colonel George
Young, Rt. Hon. Sir Hilton (S'v'noaks)

TELLERS FOR THE AYES.—
Sir George Penny and Commander Southby.

NOES.

Adams, D. M (Poplar South)
Attlee, Clement Richard
Batey, Joseph
Buchanan, George
Cape, Thomas
Cocks, Frederick Seymour
Cove, William G.
Cripps, Sir Stafford
Daggar, George
Davies, David L. (Pontypridd)
Dobbie, William
Edwards, Charles
Grenfell, David Rees (Glamorgan)
Griffiths, T. (Monmouth, Pontypool)
Grundy, Thomas W.
Hall, F. (York, W.R., Normanton)
Hall, George H. (Merthyr Tydvil)
Hicks, Ernest George
Hirst, George Henry
Jenkins, Sir William
Jones, Morgan (Caerphilly)
Kirkwood, David
Lansbury, Rt. Hon. George
Logan, David Gilbert
Lunn, William
McEntee, Valentine L.
McGovern, John
Maxton, James
Milner, Major James
Parkinson, John Allen
Tinker, John Joseph
Williams, David (Swansea, East)
Williams, Edward John (Ogmore)
Williams, Dr. John H. (Llanelly)
Williams, Thomas (York, Don Valley)

TELLERS FOR THE NOES.—
Mr. John and Mr. G. Macdonald.

Supply accordingly considered in Committee.

[Captain BOURNE in the Chair.]

NUMBER OF ROYAL AIR FORCE.

Motion made and Question proposed,

"That a number of Air Forces, not exceeding 31,000, all ranks, be maintained for the Service of the United Kingdom at Home and abroad, exclusive of those serving in India (other than Aden), during the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1934."

10.47 p.m.

Mr. McGOVERN: I beg to move to reduce the Vote by 30,000 men.

We move this Amendment as a matter of principle. Each year on some occasion members of the Independent Labour party have moved a reduction in some of the armed forces of the Crown. We are not advancing this reduction because we are inspired by pacifist or non-resistance philosophy but on a Socialist and anti-Capitalist basis. I do not say that in a contemptuous way, because we have absolute respect for those who are moved from that point of view, but we do not believe in absolute pacifism, although it is an ideal to struggle for. We believe that the armed forces as used in the air are being organised and will ultimately be used for the purpose of suppressing the workers in other lands and as an ultimate competitive instrument in the struggle of rival capitalists. I have listened to almost the whole of the discussion that has taken place to-day and, if there was not the other tragic and brutal side of the use of this force, one could have admired the splendid oration of the Minister in presenting the Estimates, because it was an oratorical feat of the very first magnitude. When one heard afterwards the various tales of romanticism that came from many young men in pleading for aerial clubs and so forth, one knew that behind all this romanticism there was the inevitable tragedy and brutality lurking in the building up of a force of this description in this country and in every country in the civilised world.

I have followed closely the course of events in connection with every advance made in aviation, whether it was made by a Smith, a Hinckler, an Amy Johnson or any other person who was engaged in blazing the trail of what might be termed civil aviation. I have always been fired with enthusiasm at the exploits of those individuals, and if one were to confine one's feelings to that aspect and knew that the Air Force was only for the purpose of getting into touch with various parts of the world, to bring a civilising influence and to rescue people and bring succour in distress, as the Minister said, then one could, in this House and in the country, view with a tremendous amount of admiration the work in which these men are engaged. One knows, however, that ultimately this force is going to be used for the purpose of a more terrific warfare than that which took place in the late war.

It is being advanced in this House that we must organise this Air Force for the purpose of defence, but is not that just the argument put forward by every country in the world, by their Air Ministers, and by their statesmen in various assemblies? They all say that they are organising for the purpose of defence, for the defence of the food supplies of the nation, of the women and children and the lives of the common people of each country. They go on building and piling up armaments, whether it be in the Air Forces, in the Navies or Armies, for the purpose of ultimate destruction of human lives throughout the world. Is this a time to come forward and tell us that our 100 per cent. efficient Air Force is going to ensure peace in a world which to-day is struggling with a tremendous amount of nationalism, mad nationalism that has overcome the world as the result of the great struggle from 1914 to 1918? Then you tell us that this efficient force will preserve peace. We are told that we are only fifth in the list in regard to the strength of world air forces, and it is being advanced by a large number of hon. Members that we ought to take our place at the head of the fighting forces of the world with an efficient air force to be used either to destroy another enemy force or to repel an enemy force if it should attempt to invade this country.

One knows from experience and from powers of reasoning that the League of Nations certainly cannot prevent war taking place. I say this only for the purpose of illustration. The League was created because the outcome of the world war had made the people of that period sick and tired of the very idea of war. The statesmen who created it made promises to the common people of all countries that it was a war to end war. As the outcome of that people said, "Well, prove to us that this is going to be the last war that will take place in a civilised community, and we will believe that the men and women who gave their lives, the men who were blinded and driven insane, the men who had both arms and legs blown off in some cases and were disembowelled, those who suffered this tremendous ordeal in battle did not make that tremendous sacrifice in vain, if it has ensured the end of all war." Then the statesmen, driven from their usual device of subterfuge by the increased reasoning powers and conscience of the people, were driven to the alternative of attempting to set up an assembly representative of the various countries of the world to create the feeling that they were attempting to ensure peace, when they knew that a creation of that character, in a world where capitalism remained supreme, could not ensure peace in any shape or form.

An hon. Member said in connection with this discussion, "I am neither an expert nor a disarmament crank." I would point out to the hon. Member who used that phrase that those who are experts are mostly bordering upon disarmament cranks because of the experience they have undergone in the late War. We are told that we have to establish and build up a force of that character for peaceful pursuits. It is impossible. Let me take a quotation from the famous speech of the Lord President of the Council which he made on 10th November last. He said:

> "I think it is well also for the man-in-the-street to realise that there is no power on earth that can protect him from being bombed. Whatever people may tell him, the bomber will always get through."

Later on he said:

> "The only defence is in offence which means that you have to kill more women and children more quickly than the enemy if you want to save yourselves."—[OFFICIAL REPORT, 10th November, 1932; col. 632, Vol. 270.]

We are establishing, in the words of the Lord President of the Council, a force which will ultimately, if used in warfare, set out from this country and various points of vantage in the Empire to destroy women and children more quickly than the enemy can in order to protect what? To protect the well-being of the lives of the common people? No. To protect private property. An hon. Member on the opposite side shakes his head in disgust. Let me tell him that the ordinary man-in-the-street has no quarrel with his fellow-men in other parts of the world. He does not go to France, Spain, Egypt or any other part to destroy human beings because he wishes to destroy them. He does it because governments and private interests clash with those of other countries with regard to trade routes, raw materials or something of that character. Then the statesmen who have made secret pacts with other nations declare war and call upon the working class to implement the secret promises which they have made in times of peace. No man in this House can tell me that war is anything of a civilising nature. Every person who knows anything of war and has seen the victims of war cannot but be antagonistic to the idea of another world war, on which, I believe, we are on the eve.

[Mr. McGovern.]

It is a lamentable thing, after 2,000 years of so-called Christianity that we should be told by all responsible people that we are on the eve of a greater blood bath than anything which has been experienced in any period of history. Why are we on the eve of war? Is it to advance civilisation? Is it to bring security to people who are starving because of poverty and misery? Is it for any of these things that we are going out to destroy human life, to live like beasts and burrow in trenches as men did in bygone days? Is it for those purposes we are going to war? It is not for those purposes at all. To-day, in a world where you cannot get security of food, clothing and shelter, we are told that we are on the eve of another world war in order to ensure greater prosperity for a small class of the community. We refuse to believe that the development of this force in aviation will ensure security for the lives of the common people. A man who is living under the means test can look with contempt on any idea of invasion from a foreign Power. What could any foreign Power do? By aviation or other armed force a foreign Power could only invade and take possession of this country. Do those on the Front Bench or any Member of this House think that an intelligent, reasonable human being who is living in poverty fears invasion and the establishment of a Kaiser or a Hitler in this country, when we are living under Hitlerism just as extreme as in any other part of the world? The working classes are not afraid of that in any shape or form.

If a foreign Power, either by aeroplane or by any other armed force, captured this country and wanted to ensure the rights of private property, I cannot imagine a more efficient Government for robbing the poor than that we have in office at the present time. I cannot imagine them choosing any other set of men. Therefore, if by 20,000, 30,000 or 40,000 aeroplanes a foreign Power was able to establish control here, that would be nothing to be afraid of. We were told by the Lord President of the Council that to resist would mean death to tens of thousands of women and children in every area. Therefore the policy of non-resistance, if it is to be a choice between one capitalist section or another, would be the very policy that ought to be adopted by the working class. The idea of patriotism or of nationalism burning in the breasts of mankind to defend himself in this country by keeping the present Cabinet as against another Cabinet of the ruling class, is opposed by every reasonable-minded person in any part of the world.

We say, quite frankly, that we are opposed to your force. I would oppose in this House, even if it meant security of employment for people on the Clyde, the building of cruisers. I would vote against the building of cruisers even if I knew that men were anxious for employment in the building of these death-dealing instruments. It has come to a fine pass when in our civilised existence, in order to get bread, we have to pray to build death-dealing instruments of warfare that will destroy human life. I say to hon. Members opposite that they have created, by a great deal of evolution, a machine that is deadly and brutal in its effects. They fear the machine that they have created. They fear that they may require to use it. No person would advance in this House as a reason for the creation of the force of aviation that it was only for civil purposes. Every person speaks of the possibility of using it in the future for war. One hon. Member, a retired Admiral, said that the aeroplane is a humane method of dealing with outbreaks. I would like to have a chance of throwing a bomb at his back as he walks out of this House, and see how he would like that humane method of dealing with people. This humane method of destroying life is something similar to what we heard during the late War, when the newspapers said that the Germans were afraid of the bayonet. Every reasonable-minded man would be afraid of the bayonet, just as every intelligent human being would be afraid of a bomb. How any person can say that a bomb is a very fine method of quelling outbreaks, I cannot understand.

The hon. Member for East Wolverhampton (Mr. Mander) talked about economy in the use of the bomb for the aeroplane as against sending land forces, and he said in effect, " You can kill them more speedily; it costs less per head to ll them by the bomb.” Yes, the tionalisation of the fighting forces or eath-dealing instruments. That was in ffect what he said, that you could kill uch more cheaply by this Liberal method han by the other methods. If that is he type of mind that we have in this ouse, it is no wonder that we are drifting into the state of tragedy and darkness that the world is drifting into now, hen they come to this House and talk a cool manner like that of quelling utbreaks. What do they mean by uelling outbreaks? Do they mean that ou send out to India bombing machines bomb the natives of India, whose ountry you are invading with your bombing machines and in whose country you re preventing the natives from setting p a decent form of government to rule emselves? Yes, my intelligent Friends, know it is the idea that you are the nly civilised, reasonable people in the orld, that it is your function to bring ivilisation to the poor natives of every art of the world. By God, you have rought this civilisation to a fine state in his country when you have reduced illions of human beings to a point where hey wish they were dead rather than live in your civilised system of society. ou talk of intelligence. It is simply the dea of the bully who believes he is intelligent when he is using the whip on he poor native boy.

It is thought to be all right to talk n that manner about using bombs on ndians and coolies. They were given fe equally with you, and God intended hat they should have the same rights nd feelings as you, the right to a share n the earth, but you have no right to orner all the materials of the earth and hen to attempt to preserve them by orce to the exclusion of every other section of the community. Then you rumble of other people trying to play he same game as you have played. You ave all talked of Hitler and Mussolini, ut your dictatorship is more silent and unning than Hitlerism in Germany or Mussolinism in Italy. That is all that ou can advance from the Liberal benches, to quell tribes in Egypt, India, Persia and Afghanistan who may be rebelling against foreign rule, the foreign oke. You who talk about Kaiserism eing imposed on you, impose your Kaiserism on the people in every other part of the world. It is brazen effrontery of the worst kind to sit on the Liberal benches and talk in that contemptuous manner about natives in different parts of the world. I was amazed and horrified to hear a statement of that character coming from the hon. Member for East Wolverhampton. We might have expected it from a retired general or a retired admiral, but from a man who sits in the security and seclusion of this House to come out with a statement of that kind is brutal in the extreme.

I stand here, not as a pacifist; I stand here as a human being, who is always prepared to defend his rights, and would be delighted to defend a country in which the whole of the people had a stake and that was being invaded by another force which wanted to prevent the communal ownership of the means of life. A country which looked upon the security and well-being of the citizens as its first charge, I would say was a State worth defending, but a State that treats its people with contempt, that reduces them to poverty, that degrades its womanhood, that breaks up the homes and destroys the lives of children—I say to you frankly that I have nothing but contempt for your system, for your Government, and for rule of that kind. I stand here to-night saying that I support this Motion whole-heartedly, as an individual who believes that your force is destined to wage terrible war on men, women, and children of other nations. Recognising that you are heading for war I ask Members of the House with reason, intelligence and consciousness to go into the Lobby for the reduction of this Force from 31,000 to 1,000, which is tantamount to the wiping out of the entire Force.

11.10 p.m.

Mr. BUCHANAN: I do not propose to detain the Committee long.

HON. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BUCHANAN: I hope that hon. Members of the Conservative party who have been longest in the House realise that our capacity to keep them sitting late is not limited by the smallness of our numbers. It is cheeky and offensive to cry “Hear, hear.” It is quite easy for any hon. Member who is one in hundreds, but I am only one in four. I support this Amendment because I believe it is the right thing to do. Our views are the same on each of the fighting Services, but we do not wish to inconvenience Members by having more than one Division, as that will suffice to provide a vote on what to us is a matter of principle. We are entitled to state our case. I have listened to almost every speech in this Debate, and I confess that the speeches to-day have reached a higher level than those in the Debates on any of the fighting Services. I never thought that the Under-Secretary could speak as he spoke to-day. I thought his was a brilliant speech, from his own point of view, and that other speeches were very ably delivered.

[Mr. Buchanan.]

What is our case? We on these benches think that we represent very poor people. Even if we risk unpopularity we think it wrong for us to neglect our duty in this House. What is our duty? I remember my predecessor in this House, Mr. George Barnes. He was a man of honesty and integrity, and he parted from the Labour party at the time of the War. He succeeded in getting the people in my division to support the War. He did it honestly. They were told that if they voted for him and pursued the War it was the last war, and that never more would the people from the slums be asked to go out again and take part in the slaughter. These men in their tens of thousands left everything. I do not say that the rich did not make sacrifices, that they did not show valour and bravery, but the sacrifice made by the poor people was far more. When a rich man was killed his dependants were not faced with poverty, as was the case when a poor man was killed. These poor people left the slums, left houses which were not worth defending in order to go out and fight. To-day we are asked to spend more on the air. Why? Because you are to fight another war. Your army is no longer efficient, your navy is no longer the key power it was; and we have to spend more on the air. The pledges made to these poor men and women have been broken. It does not matter whether the blame is ours or somebody else's, the fact of the matter is that these poor people are being called upon to get ready for another war. What is the reason for war? The military reason is that it is to make the nation secure. It may be that the other nation is the aggressor, but even so the reason given for an army and an air force is to make the nation secure. What does security mean? For the ordinary man it means his home, his wife, his bairns. You are going to ask these folk to fight for security when to-day thousands of them have not security in their homes to-day. What right have you to ask them to fight for security when you cannot give them security in their homes?

Yesterday I stood in a Glasgow court, packed with hundreds of souls, everyone of whom was fighting to keep his house. If a German or a Japanese came to-morrow they could not inflict greater hardships on these people. I remember that when I was about seven or eight years old being carried by my mother out of the house late at night because the fear of the sheriff's officer was greater than the fear of Germans or foreigners. Who is it that joins the Army in peace time? If you are to have an Army it is important to have an Army in peace times as well as in war. Who joins the Army now in times of peace? Leave out the officers, who joins the rank and file? Are they the sons of Members of Parliament, of doctors, of teachers, or even of artisans who are in work? Not one in one hundred belong to those classes. I stood on Saturday last in Bath Street, Glasgow, and saw hundreds of young men—well perhaps that is an exaggeration, but at least 30 or 40—waiting their turn to join. Years ago, when trade was good it was almost necessary to go out and haul them in. These were the sons of the poorest section of the community—the sons of those to whom you will not give security in their homes. They are being asked to defend their homes, but you will not give them homes. It is wrong for me or for any of us to ask these people to do what we would not do ourselves. I do not speak for Conservative Members; I know that their view is different from mine, but, from what I know of my own class and of the ideas of the comfortably-placed workman, I say that not one of us would wish to see a son joining the Army as an ordinary soldier. Working people would go on their bended knees to keep their sons from joining.

These young men join, not because the sons of the working class are more bloodthirsty than the sons of the middle ass, but for a very different cause. The oung fellow of 18 or 19 wants fun and e only joins because there is no other fe open to him. It is almost too cruel picture a nation refusing these people eir unemployment benefit, or cutting down, and at the same time asking em, nay, forcing them into the Army what is worse than conscription—the rror of want. You give them no home fe and you ask them to defend a country which they have no economic say, in hich they can play no effective part at l. For those reasons we oppose the ote, and for my part I have always one so in the case of Army, Navy and ir Force alike. I say from my conituents' point of view, that if the nation uarantees to the folk whom I represent ecent homes and decent conditions of fe, then I may reconsider my opinion. ut while my folk live in want, almost in estitution, I could not recommend them join. An hon. Member said that they ould be killed at home if they did not o out to fight and defend themselves. o my people, and I share this view with em, death has no great terrors. What life to them? It is nothing, and they ave no great fear of being killed. For any of them life holds only one hope, nd that is death. For our part, we shall o into the Lobby to vote against the ation spending these millions for war nstead of leaving the nation reasonably rganised, decently and socially minded, vote its resources and its capacity, ot for destruction, but for the uplifting f humanity.

1.26 p.m.

Mr. LANSBURY: Hon. Members who it here——[HON. MEMBERS: "Where re they?"] I suppose where many f you have been all the evening. I know is late, but I am going to say what propose to say. [HON. MEMBERS: "Speak up!"] I intend to speak just as oudly and as softly as I choose and, if on. Members wish to hear me, I am ertain that my voice will carry if they ill kindly be silent while I am speaking. I have listened to most of this ebate this evening, and I wish to state ny point of view. My hon. Friends ere, as has been the case ever since we ere a party, are divided on the question of pacifism. [An HON. MEMBER: "Why?"] That is our business, and think the insolence of the hon. Member is worthy of him at this hour of the night. It is 10 years since a number of us moved a similar Amendment as that which has been moved to-night. Each of us voted in our own way, and, as I do not want to give a silent vote to-night, and as I believe that my view is held by some of my colleagues, I want to put it to the Committee.

I take very much the view of the social conditions and the results of war that was stated by the hon. Member for Shettleston (Mr. McGovern), but my view about war and violence would not be changed even if conditions were more secure. I feel that violence and war and all the accompaniments of those evils have brought disaster upon disaster on previous civilisations, and that it is not only morally true, but historically true, that individuals and nations that take to the sword perish by the sword. I believe that that is a fundamental truth, quite apart from any ethical consideration. History proves that, but, if I believed in violence and war, I should be inclined to be on the side of many of those who have spoken to-night. There cannot be any half measures about this. Either you go to war and prepare for war in the most thorough manner possible, or you must take the view, as I do, that it is wrong to go into war at all. I cannot see any half-way house. I have never been able to see it, and I cannot see it to-night.

There was one speaker earlier in the evening who arrived at conclusions which I do not accept, but in his speech he used the same language as the hon. Member for Mossley (Mr. Hopkinson) employed the other night. He said that people's minds, and their attitude to life, must be changed, that there must be a change of heart. I would say to my hon. Friends below the Gangway that it is really a mistake for us to think that very poor people take our view about this. I sit for Bow and Bromley and have lived there for very many years, and at the outbreak of war—before the declaration of war—I held meetings in order to try to rouse opinion against the war. The people who opposed me most, who were most bitter in their opposition, were some of the very poorest of the poor. And as I see this thing, and as life passes along, the more certain I am that there is absolutely no hope for mankind until there is this sort of change in our mental and moral outlook towards one another.

[Mr. Lansbury.]

I do not believe the world can be made better by forcing something on to people. I may be inconsistent in being in this place at all, but I am quite certain that you will never make a nation what you want that nation to be merely by Acts of Parliament—by what you can do for it. The people have got to get it into their own minds that the world is what we make it and our country is what we make it, and we have got to get the ordinary young men and women to understand that it is not people like us who can save them, but that they must save themselves. They must learn the lesson that we are trying to put here—that all down the ages man has tried to get his way by force and domination and power; and in the end it has been just Dead Sea fruit.

I do not stand here as any paragon of virtue or religion. I feel tremendous hesitancy in speaking about these things, but I am so confident that the great religious teachers were right when they said, all of them, from Confucius to Christ himself, and onwards, that the Kingdom of God, the thing that mankind wants most, is within men and women, and also that all human life is sacred. Anyone here who believes in the Incarnation must believe that. I am not thinking of those who are agnostics or who do not accept our faith, I am thinking of those who say they believe in Christianity. In that case, because of the Incarnation, they must believe that all human life is sacred, and if that is true then I cannot feel that it is right, under any circumstances, to kill my fellow men and women. I cannot think of one of the early Christians in an aeroplane dropping bombs. I cannot believe that He, the most sacred figure in all history, would have wanted to gain his way by destruction, by killing, by force. It is for those reasons and for no other reasons that I shall go into the Lobby in support of this reduction.

11.35 p.m.

Sir P. SASSOON: The whole Committee must have been deeply moved by the sincerity of the speech to which we have just listened from the Leader of the Opposition. Whatever view is put to this House with such sincerity we always listen to with pleasure and respect. The hon. Members for Gorbals (Mr. Buchanan) and Shettleston (Mr. McGovern) have this year chosen the Air Estimates to make the speeches that they make year by year on one service or another. The views that they have expressed are not new to us, nor are they any more relevant to the Air Estimates than they are to any other service. The speeches are, in reality, general expressions of feeling as to what is the best method of avoiding war. As I said earlier on, the Committee is always glad to listen to expressions of opinion, stated with so much sincerity and with so much engaging skill. I hope that hon. Members will not think it discourteous of me, after such a long Debate, if I say that I do not agree with those views, because I think that if they were put into practice they would not have the results that the hon. Members desire. For that reason, I cannot accept this Amendment.

Question put, "That a number, not exceeding 1,000, all ranks, be maintained for the said Service."

The Committee divided: Ayes, 23; Noes, 216.

Division No. 82.] AYES. [11.38 p.m.

Adams, D. M. (Poplar, South)
Cape, Thomas
Cripps, Sir Stafford
Daggar, George
Davies, David L. (Pontypridd)
Dobbie, William
Edwards, Charles
Grenfell, David Rees (Glamorgan)
Grundy, Thomas W.
Hall, F. (York, W.R., Normanton)
Hirst, George Henry
Jenkins, Sir William
John, William
Jones, J. J. (West Ham, Silvertown)
Jones, Morgan (Caerphilly)
Kirkwood, David
Lansbury, Rt. Hon. George
Logan, David Gilbert
Lunn, William
McEntee, Valentine L.
Maxton, James
Williams, Edward John (Ogmore)
Williams, Thomas (York, Don Valley)

TELLERS FOR THE AYES.—
Mr. Buchanan and Mr. McGovern.

NOES.

Acland-Troyte, Lieut.-Colonel
Adams, Samuel Vyvyan T. (Leeds, W.)
Agnew, Lieut.-Com. P. G.
Allen, William (Stoke-on-Trent)
Aske, Sir Robert William
Baillie, Sir Adrian W. M.
Baldwin, Rt. Hon. Stanley
Balfour, Capt. Harold (I. of Thanet)
Balniel, Lord
Banks, Sir Reginald Mitchell
Barclay-Harvey, C. M.
Bateman, A. L.
Beaumont, Hon. R.E.B. (Portsm'th,C.)
Beit, Sir Alfred L.
Bevan, Stuart James (Holborn)
Blindell, James
Borodale, Viscount
Bossom, A. C.
Boulton, W. W.
Bowyer, Capt. Sir George E. W.
Braithwaite, J. G. (Hillsborough)

roadbent, Colonel John rocklebank, C. E. R. rown, Col. D. C. (N'th'l'd., Hexham) rown, Ernest (Leith) rowne, Captain A. C. uchan, John uchan-Hepburn, P. G. T. urghley, Lord
urnett, John George porn, Arthur Cecil arver, Major William H. astlereagh, Viscount apman, Col. R. (Houghton-le-Spring) hurchill, Rt. Hon. Winston Spencer arry, Reginald George ayton, Dr. George C. obb, Sir Cyril ochrane, Commander Hon. A. D. olfox, Major William Philip olman, N. C. D. olville, Lieut.-Colonel J. onant, R. J. E. ook, Thomas A. ooke, Douglas opeland, Ida raddock, Sir Reginald Henry raven-Ellis, William rooke, J. Smedley
rookshank, Col. C. de Windt (Bootle) ruddas, Lieut.-Colonel Bernard avies, Maj. Geo. F. (Somerset, Yeovil) ickie, John P. oran, Edward rewe, Cedric
uckworth, George A. V. uggan, Hubert John uncan, James A. L. (Kensington, N.)
unglass, Lord astwood, John Francis lliston, Captain George Sampson mley, Viscount mrys-Evans, P. V. ssenhigh, Reginald Clare vans, Capt. Ernest (Welsh Univ.)
verard, W. Lindsay
leming, Edward Lascelles ox, Sir Gifford remantle, Sir Francis uller, Captain A. G. ledhill, Gilbert
lossop, C. W. H. luckstein, Louis Halle
oldie, Noel B. oodman, Colonel Albert W. raves, Marjorie reene, William P. C. retton, Colonel Rt. Hon. John rimston, R. V. uinness, Thomas L. E. B. uy, J. C. Morrison
ales, Harold K.
all, Capt. W. D'Arcy (Brecon)
anley, Dennis A.
arvey, Major S. E. (Devon, Totnes) aslam, Sir John (Bolton)
eilgers, Captain F. F. A.
Heneage, Lieut.-Colonel Arthur P.
Hope, Capt. Hon. A. O. J. (Aston)
Hornby, Frank
Howitt, Dr. Alfred B.
Hudson, Capt. A. U. M. (Hackney, N.)
Hutchison, W. D. (Essex, Romf'd)
Jesson, Major Thomas E.
Johnston, J. W. (Clackmannan)
Johnstone, Harcourt (S. Shields)
Jones, Henry Haydn (Merioneth)
Jones, Lewis (Swansea, West)
Ker, J. Campbell
Kerr, Lieut.-Col. Charles (Montrose)
Kerr, Hamilton W.
Lamb, Sir Joseph Quinton
Latham, Sir Herbert Paul
Law, Sir Alfred
Law, Richard K. (Hull, S.W.)
Leckie, J. A.
Leech, Dr. J. W.
Lees-Jones, John
Leighton, Major B. E. P.
Lennox-Boyd, A. T.
Lewis, Oswald
Liddall, Walter S.
Lindsay, Noel Ker
Little, Graham-, Sir Ernest
Llewellin, Major John J.
Lloyd, Geoffrey
Lockwood, John C. (Hackney, C.)
Lockwood, Capt. J. H. (Shipley)
Lovat-Fraser, James Alexander
MacAndrew, Lt.-Col C. G. (Partick)
McCorquodale, M. S.
Macdonald, Gordon (Ince)
McEwen, Captain J. H. F.
McKie, John Hamilton
McLean, Dr. W. H. (Tradeston)
Macmillan, Maurice Harold
Mallalieu, Edward Lancelot
Margesson, Capt. Rt. Hon. H. D. R.
Marsden, Commander Arthur
Martin, Thomas B.
Mayhew, Lieut.-Colonel John
Merriman, Sir F. Boyd
Mills, Major J. D. (New Forest)
Mitchell, Harold P. (Br'tf'd & Chisw'k)
Mitcheson, G. G.
Moreing, Adrian C.
Morris, Owen Temple (Cardiff, E.)
Morrison, William Shephard
Muirhead, Major A. J.
Munro, Patrick
Nation, Brigadier-General J. J. H.
Newton, Sir Douglas George C.
Normand, Wilfrid Guild
Nunn, William
O'Connor, Terence James
O'Donovan, Dr. William James
Palmer, Francis Noel
Pearson, William G.
Penny, Sir George
Percy, Lord Eustace
Perkins, Walter R. D.
Petherick, M.
Peto, Geoffrey K. (W'verh'pt'n, Bilston)
Pickford, Hon. Mary Ada
Pike, Cecil F.
Powell, Lieut.-Col. Evelyn G. H.
Raikes, Henry V. A. M.
Ramsay, Capt. A. H. M. (Midlothian)
Ramsay, T. B. W. (Western Isles)
Ramsden, Sir Eugene
Ratcliffe, Arthur
Ray, Sir William
Reed, Arthur C. (Exeter)
Reid, James S. C. (Stirling)
Reid, William Allan (Derby)
Rhys, Hon. Charles Arthur U.
Roberts, Aled (Wrexham)
Robinson, John Roland
Ropner, Colonel L.
Rosbotham, Sir Samuel
Ross Taylor, Walter (Woodbridge)
Runge, Norah Cecil
Russell, Richard John (Eddisbury)
Rutherford, John (Edmonton)
Rutherford, Sir John Hugo (Liverp'l)
Salmon, Sir Isidore
Salt, Edward W.
Samuel, Samuel (W'dsworth, Putney)
Sandeman, Sir A. N. Stewart
Sassoon, Rt. Hon. Sir Philip A. G. D.
Selley, Harry R.
Shakespeare, Geoffrey H.
Shaw, Helen B. (Lanark, Bothwell)
Shepperson, Sir Ernest W.
Shute, Colonel J. J.
Skelton, Archibald Noel
Smiles, Lieut.-Col. Sir Walter D.
Smith, Louis W. (Sheffield, Hallam)
Somervell, Donald Bradley
Somerville, D. G. (Willesden, East)
Sotheron-Estcourt, Captain T. E.
Spencer, Captain Richard A.
Stewart, J. H. (Fife, E.)
Strauss, Edward A.
Strickland, Captain W. F.
Sueter, Rear-Admiral Murray F.
Sugden, Sir Wilfrid Hart
Sutcliffe, Harold
Templeton, William P.
Thomas, James P. L. (Hereford)
Thomson, Sir Frederick Charles
Thorp, Linton Theodore
Tinker, John Joseph
Titchfield, Major the Marquess of
Touche, Gordon Cosmo
Wallace, Captain D. E. (Hornsey)
Warrender, Sir Victor A. G.
Wedderburn, Henry James Scrymgeour-
Wells, Sydney Richard
Weymouth, Viscount
Whiteside, Borras Noel H.
Whyte, Jardine Bell
Williams, Charles (Devon, Torquay)
Williams, Herbert G. (Croydon, S.)
Wills, Wilfrid D.
Young, Rt. Hon. Sir Hilton (S'v'noaks)

TELLERS FOR THE NOES.—Lord Erskine and Commander Southby.

Original Question put, and agreed to.

PAY, ETC., OF THE ROYAL AIR FORCE.

Resolved,

"That a sum, not exceeding £4,110,000, e granted to His Majesty, to defray the xpense of the Pay, etc., of the Royal ir Force at home and abroad, exclusive f those serving in India (other than Aden), hich will come in course of payment durng the year ending on the 31st day of larch, 1934."

WORKS, BUILDINGS AND LANDS.

Motion made, and Question proposed,

"That a sum, not exceeding £1,610,000, be granted to His Majesty, to defray the Expense of Works, Buildings, Repairs, and Lands, including Civilian Staff and other Charges connected therewith, which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1934."

11.47 p.m.

Lieut.-Colonel HENEAGE: I should like to draw attention to the hardships that will be incurred by the inhabitants of Mablethorpe and the sea coast of Lincolnshire and holiday makers from Leicester, Nottingham and other Midland towns if one of the proposed actions of the Air Ministry takes place. They propose to take all the available sands between Cleethorpes and Mablethorpe for the purpose of a machine gun range and even at one time proposed to shut off part of the town planning area of Mablethorpe itself. As a result of negotiations I am glad to say they have undertaken not to carry out operations on the range during the months of August. I should like to thank the Under-Secretary for having met us in that way. They have also agreed to shut down the range on Saturdays, Sundays and Bank Holidays, for which I thank them. I should like to suggest that they keep the sands free during July. I recognise the difficulties of the Air Ministry in the matter and so I am sure do the councillors and the inhabitants of Mablethorpe, but the shopkeepers and farmers and agricultural labourers depend on the summer visitors who come to these marvellous sands, the finest in England, and, if they are debarred from coming to them in July, it will create great local hardship. I need hardly stress the importance in this industrial age of allowing fresh air outlets among healthful surroundings to the industrial Midlands during the holiday season. The Air Ministry hitherto have said that they cannot meet us as far as July is concerned. I suggest as a compromise—though I have not the authority of the urban district for doing so—that they should allow us the last 10 days in July in addition to August. I ask it because the August Bank Holiday comes in the first week of August and holiday-makers send their families on before the Bank Holiday, during the last weeks of July. For this purpose they naturally require the use of the sands for their wives and children.

[Lieut.-Colonel Heneage.]

I also suggest that machine gunning on this part should not take place. The House is probably not aware that the Air Ministry proposes to use these sands for machine gunning as well as bombing and that the bombing takes place outside in the water. If machine gunning is not allowed, it will be quite evident that the sands will be available for the holiday makers. I should also like to suggest that the Air Minister should meet the wishes of the urban district, which have been communicated to him, because these bodies would welcome the Air Force coming to Lincolnshire. It is a great pity that there should arise the present feeling against the Air Force and that it should be accentuated. We wish that the bad feeling which at present exists should die away, and, as far as I possibly can, I will do all in my power to effect this. Having suggested what I consider would meet the wishes of my constituents, I hope very much that the Air Minister will meet us in this matter.

11.57 p.m.

Mr. DUCKWORTH: I must apologise for detaining the Committee at this extremely late hour. The point I wish to raise on this Vote is one which, though purely a local one, is of very considerable interest to many of my constituents. It concerns the vacant land and buildings at Harlescot just outside Shrewsbury, which were occupied from the middle of the War up to March a year ago by the Mechanical Transport Repair Depot of the Department of my right hon. Friend. This depot was established at very considerable expense during the War and doubtless at inflated prices. The property covers nearly 60 acres, and the capital cost of the land and buildings amounted to about £550,000. As may be readily imagined, this depot, with an establishment of about 400 men, was a considerable asset both to the town and trade of Shrewsbury, and it came as a very severe blow to the town when, doubtless for very good reasons of economy, it was decided to abandon the depot in March of last year. The blow was to some extent softened by the prospect that the whole of the site might very speedily be put to some other use, but unfortunately the hopes that were held out have been entirely disappointed and the site has remained entirely vacant and unoccupied for the last 12 months.

From the point of view of housing alone, there are no less than 54 buildings, which include 38 houses, which constituted the married quarters, and three houses of a larger type which accommodated the officers. All those houses, together with the other buildings, have now been empty for 12 months. There must by now be very considerable depreciation, as week after week and month after month has gone by. Taking into account the housing shortage which exists in the borough of Shrewsbury and in other towns, it is scarcely surprising that many of my constituents regard the situation as a very unusual case of scarcity in the midst of plenty. In this connection, it is interesting to note that the Ordnance Office at Pembroke Dock is shortly to be moved to Shrewsbury. During January the Assistant Director of Ordnance at Pembroke Dock wrote to the town clerk of Shrewsbury and asked for information as to suitable housing accommodation in the town.

The DEPUTY-CHAIRMAN: Whatever else for which the Air Ministry may be responsible, they are not responsible for Ordnance.

Mr. DUCKWORTH: I bow to your Ruling, Captain Bourne, but I only wish to point out, in reply, that it was stated that there was great difficulty in providing houses, when strangely enough, another Government Department was keeping no less than 40 houses unoccupied just outside the town. I am well aware from the questions which I have put in the past upon this matter that the Air Ministry are anxious to dispose of the whole of the property in one lot, and that hopes have been entertained that it would be purchased by some industrial undertaking. I believe that negotiations have actually been carried out with that end in view, but so far they have been unsuccessful and nothing more has come of them. I admit that there may be very good arguments for trying to dispose of the whole site in this manner if, indeed, a better price can be obtained, and if there is a real likelihood of some industrial undertaking purchasing the site. Doubtless it is only right that a reasonable time should be allowed to elapse and a fair chance given to the policy of disposing of the site in this way. But the present situation cannot be continued indefinitely, because there is another side to the question, and the very considerable depreciation which is involved in keeping the premises unoccupied must be taken into account.

From the information which has been supplied to me locally, I understand that the chances of selling the property to an industrial undertaking are extremely slender. The buildings themselves, other than the houses, are quite unsuitable for industrial purposes, and they will probably have to be demolished and completely rebuilt, and the value in that respect would probably be very negligible. It follows that either extremely advantageous terms should be held out to any intending purchaser, or else some alternative method to dispose of the property should be considered. In view of the time which has elapsed, I seriously suggest to my right hon. Friend that the sale of the property in lots might be considered. At any rate, it would enable the valuable housing accommodation to be put to some use. I shall be very glad if my right hon. Friend can give me some indication as to the attitude of his Department, and of the prospects there may be of disposing of the site and getting it put to some useful purpose.

12 m.

Mr. LEWIS: I want to call attention to the action of the Air Ministry in regard to property they have acquired at Hampstead Heath. It consists of a house and garden, situated at the very highest point of the Heath and pretty nearly in the centre of the Heath. It is, therefore, visible from many parts of the Heath. There is a town planning scheme which affects property adjoining the Heath on different sides, and it covers the land on which the property stands. This scheme has recently been put into operation. The Air Ministry, as a defence service, is not subject to Town Planning Acts and can, if it so wills, disregard a town planning scheme. I submit that that exception was given to them in order that they might not be hampered in works of defence by the operation of a town planning scheme. It was not meant to apply to such a case as this, because this property is not required for the purpose of an aerodrome, or for flying or bombing; it is to be used as the general headquarters and officers' mess for the auxiliary air squadron of the county of Middlesex. In these circumstances the Air Ministry should observe the terms of the town planning scheme, exactly like any other owner would be compelled to do. The London County Council and the Hampstead Borough Council have both protested and have been for some time in negotiation with the Air Ministry on the matter.

[Mr. Lewis.]

The Under-Secretary of State for Air stated in this House last July that no formal undertaking had been given that the terms of the town planning scheme would be observed, but that he hoped a satisfactory solution would be come to. He added that the main proposals in regard to the premises were for the internal adaptation of the house for the purpose for which it was required. The proposals go much further than that, otherwise the town planning scheme would not be affected and the Hampstead Borough Council would not be affected. There is a proposal to erect additional and unsightly buildings. In November of last year the Under-Secretary stated in the House that he was glad that an agreed settlement on the question had been reached, and that the plans of certain additional buildings were to be discussed with the London County Council. I understand that the County Council are still not satisfied with the proposals of the Ministry.

The Minister of Health is in his place, and I hope he will support me in this case. It is useless to bring forward town planning schemes if Government Departments are going to disregard them. The Minister of Health sent out a circular recently to local authorities pointing out the advantages of applying town planning schemes. In effect, the Under-Secretary of State for Air is saying that in the opinion of his Department this particular town planning scheme, which has only just come into operation in Hampstead, is unnecessary and unreasonable, and that he, speaking for the Air Ministry, will not comply with it. That is an attitude which, having regard to the purpose for which the building is required, should not be insisted upon by the Air Ministry. I make an appeal to the Under-Secretary. He has some reputation as a patron of the arts. He is reputed to be a lover of beautiful things. Does he wish his name to go down to posterity as that of a man who is largely responsible for the disfigurement of one of the most beautiful open spaces in London? I realise that the Secretary of State is not in the House and that the Under-Secretary of State must be guarded in his reply, but I hope he will be able to assure us that he will do his best to get the Ministry to abandon the attitude they have taken up and instead to agree to do what any other owner under these circumstances would be compelled to do, namely, to follow the lines of this town planning scheme, which has only just been introduced. I hope that, in taking that attitude, I shall have the support of the Minister of Health.

12.6 a.m.

Mr. LOUIS SMITH: I want to support the appeal made by my hon. and gallant Friend the Member for Louth (Lieut.-Colonel Heneage). I can fully sympathise with those who have used those attractive sandhills at Mablethorpe on the Lincolnshire coast. I represent a constituency that is very much interested, because large numbers of people from Sheffield take their children to these sandhills, and one can fully realise that to find their cricket pitches and so on giving way to bombing practice and machine-gun practice would be rather a shock to them when they go down to these seaside places. The hon. and gallant Member for Louth appealed for restrictions to be put on this bombing practice in the latter part of July each year. I would appeal to the Minister to extend that period from the middle of July to the end of August, because I think that during the few weeks when, in the industrial areas, they look forward to the quiet, peaceful atmosphere of these delightful seaside resorts of Mablethorpe and Sutton, we could, on their behalf, ask the Air Ministry to give them an extra fortnight or so. One feels that it is a sad thing that the quiet and peace of the Lincolnshire coast should be given up to this bombing practice. We are very proud indeed to have the Air Force at Cranwell, and we are wishful to help the Air Force in Lincolnshire in every way possible, but on behalf of those who use these seaside places we appeal to the Secretary of State to do what he can to restrict the nuisance which it would be to have this practice going on during the period I have mentioned.

12.8 a.m.

Sir P. SASSOON: I think the hon. Member who has just sat down, who, in company with the hon. and gallant Member for Louth (Lieut.-Colonel Heneage), has on several occasions during the past year discussed the matter of these ranges at Mablethorpe, will be prepared to admit that we have on every occasion shown the greatest possible good will and desire to meet them on almost every point, but I do not believe that anybody unfamiliar with the whole subject who had been listening to the speech of the hon. and gallant Member for Louth this evening would have had any idea of how kind and considerate we have been to him and the constituents whom he so well represents in this House. He knows all the difficulties, and I do not want to recapitulate them to-night or to weary the House at this late hour by talking about this matter at any great length, but I think the hon. and gallant Member is very ungrateful. He asks if he can have 10 particular days at the end of July, and, although we cannot meet him actually on that point, we are prepared to say that we will consult with the local authorities and the people concerned, and try to arrange our programme in such a way as to cause the least inconvenience to the townspeople, the inhabitants, and the holiday makers at those very beautiful sands that he has described so lyrically to-night. With regard to the town planning scheme, the hon. and gallant Member said we have taken part of the Mablethorpe town planning area.

Lieut.-Colonel HENEAGE: I said in my speech that they had even at one time proposed to shut off part of the town planning area of Mablethorpe, but I understand they do not propose to do so now.

Sir P. SASSOON: I thought the hon. and gallant Member rather gave the impression to the House that we had encroached on that scheme, but we have not done so at all. I do not think I can say anything more at the moment but reiterate our desire to meet him where we can on this matter. If he will leave it to us we will do the best we can.

With regard to the depot at Shrewsbury, again I do not think I can say anything further. We put that depot in the market with the houses adjoining because we imagined that it would be easier, in these days of financial depression, to get rid of it to some firm, and that the houses would be useful for the employés of a firm. That is the reason why we do not want to separate the houses from the depot. I hope things will get better soon and that we shall have an offer for the depot and the houses. Then there was the question regarding the buildings for 604 Squadron at Heath Brow. I really was unable to follow the hon. Member, because I consider that the situation is on the whole very satisfactory. We had put forward designs for this particular building, a drill hall, but we have now said that we will prepare another design, and only if that design is approved by the London County Council and the Borough Council shall we proceed with it. In those circumstances I think the hon. Member has got a very satisfactory answer to his question.

Mr. LEWIS: That is the first time, as far as I am aware, that that statement has been made publicly. It is quite satisfactory.

Question put, and agreed to.

TECHNICAL AND WARLIKE STORES (INCLUDING EXPERIMENTAL AND RESEARCH SERVICES).

Motion made, and Question proposed,

"That a sum, not exceeding £7,203,000, be granted to His Majesty, to defray the Expense of Technical and Warlike Stores (including Experimental and Research Services), which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1934."

12.15 a.m.

Mr. PERKINS: On this Vote I wish to ask a question about parachutes. There are three types of parachutes manufactured in this country. The Irvine parachute, which is made in England, and I understand is controlled by foreign capital. A second type, which I use, is the Russell-Lobe, which is controlled by British capital; and a third, the Quilter, which is approximately half the price of the other two. Why does the Ministry prefer to buy the parachute which is to a large extent foreign? Has the Quilter parachute been tested and proved reliable in every respect? There is another matter which I raised two months ago, about the sale of 20 Gypsy I engines. I received a circular stating that these engines were bought two or three years ago, that they have never been used, and were perfect in every respect. I have made certain inquiries, and I find that the sum paid for these engines was in the neighbourhood of £4,000. I find that these engines are practically valueless. I ask the Under-Secretary whether he has succeeded in selling them, and, if so, for how much?

[Mr. Perkins.]

Sir P. SASSOON: I could not give an answer without obtaining some more definite information, but I will get a reply to both questions and communicate with my hon. Friend.

Question put, and agreed to.

CIVIL AVIATION.

Resolved,

"That a sum, not exceeding £490,000, be granted to His Majesty, to defray the Expense of Civil Aviation, which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1934."

Resolutions to be reported upon Thursday; Committee to sit again To-morrow.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT (GENERAL EXCHEQUER CONTRIBUTIONS) BILL.

Considered in Committee.

[Captain BOURNE in the Chair.]

CLAUSE 1.—(Amounts to be included in, and amounts to be paid out of the Road Fund towards, General Exchequer Contributions for England and Scotland in second fixed-grant period.)

12.18 a.m.

Mr. CHARLES WILLIAMS: I beg to move, in page 1, line 18, to leave out the words "fifty thousand," and to insert instead thereof the words "forty-nine thousand six hundred."

My Amendment is to reduce the sum by £400. I would like to make it plain that this Amendment reduces the sum which goes to Scotland. I would like also to make it perfectly plain to any Scottish hon. Member that this is not in any sense an attack upon Scotland. It simply alters the proportion of money which is being continually balanced in favour of Scotland against the general English taxpayer. That is a thing which ought to be protested against and shown up very clearly in the House of Commons. As was explained by the Under-Secretary of State for Scotland the other day, we are giving at the present time a certain amount of new money which is fixed by law and therefore cannot be discussed, and we are giving an additional £2,000 to England and £500 to Scotland. The new money is in the proportion of one to four, while the surplus is in the proportion of two to seven. The only proper proportion for Scotland—there was a mistake in the previous Act, which enabled the sum to be balanced in the wrong way, thanks to the Chancellor of the Exchequer of the day, or the efficiency of the hon. Member for Leith (Mr. E. Brown)—is 11 to 80. I want to know whether the Minister or the Under-Secretary can give us any reason why this additional surplus sum should continue at so high a proportion beyond what has been laid down for Scotland. I ask the Under-Secretary of State whether he could not accept a reduction on this small sum of money, so that he might, at any rate, show good will towards the general taxpayer. I would like to give one additional reason for raising this point. We have been asked, as Members of Parliament, by Chancellor of the Exchequer after Chancellor of the Exchequer, to look at the Estimates, and at Measures as they come in, and, where we see needless expenditure of this kind, to use our best influences to try to get it put right. The Government which appealed to private Members to refrain from increasing expenditure is apparently quite needlessly adding to the burdens of the taxpayer.

12.21 a.m.

The UNDER-SECRETARY of STATE for SCOTLAND (Mr. Skelton): The Committee will appreciate, I have no doubt, the general proposition of my hon. Friend that the House of Commons should scrutinise with great care every Estimate and every Vote that comes before it, and the Committee will, I am sure, sympathise with and appreciate the meticulous and anxious care of my hon. Friend on behalf of the Government. I should be the last to support any proposal that was not thoroughly in keeping with the principles of sound economy and sound legislation. It is on the latter ground, in particular, that I suggest to my hon. Friend that the Amendment that he is moving is unnecessary. The facts are, as the Committee well knows, that, in accordance with the provisions of the Local Government Act, 1929, a certain sum of what was called new money was found by Parliament for the assistance of local government, and, at the end of the first period of revision, that amount, which is determined by a variety of factors with which I need not weary the Committee, comes out for Scotland as an additional sum of £100,000, less £500. The Estimate is still provisional, and it is not possible at this date to give an absolutely fixed estimate as to the actual and accurate amount which the application of the formula will bring out. Therefore, in the Bill which is before the Committee, an additional £500 has been given in the case of the Scottish new money, and an additional sum of £2,000, in the case of the English new money.

This very small amount of elbow-room is in both cases necessary. It would unduly hamper the work of the Government and of the Departments in working out the proper figure if there were not this small margin. If it turned out that the provisional estimates were, even to the smallest extent, greater than the proposals of the Bill, we might find that we had not asked the Committee for a sufficient sum to fulfil the requirements of the Act of 1929. My hon. Friend appreciates that, because he would allow us a marginal sum of £100. As I say, the Estimate is still only provisional, and you are dealing with a sum of £100,000, I cannot therefore think that it would be wise for the Committee to restrict that marginal sum to so small a figure as £100. I ask my hon. Friend, now that he has brought the matter before the Committee and has shown such an admirable sense of the value of the Union by fortunately refusing to make any attack upon my native country of Scotland, to be so kind, in the interests of good administration, as to withdraw his Amendment.

12.25 a.m.

Mr. C. WILLIAMS: The Under-Secretary of State for Scotland has not answered the point that I put to him regarding the proportion. On the last occasion, he and the great National Government, not finding any arguments, had to appeal to the hon. Member for Dumbarton Burghs (Mr. Kirkwood) to save them. Remembering that, and the lateness of the hour, and after the appeal that the hon. Gentleman has made, I think that it would be kinder, rather than attack the Government, who have not got the hon. Member for Dumbarton Burghs here, if I asked leave to withdraw the Amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Motion made, and Question, "That the Clause stand part of the Bill," put, and agreed to.

Clause 2 (Short title) ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Bill reported, without Amendment; to be read the Third time upon Thursday.

The remaining Orders were read, and postponed.

It being after Half-past Eleven of the Clock upon Tuesday evening, Mr. DEPUTY-SPEAKER adjourned the House, without Question put, pursuant to the Standing Order.

Adjourned at Twenty-seven Minutes after Twelve o'Clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Wednesday, 15th March, 1933.

The House met at a Quarter before Three of the Clock, Mr. SPEAKER in the Chair.

NEW WRIT.

For the Borough of Rhondda (East Division), in the room of Lieut.-Colonel David Watts-Morgan, C.B.E., D.S.O., deceased.—[Mr. Edwards.]

PRIVATE BUSINESS.

Ministry of Health Provisional Order (Sheffield) Bill,

Ministry of Health Provisional Order (Torquay) Bill,

Read a Second time, and committed.

ORAL ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS.

FOREIGN VISITORS (PASSPORT VISAS).

1. Mr. MANDER asked the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs the names of the countries whose citizens are able to enter Great Britain without a passport visa?

The LORD PRESIDENT of the COUNCIL (Mr. Baldwin): Visas to enter Great Britain are not required by nationals of the following countries:

Austria.
Belgium.
Czechoslovakia.
Denmark.
France.
Germany.
Italy.
Luxemburg.
Netherlands.
Norway.
Portugal.
Saar Basin.
San Marino.
Spain.
Sweden.
Switzerland and Lichtenstein.
Vatican State.

Mr. MANDER: Does my right hon. Friend not think it desirable to add the United States to that list?

LEAGUE OF NATIONS (POLISH CORRIDOR).

2. Mr. MANDER asked the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs if he will consider the advisability of proposing to the Council of the League of Nations, in view of the existing tension with regard to the Polish Corridor, that a neutral commission, on the lines of the Lytton Commission, should be set up to study this problem and make recommendations for its solution?

Mr. BALDWIN: No, Sir.

Mr. MANDER: In view of the exceedingly critical state of affairs in that area, do not the Government think it desirable to take some action?

Mr. BALDWIN: The only action that I have before me is the action suggested by the hon. Member, and I do not think that is very helpful.

Mr. MANDER: Is it not possible for the Government to think of something more useful?

Mr. BALDWIN: We will try.

Mr. HOLFORD KNIGHT: Is it not the case, as reported in this morning's Press, that this difficulty is well on the way to solution?

Mr. BALDWIN: Even if it has been so reported, I think that is the case.

RUSSIA: BRITISH SUBJECTS (ARRESTS).

3. Mr. POTTER asked the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he can now make a statement regarding the recent arrest and detention of four British subjects by the Moscow secret police?

4. Sir NICHOLAS GRATTAN-DOYLE asked the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he can now give further information concerning the raid on the offices of the Metropolitan-Vickers Company, Limited, in Moscow, and of the arrest of prominent officials of that company?

Mr. BALDWIN: Yes, Sir. The information which I have received from His Majesty's Ambassador at Moscow confirms the Press reports to the effect that the following British subjects, Messrs. Monkhouse, Thornton, Cushny, MacDonald, Gregory and Nordwall, employed by the Metropolitan Vickers Company, together with more than 20 Soviet citizens employed by the same firm, have been arrested by the Soviet political police on a charge of sabotage of electrical machinery. Messrs. Monkhouse and Nordwall have since been provisionally released on an undertaking not to leave Moscow. The other persons arrested are still in custody and His Majesty's Ambassador has visited them in prison. Their health appears to be generally satisfactory and permission to exercise has been promised.

Immediately on receipt of news of the arrests His Majesty's Ambassador at Moscow made urgent representations to the Commissariat for Foreign Affairs, requiring to know, among other points, exactly on what charge the arrests had been made, and what facilities for their defence would be granted them. As he has received no categorical or satisfactory answer on these matters, he has been instructed to press for the fullest possible information from the Commissar for Foreign Affairs, Monsieur Litvinoff.

Moreover, as His Majesty's Government are convinced that there can be no justification for the charge on which the arrests were made, Sir Esmond Ovey has been instructed to represent in strong terms the grave view which they take of these proceedings against British subjects of high standing engaged in normal commercial pursuits to the benefit of both countries, and the unfortunate consequences to Anglo-Soviet relations which may follow unless it is rectified; and similar language will be held to the Soviet Ambassador in London to-morrow, as His Excellency has been unable to come to the Foreign Office to-day.

Sir N. GRATTAN-DOYLE: May I ask my right hon. Friend, first, whether he has any information with regard to the raids on the company's offices that took place at Leningrad; and, secondly, whether the Government will not at once press for the release of the other British subjects who are in custody, and press for full satisfaction with reference to this outrage?

Mr. BALDWIN: With regard to the first question, if my hon. Friend will put any question on the Paper, I will give him all the information as it comes to hand. The information is rather slow in coming through. With regard to the second question, I would only add that we do regard it as a very grave matter, and we shall take all steps possible.

Sir WILLIAM DAVISON: Do the Government not now realise the futility of the policy that they have hitherto adopted, of allowing British subjects——

HON. MEMBERS: Order, order!

Mr. THORNE: You remember how you "pinched" Tom Mann.

TRADE AND COMMERCE.

BUSINESS TAX, HANKOW.

5. Mr. NUNN asked the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether his attention has been called to the attempt to levy business taxes from foreigners in Hankow; and whether he will secure from the Chinese Government a confirmation of the undertaking that British subjects shall be liable only to pay such regular and legal Chinese taxation not involving discrimination as is in fact imposed on and paid by Chinese citizens throughout China?

Mr. BALDWIN: The answer to the first part of the question is in the affirmative. As regards the second part, my hon. Friend, I think, somewhat misapprehends the position. It is not a question of an undertaking by the Chinese Government, but of a voluntary offer made by His Majestys' Government to extend the liabilities of British subjects in the manner described in the question. The Chinese Government have been reminded of the terms of that offer in connection with the business tax at Hankow.

JAPANESE COMPETITION (WEST AFRICA).

22. Mr. HAMMERSLEY asked the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether he is able to recommend any action to be taken by Colonial Governments to deal with Japanese competition in the West African Colonies?

The SECRETARY of STATE for the COLONIES (Sir Philip Cunliffe-Lister): As my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has recently stated in reply to several questions, the whole problem of Japanese competition is at present under His Majesty's Government's consideration.

[Sir P. Cunliffe-Lister.]

Mr. HAMMERSLEY: May we take it from that answer, that my right hon. Friend is considering the possibility of certain Colonies withdrawing from the Anglo-Japanese trade agreement without prejudice to this country's position as it affects the treaty between Japan and this country?

Sir P. CUNLIFFE-LISTER: As soon as my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade is in a position to do so, I am sure he will make a full statement to the House.

Argentine.

41. Captain FULLER asked the President of the Board of Trade how much of our adverse balance of trade for 1932 with the Argentine was due to interest payments on our investments in that country and for shipping and banking services?

The PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY to the BOARD of TRADE (Dr. Burgin): The estimated net income from overseas investments and from shipping and banking services is not calculated for individual countries.

Balance of Trade.

42. Captain FULLER asked the President of the Board of Trade to what extent our increased adverse balance of trade in 1931-32 was due to the importation of machinery and plant for the erection of new works in this country; to what extent our adverse balance of payments during this period has led to foreign investment in this country; and if the shrinkage of our income from overseas investment is in any way due to the drop which has occurred in foreign imports?

Dr. BURGIN: Omitting capital items, the excess of debits over credits in the balance of payments of this country was substantially less in 1932 than in 1931. I regret that no precise information is available on the points raised in the question.

DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE (ARMS MANUFACTURE).

6. Mr. T. WILLIAMS asked the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs how many nations have yet replied to the questionnaire on the private manufacture of arms issued by Mr. Arthur Henderson, president of the Disarmament Conference; which were the nations concerned; and what was the nature of their replies?

Mr. BALDWIN: According to the most recent information received from Geneva 35 nations have replied to this questionnaire. With the hon. Member's permission I will circulate the list in the OFFICIAL REPORT. It would be impossible for me to give a résumé of all these replies within the compass of an answer to a question in this House.

Mr. WILLIAMS: In any case where countries have replied have they given the exact number and percentage of their people who produce arms exclusively?

Mr. BALDWIN: I require notice of that question.

Following is the list:

Panama.
Bulgaria.
Estonia.
Latvia.
Albania.
Portugal.
Afghanistan.
Turkey.
Siam.
Poland.
South Africa.
Greece.
Iraq.
Norway.
United Kingdom.
Lithuania.
Egypt.
Denmark.
United States of America.
New Zealand.
Rumania.
Japan.
France.
Irish Free State.
Belgium.
China.
Sweden.
Yugoslavia.
Finland.
Netherlands (Mother country).
Venezuela.
Italy.
Hungary.
Germany.
Persia.

7. Mr. WILLIAMS asked the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether His Majesty's Government has yet replied to the questionnaire on the private manufacture of arms issued by Mr. Arthur Henderson, president of the Disarmament Conference; and, if so, whether the reply can be published?

Mr. BALDWIN: Yes, Sir. The reply of His Majesty's Government was sent to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations on the 30th December last. The reply has been circulated with others to all delegations of States represented at the Disarmament Conference and will doubtless be published by the League of Nations in due course. In the circumstances His Majesty's Government do not consider that they would be justified in incurring the expense entailed in publishing the reply in this country, but I am ready, if the hon. Member so desires, to have a copy of the reply placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS: I would thank the right hon. Gentleman for the latter part of that reply.

CHINA AND JAPAN (MUNITIONS).

8. Mr. T. WILLIAMS asked the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether the efforts of His Majesty's Government have been directed to securing an agreement between the principal arms-exporting Powers to place an embargo only upon arms exported to the State declared by the League of Nations to be the aggressor in the conflict in the Far East or whether their policy was to try and secure an embargo on arms exported to both combatants?

Mr. BALDWIN: The efforts of His Majesty's Government have not been specifically directed to either one object or the other but to securing consideration of the matter with a view to the formulation of a policy acceptable to the world at large.

Mr. WILLIAMS: Does the right hon. Gentleman not feel that the suggestion in the question might be much more successful, in view of the decision recently taken by the Government?

Mr. BALDWIN: If the hon. Member had had to act in this matter I think he would realise the extreme difficulty of getting any agreement, whatever the case presented, in view of the position of other countries.

ROYAL NAVY.

HERRING DRIFTERS (AUXILIARIES).

9. Sir MURDOCH MacKENZIE WOOD asked the First Lord of the Admiralty how many herring drifters were engaged in the service of the Royal Navy during the War; whether it is still the view of the Admiralty that these drifters would be required as auxiliaries to the Fleet in the event of a war; and, if so, whether he has taken any steps to assure himself that a sufficient number of these vessels in a sea-worthy condition are likely to be available in an emergency?

The FIRST LORD of the ADMIRALTY (Sir Bolton Eyres Monsell): About 1,150 drifters were taken up on Charter during the late War, but all of them were not in service at the same time. A number of drifters will probably be required in the event of a future war. The Admiralty are fully alive to the importance of the fishing industry to the Royal Navy.

Sir M. WOOD: Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that practically all the drifters at present in commission were built before the War, and in most cases are out of date?

CADETS, DARTMOUTH.

10. Vice-Admiral CAMPBELL asked the First Lord of the Admiralty what is the cost to the State of an officer entered as a cadet at Dartmouth College till the age of 20; and what is the cost to the State of an officer entered as a special-entry cadet till the age of 20?

Sir B. EYRES MONSELL: I presume that the inquiry relates to executive officers. The approximate net cost to the State of an officer entered as a cadet at Dartmouth is £1,200, and that of an officer entered as a special-entry cadet is £900, until promotion to the rank of midshipman. These figures include the additional cost to keep the "Frobisher" in commission as a cadet training ship instead of as a reserve fleet ship. After an officer becomes a midshipman he takes his place in the ship and his pay, etc., is not charged against the cost of his training.

Mr. MORGAN JONES: How many years does that sum of money cover?

Sir B. EYRES MONSELL: Six years.

19. Mr. ANEURIN BEVAN asked the First Lord of the Admiralty whether he will give the various scales of fees charged to the parents or guardians of cadets at Dartmouth College, and the numbers now being educated there under these various scales?

[Mr. Bevan.]

The CIVIL LORD of the ADMIRALTY (Captain Euan Wallace): The fees charged to parents or guardians for cadets at Dartmouth College during the current term are as follow:

268 at £150 per annum.
30 at £100 per annum.
39 at £70 per annum.
40 at £40 per annum.

In addition, there are 12 King's cadets for whom no fee is charged.

Mr. JONES: Are these exactly the same persons as are referred to in Question No. 10?

Captain WALLACE: I expect so.

Mr. BEVAN: Is not the means test applied to them?

HIS MAJESTY'S SHIP "PRESIDENT."

11. Vice-Admiral CAMPBELL asked the First Lord of the Admiralty how many officers of the Royal Navy and Marines, respectively, were employed at the Admiralty and borne on the books of His Majesty's ship "President" on the following dates, 1st January, 1914, and 1st January, 1933; and what were the numbers of the personnel of the Royal Navy on these dates?

Sir B. EYRES MONSELL: The number of Naval and Marine Officers employed at the Admiralty, etc. on the 1st January, 1914, was 121. The personnel of the Royal Navy and Royal Marines on the same date numbered 144,554. The corresponding figures for the 1st January, 1933, were 212 and 90,037. The increase in the number of Naval and Marine Officers at the Admiralty, etc. is of course mainly due to the formation of a Naval Staff, which did not exist before the War.

INVALIDED RATINGS.

12. Sir BERTRAM FALLE asked the First Lord of the Admiralty the number of naval ratings invalided during the year 1st January, 1932, to 31st December, 1932; the total number invalided with tuberculosis during this period; and the number invalided with tuberculosis whose disability was accepted as attributable to service?

Sir B. EYRES MONSELL: The number of naval ratings and Royal Marines invalided during the year 1932 was 979. The number invalided during that period with Pulmonary Tuberculosis was 190 and in 148 of these cases pensions were granted on the attributable scale.

MATERIALS AND CLOTHING (LANDING).

13. Sir B. FALLE asked the First Lord of the Admiralty whether petty officers and men of the Royal Navy who purchase raw materials or new articles of clothing from the clothing stores in His Majesty's ships and establishments are permitted to land such materials or articles; and, if so, whether he will authorise the issue of passes the same as now supplied for the landing of provisions?

Sir B. EYRES MONSELL: The King's Regulations and Admiralty Instructions already prescribe that clothing for men's personal use may be landed if accompanied by a pass, as for provisions.

BEER BARS.

14. Sir B. FALLE asked the First Lord of the Admiralty whether, in view of the introduction and extension of the general messing system, he will reconsider the whole question of beer bars in chief and petty officers' messes in shore establishments and permit the messes to run the bars themselves for their own mess funds like sergeants' messes in Royal Marine barracks?

Sir B. EYRES MONSELL: The present management of these bars by Navy, Army and Air Force Institutes is, so far as the Admiralty are aware, quite satisfactory, and as my hon. Friend knows the present proposal has been rejected in the past on more than one occasion after full consideration. I am willing, however, to call for reports from the Commanders-in-Chief at the home ports on the working of the present system and on the desirability or otherwise of the change suggested.

ROYAL MARINES.

15. Lieut.-Commander AGNEW asked the First Lord of the Admiralty the numbers of officers and men of the Royal Marines serving in sea-going ships of the Royal Navy, and the numbers serving in shore establishments and barracks?

Sir B. EYRES MONSELL: 4,512 and 4,830.

PROMOTION.

16. Mr. COCKS asked the First Lord of the Admiralty the number of Dartouth and special entry cadets to be ntered in the executive and engineering ranches during 1933 and the number of ommissions available for lower-deck tings in these branches under the new cheme of promotion from the lower eck?

The PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY o the ADMIRALTY (Lord Stanley): It as been announced that 13 executive nd six engineering cadetships will be ffered at the special entry examination n June. It has also been announced hat the total number of special entry xecutive cadetships in the present year vill not be less than 25. The total numer of engineering appointments is not et known. It is too early to state the umber of cadets who will be entered hrough Dartmouth and the number of ommissions which will be given to lowereck ratings in the present year.

17. Mr. COCKS asked the First Lord of the Admiralty why the number of commissions awarded to the seaman branch was reduced from 12 in 1931 to eight in 1932, seeing that 13 candidates were recommended by the fleet selection boards; and why only four of the 20 ngine-room ratings, recommended for sub-lieutenant (E), were commissioned?

Lord STANLEY: Of the 13 candidates for executive commissions who were recommended by fleet selection boards, only eight were qualified for promotion. The engineering candidates who were recommended by the fleet selection boards had subsequently to take a qualifying examination and to come before an Admiralty Selection Board who further considered their suitability and selected four, having in view Fleet requirements.

18. Mr. COCKS asked the First Lord of the Admiralty the number of commissions awarded under the mate and mate (E) schemes each year between 1913 and 1932, inclusive; the number of cadets entered in the executive and engineering branches under the special entry scheme each year since its introduction; and the numbers of each class promoted to the rank or equivalent rank of commander and the years?

Lord STANLEY: As the reply contains a tabular statement, I will, with my hon. Friend's permission, circulate it in the OFFICIAL REPORT.

Following is the answer:

The numbers of annual promotions to the rank of acting mate and acting mate (E) are as follow:

Year.	Acting Mate.	Acting Mate (E).
1913	44	—
1914	31	14
1915	108	28
1916	51	42
1917	92	52
1918	43	17
1919	Nil	10
1920	11	6
1921	3	7
1922	6	6
1923	6	5
1924	6	5
1925	5	5
1926	9	5
1927	7	5
1928	8	5
1929	5	4
1930	6	4
1931	12	4
1932	8	4

Up to and including the year 1923, special entry naval cadets were not earmarked for executive or engineering duties. The figures given below for the years 1913 to 1923, inclusive, show the total number of special entry naval cadets entered for either of these duties. The figures for the years 1924 onwards show the numbers entered for executive duties and for engineering duties separately.

For Executive and Engineering duties.

1913	42
1914	62
1915	63
1916	83
1917	134
1918	158
1919	46
1920	15
1921	16
1922	15
1923	15

	Executive duties.	Engineering duties.
1924	15	6
1925	28	34
1926	28	47
1927	30	41
1928	18	19
1929	14	22
1930	11	23
1931	12	22
1932	16	16
1933 (up to date)	10	5

The following promotions from ex mates and ex mates (E) to commander and engineer commander, respectively, have been made:

	Commander.	Engineer Commander.
Up to 1925 inclusive.	Nil	Nil
1926	1	—
1927	—	3
1928	1	6
1929	2	7
1930	2	8
1931	2	8
1932	2	8

The following promotions to commander and commander (E), respectively, have been made from ex-special entry cadets:

	Commander.	Commander (E).
Up to 1928 inclusive.	Nil	Nil
1929	—	3
1930	—	4
1931	4	3
1932	8	6

20. Mr. A. BEVAN asked the First Lord of the Admiralty whether he will give the total numbers of seamen and engine-room ratings throughout the Navy who took the higher educational test for commissioned rank, in October last, under the new regulations whereby all five papers have to be taken at one examination; and the numbers who passed?

Captain WALLACE: Twenty-one seaman ratings and 22 engine-room ratings took the examinations referred to. Five passed in each class.

21. Mr. BEVAN asked the First Lord of the Admiralty whether, considering the disappointing results, one first-class certificate in gunnery and one in torpedo and none at Greenwich College, obtained by the 12 sub-lieutenants (ex-able seamen) who took the mates' courses for lieutenant during 1932, any action is to be taken on similar lines to the preliminary training of midshipmen to enable future officers promoted from the lower deck to achieve the same standards as sub-lieutenants (ex-cadets)?

Captain WALLACE: The officers referred to were promoted under the old "mate" scheme. All future promotions will be made under the new scheme outlined in the statement by the First Lord on 20th May, 1931. That scheme provides for the officers selected from the lower deck to undergo a preliminary course at Greenwich which is designed to enable them to compete on equal terms with the officers from the cadet entries, with whom they will undergo the usual sub-lieutenants' courses at Greenwich and Portsmouth.

STRAITS SETTLEMENTS.

23. Mr. CAMPBELL asked the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether he is aware that the Governor of the Straits Settlements has recently taken action to restrict the ancient Chinese custom of cracker firing during their New Year festival; and, as this action and the wording of the official notice on the subject is causing widespread resentment, will he direct the withdrawal of the restrictions forthwith?

Sir P. CUNLIFFE-LISTER: I have seen the Governor's notification in the Press, but I have no official information in regard to it. I will ask the Governor for a report on the circumstances in which it was issued.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Will the right hon. Gentleman ask the Governor what possible use there can be in upsetting our friends the Chinese in the Straits Settlements by trying to restrict one of their most ancient customs and superstitions?

Sir P. CUNLIFFE-LISTER: I should think that the use of fireworks in reasonable quantities could certainly not give rise to serious objection either among the Chinese or in this country, but it may be, in this case, that the volume, velocity and frequency were considerations.

ROYAL AIR FORCE.

HINAIDI AERODROME, BAGDAD.

24. Captain HAROLD BALFOUR asked the Under-Secretary of State for Air if he can make any statement as regards the abandoning of Hinaidi aerodrome, Bagdad, and the proposed construction of another base 50 miles away; and if he will state the amount spent to date on the construction and maintenance of Hinaidi aerodrome and the amount to be received in compensation from the Iraq Government?

The UNDER-SECRETARY of STATE for AIR (Sir Philip Sassoon): As the answer is long I will, with my hon. and gallant Friend's permission, circulate it in the OFFICIAL REPORT.

Following is the answer:

As regards the first part of the question, the Anglo-Iraq Treaty of 1930 (Command Paper 3627) provides for the withdrawal of the British Forces from Hinaidi and Mosul within five years of the admission of Iraq to membership of the League of Nations. The forces will be transferred to a new base which, in accordance with the terms of the Treaty, will be to the west of the Euphrates in the neighbourhood of Lake Habbaniya on land which is being placed at the disposal of His Majesty's Government by the Iraq Government.

As regards the second part of the question, I regret that I am not in a position to state the total amount spent on the construction and maintenance of the cantonment at Hinaidi. The cantonment was originally constructed by the Army for the large garrison of British and Indian troops and since it was taken over by the Air Ministry 11 years ago, has been adapted to the constantly diminishing requirements of the Royal Air Force.

The Iraq Government have agreed to take over the permanent buildings and plant at Hinaidi together with the permanent buildings and plant at Mosul at one-third of the cost price as certified by the Air Ministry, an arrangement which is embodied in the agreement on financial questions published as Command Paper No. 3675. I may add that the original cost of the permanent buildings and plant at Hinaidi has been assessed at approximately £1,000,000.

ACCOUNTS.

25. Mr. DINGLE FOOT asked the Under-Secretary of State for Air whether he has considered the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General on Appendix V of the Air Services Appropriation Account, 1931, stating that in 1928 the Ministry approved the provision at Mount Batten, Plymouth, of a lighter for the bulk storage of petrol for flying boats and marine craft; that the lighter was purchased and adapted at a total cost of over £8,000; that in 1929 the Ministry further approved the provision of storage tanks ashore for both aviation and motor transport spirit; that under this scheme one tank was provided at an expenditure of £408; that the lighter has not been used since its delivery at Mount Batten; that the flying-boat station has instead been drawing its supplies from a local oil company; and whether he will say for what reasons the two overlapping schemes were approved and state the precise cost of the lighter and its subsequent history?

Sir P. SASSOON: As the hon. Member is doubtless aware, it is the time-honoured practice of the House to entrust to the Public Accounts Committee the examination in the first instance of the various Appropriation Accounts. My Noble Friend takes the view, therefore, that it would not be in accord with constitutional custom to answer in detail the several points raised in this question in advance of consideration by the Public Accounts Committee. He feels it, however, necessary to point out that the preliminary account of the matter at issue, contained in the Air Services Appropriation Account for 1931, is both incomplete and, in his judgment, definitely misleading in certain material respects.

TRANSPORT.

AUTOMATIC TRAFFIC SIGNALS.

27. Mr. HANLEY asked the Minister of Transport if he will arrange to have arrows fixed to the standards of automatic traffic signals in all places where filtration to the left is permitted?

The MINISTER of TRANSPORT (Mr. Oliver Stanley): It is customary to use green arrows on light signals where filtration to the left is permitted. If my hon. Friend will let me know of any case where this practice has not been followed I will have inquiries made.

[Mr. Stanley.]

MOTOR-CAR LICENCES.

28. Captain ELLISTON asked the Minister of Transport whether he will arrange for the extension of motor-car licences expiring on 30th September for a further period of one month on payment of a proportionate additional charge?

Mr. STANLEY: The owner of a motor-car who takes out a licence for the period 1st October to 31st December can surrender it on the 31st October and obtain a refund of two-thirds of the duty paid less a surrender fee of 10s. I cannot see my way to complicate the licensing system by making special arrangements for the extension of licences expiring on the 30th September in the manner suggested by my hon. and gallant Friend.

MOTOR DRIVERS' HOURS.

30. Mr. BANFIELD asked the Minister of Transport whether, in view of recent prosecutions at Stoke-on-Trent and elsewhere where it was difficult to prove offences owing to verbal orders as to route, rest, loading, and unloading not being possible to fulfil, he will seek powers at once to compel all drivers to be supplied with a time, route, and general instruction docket for the information of the police and the protection of both owners and drivers; and if he will take all possible steps to enable the operation of the hours Section of the Act?

Mr. STANLEY: I cannot add anything at present to the reply made on this subject on 8th February by my predecessor to the hon. Member for Thirsk and Malton (Mr. Turton), of which I am sending the hon. Member a copy.

MOTOR VEHICLES (FIRE-EXTINGUISHERS).

31. Mr. HALES asked the Minister of Transport if his attention has been drawn to the fact that the town of Kettering was in danger of destruction on 14th February when a lorry loaded with high explosives caught fire in the heart of the shopping centre; and, having regard to the fact that this fire was extinguished with the aid of a fire-extinguisher carried on the lorry, will he take steps to make the carrying of fire-extinguishers on all motor vehicles compulsory?

Mr. STANLEY: By an Order of the Secretary of State petrol-driven motor vehicles conveying explosives are required to carry chemical fire-extinguishers. I do not regard the occurrence as a justification for requiring all vehicles to carry fire-extinguishers.

Mr. HALES: If that is the case, why should fire-extinguishers be made compulsory on all omnibuses and public vehicles?

Mr. STANLEY: That does not seem to arise out of the question.

48. Mr. HALES asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is aware that the Petroleum (Motor Vehicles) Regulation, 1929, providing for the installation of fire-extinguishers in all garages, has never been enforced; and if he will now instruct the Metropolitan Police to take the necessary steps to see that this regulation is observed?

The SECRETARY of STATE for the HOME DEPARTMENT (Sir John Gilmour): I presume the hon. Member is referring to the requirement that in places to which the regulations apply there shall be kept fire-extinguishing apparatus of a type capable of extinguishing petrol fires, or a supply of sand or other effective means for extinguishing such fires. I have no reason to think that this requirement is not properly observed in the Metropolitan area; but if the hon. Member has any information to the contrary and will forward particulars to me I shall be glad to inquire into the matter.

Mr. HALES: Is my right hon. Friend not aware that in no single instance has any domiciliary visit been made regarding this regulation?

INDIA (JOINT SELECT COMMITTEE).

32, 33, and 34. Sir CHARLES OMAN asked the Secretary of State for India (1) on what system the representatives from India who are to attend for consultation with the Joint Committee of the Houses of Lords and Commons will be chosen;

(2) whether the representatives from India who are to be present at the meeting of the Joint Committee of the Houses of Lords and Commons will have the right of questioning witnesses;

(3) whether facilities will be afforded at the meeting of the Joint Committee of the Houses of Lords and Commons for the representatives of the services, as witnesses or otherwise?

The SECRETARY of STATE for INDIA (Sir Samuel Hoare): These questions of procedure are matters for the Committee, and I am not in a position to anticipate their decisions.

HOUSING.

CROWN PROPERTY, LONDON.

36. Mr. MITCHESON asked the Minister of Agriculture how many flats are unoccupied at the moment in the new blocks built by the Crown authorities in Cumberland Market, in the borough of St. Pancras; and for what reasons these are allowed to remain unoccupied whilst applicants are being turned away?

The MINISTER of AGRICULTURE (Major Elliot): Of the 246 flats already provided in the new buildings in course of erection on the Crown Estate at Cumberland Market eight are at present unoccupied. The purpose of this building scheme is to rehouse the tenants on the estate in order that the whole property may be rebuilt, and it is not possible to admit tenants from off the estate to the new flats without wrecking the scheme. It is necessary, in arranging for removals, to study the convenience of tenants, and this results in some unavoidable delay from time to time.

37. Mr. MITCHESON asked the Minister of Agriculture if he is aware that there are not less than 258 rooms vacant on Crown property in Stanhope Street, Albany Street, and district, in the borough of St. Pancras; and whether, as there are over 1,000 people occupying underground rooms in that borough and at least that number searching for accommodation, he will take steps to enable the premises to be tenanted with the least possible delay?

Major ELLIOT: Apart from rooms in houses required for early demolition, and in basements which are unfit for residential use, about 200 rooms are at present vacant on this estate. These rooms will be used, under arrangements which are now in progress, partly for accommodation of families which are overcrowded in their present quarters, and partly for the transfer of tenants occupying premises which will be required for demolition and rebuilding in the near future. If, after these requirements are met, any rooms remain available, applications from new tenants will be considered.

Mr. MITCHESON: Will the right hon. Gentleman say when these rooms will be used; and will he bear in mind that the premises have been empty for nearly two years?

Major ELLIOT: I am afraid I could not give a date across the Floor of the House.

Sir PERCY HARRIS: Will the right hon. Gentleman consider co-operating with the London County Council and the borough council and having a mutual arrangement in regard to such flats, so that the bodies concerned could assist each other, and not waste accommodation?

Major ELLIOT: I shall certainly consider any communication from the local authorities.

Mr. MITCHESON: If the premises are not to be altered or renovated or taken down for 12 months, will the right hon. Gentleman consider making use of them in the meantime?

Major ELLIOT: I would require to look into that matter very closely.

WOODEN HUTS, HORDEN, DURHAM.

46. Mr. BATEY asked the Minister of Health if he is aware that the occupants of the wooden huts at Horden, county Durham, have been given 28 days' notice to leave the huts without other houses having been provided for them; and whether he will take steps to prevent the wooden huts being closed before other houses are provided?

The PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY to the MINISTRY of HEALTH (Mr. Shakespeare): My right hon. Friend is obliged by the information now given by the hon. Member and is making inquiries of the rural district council of Easington.

WHEAT DEFICIENCY PAYMENT.

43. Mr. THORNE asked the President of the Board of Trade the present selling price of standard graded flour per

[Mr. Thorne.]
280 pounds; and if he is aware that the London Flour Millers' Association are adding an additional 2s. 9d. per 280 pounds on account of the wheat subsidy?

Dr. BURGIN: The present price of standard grade flour in the home counties as announced by the London Flour Millers' Association is 24s. per 280 lbs., 6d. to 1s. less delivered within the London district. I understand that actual selling prices are normally less than the published price. The price is subject to the addition of the quota payment which millers and importers of flour are required to make to the Wheat Commission under the provisions of the Wheat Act, 1932, and which is at present 2s. 9d. per sack of 280 lbs.

Mr. THORNE: Does that not prove that this wheat subsidy is going to be paid by the consumer?

Dr. BURGIN: It proves that the wheat subsidy, being a disbursement, is at present shown as a separate addition to the price.

BUSINESS OF COURTS COMMITTEE (RECOMMENDATIONS).

38. Mr. LLEWELLYN-JONES asked the Attorney-General whether it is the intention of the Government to introduce legislation at an early date to give effect to the recommendations contained in the interim Report of the Business of Courts Committee presented by the Lord High Chancellor to Parliament, or whether it is proposed to delay the introduction of legislation until the final report is presented?

39 and 40. Mr. TEMPLE MORRIS asked the Attorney-General (1) whether he can make a statement to the House as to when His Majesty's Government will introduce legislation to deal with the recommendations of the recent Report of the Lord Chancellor's Committee on Law Reform;

(2) whether, in view of the need for economy, legislation will be introduced at the earliest possible moment to abolish the grand jury system, in view of the recommendation of the Lord Chancellor's Committee on Law Reform.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL (Sir Thomas Inskip): The introduction of such legislation as may be necessary to give effect to the recommendations contained in the interim report is now under consideration. It is proposed to take immediate action to bring into operation such of the recommendations of the Committee as do not require legislation.

IRISH FREE STATE.

44. Mr. HALES asked the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs whether, having regard to the failure of the steps hitherto taken to bring about a settlement of the Irish question, he will consider the advisability of recommending the imposition of a further duty of 50 per cent. on Irish exports to England in order to bring about an immediate settlement of this dispute?

The SECRETARY of STATE for DOMINION AFFAIRS (Mr. J. H. Thomas): I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply which I gave on the 7th March to my right hon. Friend the Member for Epping (Mr. Churchill). I cannot at present add anything to that answer.

Mr. HALES: Having regard to the serious dislocation of trade between the two countries, does not the right hon. Gentleman consider that the steps he has already taken may be further augmented by a higher duty and so bring about an immediate settlement of the dispute?

LOCARNO TREATIES.

45. Mr. MANDER asked the Prime Minister whether consultations have yet taken place between the military, naval, and air force staffs of the signatories of the Locarno treaties, with a view to these being put into effective operation when and if need should arise?

Mr. BALDWIN: As far as this country is concerned, the answer is in the negative.

Mr. MANDER: If we are to carry out our obligations effectively, is it not very desirable that such consultations should take place?

Mr. BALDWIN: I think the hon. Member's question borders on the bellicose.

CHISWICK SEWAGE WORKS.

47. Mr. HAROLD MITCHELL asked e Minister of Health whether he has quired into the complaints received om residents in Chiswick with regard the odour arising from the Chiswick wage works; and, if so, whether he oposes to take any steps in the matter?

Mr. SHAKESPEARE: My right hon. iend is investigating these complaints d is in close touch with the council as the measures to be taken. It is hoped at a remedy will shortly be found.

STOKE-ON-TRENT (LOAN).

49. Mr. THORNE asked the Chanellor of the Exchequer why the Governent have refused to allow the Stoke-n-Trent Corporation to raise a loan of 500,000; and whether, in view of the bility of the objects of the loan, he will econsider his decision?

The FINANCIAL SECRETARY to the REASURY (Mr. Hore-Belisha): I know f no reason why the corporation should ot make an issue provided that, in ccordance with the request of my right on. Friend published in the Press on e 14th January, prior agreement is eached with the Bank of England rearding the amount and date of the sue.

Mr. THORNE: Does not the hon. Geneman realise that he is inflicting a great ardship on this corporation, because ey were about to issue at 98 and he ants to make them issue at 97, which eans an addition of £5,000 at 3½ per ent.?

Mr. HORE-BELISHA: I cannot help inking my hon. Friend is under some isapprehension. He asks if I can state e reason why the Government have reused to allow the Stoke-on-Trent Cororation to raise a loan. My reply is at the Government have not refused.

Mr. THORNE: Simply because they ant to issue at 98 and you insist on 97.

Mr. HORE-BELISHA: No. I say that he Government have had no correspondnce whatever with the Stoke-on-Trent orporation.

Mr. COCKS: Are the Bank of England he Government of this country?

Mr. MABANE: Can the hon. Gentleman say whether the Bank of England has objected to this loan being issued?

Mr. HORE-BELISHA: I can only answer the question put to me, whether the Government have refused, and I say categorically that the Government have not refused.

Mr. MABANE: Can the hon. Member reply to my question as to whether the Bank of England has refused?

Mr. HORE-BELISHA: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. Member had better put a question down.

Mr. HAMMERSLEY: On a point of Order. Would it be in order to put down a question, to ask whether the Bank of England had or had not refused?

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. Member puts the question down, I will then see whether it is in order or not.

Mr. THORNE: Is it not a fact that on several occasions I myself and other hon. Members have attempted to put down questions dealing with the Bank of England and have been told by the Clerk at the Table that the Government have no control over them?

Mr. SPEAKER: I should probably say the same thing about this one.

GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS (NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING).

50. Captain CUNNINGHAM - REID asked the Financial Secretary to the Treasury if he is aware that the Stationery Office has recently invited tenders for the appointment of an agency for advertising in newspapers and periodicals on behalf of the Government Departments in Scotland; if he is further aware that an agreement between the Newspaper Proprietors' Association and all recognised advertising agencies provides for a minimum commission charge of 10 per cent. on all new business; and if in such cases he will discontinue the system of tender and substitute that of direct appointment?

Mr. HORE-BELISHA: The answer to the first part of the question is in the affirmative. I have no official knowledge of the terms of the trade agreement between the Newspaper Proprietors' Association and the advertising agencies to which my hon. Friend refers, but I understand that it has been in existence for many years during which time all Stationery Office advertising contracts have been placed after competitive tender. Government advertising differs in many important respects from private advertising; and I see no grounds for departing in this matter from the system of tender which is the recognised practice in the public service.

[Mr. Hore-Belisha.]

MERSEY TUNNEL BILL.

Reported, with Amendments; Report to lie upon the Table, and to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE LORDS.

That they have agreed to Amendments to—

Visiting Forces (British Commonwealth) Bill [Lords], without Amendment.

Consolidation Bills,—That they propose that the Joint Committee appointed to consider all Consolidation Bills of the present Session do meet in Committee Room A on Wednesday next, at Eleven o'clock.

CONSOLIDATION BILLS.

So much of the Lords Message as relates to Consolidation Bills considered.

Ordered, "That the Committee appointed by this House do meet the Lords Committee as proposed by their Lordships."—[Sir F. Thomson."]

Message to the Lords to acquaint them therewith.

GIFT COUPONS BILL.

Order for resuming Adjourned Debate on Amendment to Second Reading [10th March] upon Monday next read, and discharged; Bill withdrawn.

WRITTEN ANSWERS.

TRANSPORT.

RAIL AND ROAD CONFERENCE (RATES).

Mr. HEPWORTH asked the Minister of Transport whether he is in a position to state the effect on the rates payabl by ratepayers in each county and in each borough in England and Wales of th adoption by legislation of the recommendations contained in the Salte Report; and, in particular, what woul be the effect on the rates in Bradford?

Mr. STANLEY: The answer to both parts of the question is in the negative.

MOTOR VEHICLES (REAR LIGHTS).

Mr. GLEDHILL asked the Minister o Transport if he will consider a revisio of the existing regulations which allow a closed motor vehicle to carry its rear ligh at the top of the vehicle?

Mr. STANLEY: I have under consideration at the present time the desirability of amending the regulation to meet this point.

ROYAL AIR FORCE (PETROL, BRITISH COAL).

Mr. L. SMITH asked the Under-Secretary of State for Air what price his Department has paid for aviation petrol made from British coal; and how this compares with the price of similar ordinary aviation petrol?

Sir P. SASSOON: I regret that it would be contrary to established practice to disclose these prices.

ROYAL NAVY (RATINGS, ADVANCEMENT).

Sir B. FALLE asked the First Lord of the Admiralty whether he is aware that naval ratings awarded "Satisfactory" for efficiency are in some cases considered as not being eligible for recommendation for advancement on Form S 507; and whether, as the definition of "Satisfactory" i.e., a man who performs his duties with average ability, does not make it clear that he is eligible for recommendation for advancement, he will consider making the situation clear to all commanding officers so that all ratings shall have equal chances for advancement?

Sir B. EYRES MONSELL: It is clearly laid down that "an assessment of satisfactory does not absolutely disqualify a man for a recommendation for advancement" but "efficiency in present rating is not the only factor in determining fitness for advancement" for the captain has to consider power of command, fitness to hold the higher rating and other qualifications. I have no reason to believe the regulations on this matter are misunderstood by captains.

STORE CATTLE (IMPORTS).

Dr. LEECH asked the Minister of Agriculture if he is aware of the falling off in the supply of store cattle in this country since the restriction of Irish Free State imports came into force, particularly in the county of Northumberland; whether imports of Canadian store cattle have increased or diminished during the last six months; and whether there is any embargo or restriction against the import of Canadian cattle into the Tyne or elsewhere at the present time and, if so, what are such restrictions?

Major ELLIOT: Entries of store cattle at the markets in England and Wales reported in the Agricultural Market Report show a falling off of 9 per cent. during the period July, 1932, to date, as compared with the previous corresponding period. On the other hand, the information at my disposal does not indicate that, generally speaking, there has been up to the present any marked shortage of store cattle having regard to the prevailing demand. I have received complaints as to a shortage of Irish stores in Northumberland, but I have no positive evidence which would enable me to judge how far these complaints are well founded. In the last six months 2,050 imported Canadian cattle have been licensed out for further feeding as compared with 2,200 in the preceding six months. The importation of Canadian cattle is governed by the provisions of the Importation of Canadian Cattle Order of 1933 which authorises landing only at landing places which have been approved by me. At present, landing places have been approved at the ports of Birkenhead, Glasgow, Cardiff and Dundee, and I am prepared to consider the approval of landing places at other ports if approached by the responsible port authorities.

NAVAL EXPENDITURE (FRANCE, ITALY AND UNITED STATES).

Mr. PICKERING asked the First Lord of the Admiralty what have been the amounts of the Naval Estimates for 1931, 1932, and 1933 in France, Italy, and the United States of America?

Sir B. EYRES MONSELL: The Naval Estimates have been as follow:

—	1931-32 or 1931.	1932-33 or 1932.	1933-34 or 1933.
France ...	Fr. 2,799,830,314 (f)	Fr. 2,411,263,577 (d) (f)	Fr. 2,839,838,570 (e)
Italy	Lire 1,537,622,800 (f)	Lire 1,538,923,277 (f)	Lire 1,359,222,277 (c)
U.S.A. ...	$360,101,593	$328,906,141 (a)	$309,647,536 (b)

(a) Plus $9,750,000 by transfer from special funds, and reappropriations.
(b) Plus $11,341,389 by transfer from special funds and reappropriation of $2,498,000.
(c) Proposed Estimates.
(d) For 9 months only, due to change of fiscal year.
(e) Original proposed Estimates, subject to amendment.
(f) Original estimates voted; excludes supplementary amendments.

WORLD ECONOMIC CONFERENCE.

3.18 p.m.

Mr. GRAHAM WHITE: I beg to move,

"That this House, recognising that the chief factor in producing world-wide economic distress is to be found in the financial and economic restrictions placed upon international trade, urges His Majesty's Government to prepare, and to lay before the forthcoming World Economic Conference, definite proposals for the all-round reduction of tariffs and the removal or reduction of other obstacles to trade, to take the initiative in the formation of a group of free-trade or low-tariff countries, and to make agreements for such modifications in the most-favoured-nation clauses of existing treaties as may be necessary."

I hope this Motion will commend itself to the general sense of the House. It would be impossible in the time allotted to this Debate to consider the whole programme of world reconstruction which has been drawn up by the Preparatory Commission of Experts, and drawn up, I am pleased to say, with a very large measure of common agreement. It is unfortunately the case that the programme and recommendations drawn up by commissions of experts in complete agreement and with complete unanimity have not been followed by the various countries concerned. For example, we had in 1927 a similar recommendation from a body of experts representing all the countries concerned, and if those countries had carried out the advice which was then given to them the world would have been a very much happier and easier place to live in than it is at the present time. There are those who are inclined to argue that in the present state of international politics and world opinion the subject of world co-operation is one which it is perhaps hardly useful to discuss. For some years past we have been dominated by one crisis following another. Sometimes these manifestations have been political and sometimes economic, and the causes have been closely intermingled. As one crisis succeeds another they become deeper seated, and it becomes more difficult to find a solution.

In these circumstances I think that the House will consider that it is very desirable that we should discuss, not the details, but the broad outlines of the policy which should be laid before the Economic Conference, and I hope that the Government will welcome an opportunity of declaring to the country, and indeed to the world, that they intend to go to that conference prepared to submit definite plans and to give an unmistakable lead to the whole world for the progressive removal of those different obstacles which are throttling all international trade. The present state of international feeling is not a reason for refraining from discussing the subject of international co-operation; indeed, it is an urgent reason why it should be discussed and followed as quickly as possible by action. It was hardly necessary for a commission of experts to meet together to draw up an agenda in order to diagnose the disease and to describe the symptoms from which the world is suffering, or to convince the people of the vital necessity that the countries of the world should reverse their policy and discuss the removal of their common difficulties rather than continue to add to them, as they have been doing steadily for years past. The whole world is familiar with the ghastly fact that there are, on a modest computation, 30,000,000 unemployed—a vast multitude which, if each man stood up and stretched his arms, would reach round the Equator.

We know that since 1929 wholesale commodity prices have fallen by one-third, that the prices of raw material have collapsed to the extent of from 50 per cent. to 60 per cent., and that, as a result of this disequilibrium in the markets of the world, in the principal producing countries, there is no relation between their international burdens and their means of carrying them. The area of default is already very wide and steadily tending to increase. The countries of the world, acting sometimes in defence and sometimes prompted merely by a spirit of economic nationalism, have developed a vast network of restrictions, financial and economic—quotas, exchange controls, prohibitions, tariffs and the like—which constitute "a state of virtual economic warfare," to quote the words of the Preparatory Commission. All countries are seeking to sell and none are willing to buy. The inevitable result of that policy, if continued, must be a world-wide collapse, in which, to quote again the words of the Preparatory Commission of Experts, "society as we know it could hardly survive." The aggravating fact in this situation is that there is no necessity or it. Every one is aware of the fact that in the last few decades mankind has succeeded in solving the age-long grim problem of how to obtain a secure and sufficient subsistence.

We have entered on a new era in the world's history, for it is a complete world in the sense that productive capacity is sufficient to supply the reasonable needs of every living man and woman. It has been an amazing triumph of engineering science and organisation. Technicians have given us a new world, a world which has become a single economic unity, in which the distance between cause and effect has been largely destroyed. What we say in this House this afternoon may be a topic of conversation to-morrow the world over, in New York, Bombay and elsewhere. The economic life of the world has been shifted from a national on to an international basis, and, if one were asked to summarise the world position to-day, it could be put in a single sentence—that all our troubles arise from the fact that we are trying to run a twentieth century world with the political ideals of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. Governments and statesmen the world over, sometimes with the support of their people and sometimes without it, have successfully withstood and frustrated the wonderful triumphs of science and organisation. They have stood successfully between the people and the new prospect of abundance which has been opened out to them by the triumphs of science. As far as I know, it is the only field of endeavour in which international statesmanship has been completely successful.

After the Lausanne Conference some of the nations of the world decided to summon a world conference to see how they could remove their difficulties. That decision was welcomed everywhere, and it was thought that at long last there was evidence that the nations of the world were actually willing and capable of meeting together to consider a common constructive policy. It is in the recollection of the House that no sooner was the conference decided upon than a new hope appeared. Things began to improve, markets began to rise, but that newly-born hope soon flickered out as the conference was postponed time and time again, and sinister events began to occur the world over and the atmosphere for the conference obviously became more difficult. National anxieties then centred in the conference which was called to consider disarmament, and then came events in the Far East and the economic troubles which have overcome the United States. There is nothing apparently that outsiders can do to help the United States in the task which confronts them, but this House will wish to express its sympathy and good will to President Roosevelt in the terrible and almost superhuman task that lies before him in that country. The United States is such an important factor in world economy that no sound international currency policy and no sound fiscal policy can be devised if she stands outside, and one welcomes, in particular at this time, those words which were spoken by President Roosevelt in his inaugural address. In spite of the economic difficulties of his country and its great internal domestic anxieties, he said that, in point of time—those words are significant:

> "international trade is of necessity secondary to the establishment of a sound national economy."

I think there is a particularly hopeful note and significance in the concluding phrase of that section of his address, in which he said:

> "I shall spare no effort to restore world trade by international economic coadjustment. In the field of world policy I would dedicate the nation to the policy of the good neighbour."

The policy of the good neighbour is the one which is essential and which must be held by all nations if the World Economic Conference is to succeed. I am not one of those who think that recovery must necessarily be slow and painful. One of the chief factors in recovery when it once starts will be psychological, and it will date from the day when there is unmistakeable evidence that the countries of the world are really willing to co-operate together. It is rather nicer to think of the possibilities of recovery than to dwell upon the immediate difficulties. The potential capacity for recovery is almost unlimited and the human factor enters into it. There are 30 million unemployed individuals only too anxious to be "at it." The whole forces of production are only too anxious to be liberated from the shackles which Governments and statesmen have placed upon them. There is an immense volume of deferred work to be carried out, deferred repairs, renewals and extensions, none of which will be put in hand until there is hope. There is a superabundance of raw material and food only waiting to be translated and transferred to empty cupboards and shelves. No one country can start that recovery by itself, but Great Britain, owing to the fact that our financial position, although it is not free from some anxiety is the envy of all, can do more than any other country by making it unmistakeably clear that we will enter the conference unhampered by prejudices, unbound by previous engagements and prepared with plans which will give a lead to the whole world in the progressive reduction of the shackles upon international trade. If I were to venture to give advice to those whose duty it will be to attend that conference I would advise them to sit down and to think carefully and long of the consequences of failure. They would rise from that useful exercise convinced that no obstacle of any sort should be allowed to stand in the way of success. Again I do not use my own words, but the words of the Preparatory Commission:

[Mr. White.]

> "The world is engaged to-day in economic war."

Therefore, the Economic Conference must be a peace conference, and it is a peace conference which will have a much more devastated area to repair than the Peace Conference at Versailles. There is one condition which is essential to success. Nations must come to that conference in a spirit of mutual accommodation. If they all come to ask for concessions, and are prepared to make none, the conference had better not be held at all.

The various problems which will arise are numerous, difficult and complex. I have already said that it would be quite useless to embark upon a discussion of them this afternoon in any detail, but there is this reassuring factor about the situation, that if they are difficult and complex they are all closely related, they are all complementary, and any successful step made in any one direction to the solution of any one of them clears the way and makes easier the approach to the next. We cannot expect to have a sound international currency policy unless we have previously secured a reasonable settlement of international debts. Equally, we cannot have a sound international monetary system unless and until we have a very much greater freedom of trade than exists to-day. Every obstacle which can be removed from that path will simplify the solution of the other difficulties which surround it and will clear the way to ultimate recovery.

On the subject of currency it would be a great help—I see that my view is shared by other Members who have put down an Amendment—if we could have a common policy with regard to currency for the Dominions and the Empire. I have always regretted that at Ottawa they did not give more attention to that matter of currency, because since the Ottawa Conference we have had within the Empire something like a competition in depreciation of currency that has certainly not improved the atmosphere and has tended to exaggerate and aggravate the difficulties of the general trade position. I would like to ask the President of the Board of Trade, if he is going to reply, whether the Government are, in fact, considering a common policy on currency with the Dominions, and also on tariffs. It is to my mind quite clear that if any important country is going to the World Economic Conference with a rigid, unbending mind and an inflexible policy that the Conference cannot succeed. I am impressed by the fact that the attitude of Great Britain and the British Empire in this connection may very well be decisive. The Motion which I am moving therefore invites the Government to take the lead and to prepare and lay before the Conference definite proposals for the reduction of tariffs and other trade barriers.

I do not think there can be any doubt as to the attitude of mind of the Government on this particular point. We in this quarter of the House are Free Traders. Our ultimate object is the removal of all barriers and the complete restoration of Free Trade. We also hold that if in the present state of the world this idea is not immediately attainable we have got to go step by step, and therefore we should make every effort to unite in a common policy with those other countries who are impressed by and believe in the necessity for a greater freedom of trade than exists to-day, and that we should for that purpose be prepared to enter into agreements and to form low tariff groups. In that connection it is clear that we should not get very far before we came into contact with the provisions of the Most Favoured Nation Clause in many of our commercial agreements. That is an important fact which would have to be taken into account. It is recognised by the International Commission of experts, who dealt with the subject in some detail and pointed out various ways in which the difficulties which might be expected to confront the negotiators might be dealt with.

Belief in the policy of forming low tariff groups is not confined to any one quarter of this House. It quite recently received the powerful support of my right hon. Friend the Member for Tamworth (Sir A. Steel-Maitland), who speaking in the House recently on the subject of our attitude towards other countries, after saying that it was all humbug to suggest that any one country could contract out of the world's troubles, used these words:

> "We should say to other countries, 'If you are willing to come down and make a low tariff group, then we are willing to try to meet you.'"—[Official Report, 16th February, 1933; col. 1296, Vol. 274.]

It is that policy which this Motion urges the Government to accept. I will not take up the time of the House in endeavouring to explain or to outline in detail the way in which the low tariff group might be brought about or the way in which it might function. I will refer to the suggestions of the expert Commission which I think are not only reasonable but admirable to a very great extent. I regret that hitherto, when such movements have been started simultaneously, not only in this country but outside it, the Government were not prepared to give them a very favourable reception.

I have been trying to understand the mind of the Government upon this subject. The policy which, I am suggesting, is part of our task at the World Economic Conference does not mean the abandonment of the most-favoured-nation Clause or the raising of tariffs against anybody. That is a very important point. It does not prevent us from giving free entry to goods from the Empire or from any other country. I believe that a powerful first step would be the making of economic peace. I have been trying, as I say, to understand the mind of the Government on this topic. There should be no doubt with regard to their attitude. The hon. Member for North Bristol (Mr. Bernays) a few days ago asked the Prime Minister whether it was the policy of the Government to urge at the World Economic Conference for the all-round reduction of tariffs, and was answered with an unqualified assent. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Runciman) has also addressed himself in no uncertain terms with regard to these matters. Speaking at St. Ives, the right hon. Gentleman said that he wished that the German Government would do away with that insane policy of quotas which was ruining the trade of Europe. The mind of the Chancellor of the Exchequer seems to be somewhat obscure. His statements are not as lucid in this regard as they are in many others. Speaking this week at Birmingham he said that international trade was hampered to-day as it never had been before by all sorts of barriers. He added:

> "I have no objection to those barriers provided they are reasonable, but excessive and oppressive barriers I complain of."

Speaking a little earlier at Edinburgh, the right hon. Gentleman used this expression:

> "If we can secure the lowering of the excessive tariffs that other nations have put round their borders, then I feel confident that trade will soon begin to revive."

I must confess that I am in some difficulty in explaining when a barrier is not a barrier and when a barrier ceases to be oppressive and excessive, and when, in point of fact, it becomes an aid to the development and the transaction of business. It surely cannot be that the Chancellor of the Exchequer thinks that what is a vice when practised by other countries is a virtue when carried out by his Government. If that be the case, and if it is the view of the Government that they can go to this Economic Conference and say to Germany, "Your quota is a restraint of trade. Your tariff is oppressive and in restraint of trade. That action by America was a restraint of trade; but our quotas and tariffs are not in restraint of trade," the right hon. Gentleman had very much better stay at home, because there will be no possibility of success on those lines. The Government's policy has been the ancient and historic policy of casting out devils by Beelzebub. I would remind the Government that on that occasion the casterout of devils was warned against trying that process, because he might become the chief of the devils. I hope that the mind of the Government is not moving in that direction.

[Mr. White.]

The Chancellor of the Exchequer, speaking in this House more recently, adopted an attitude which seems rather more hopeful than his utterances outside. Speaking on the Motion of my hon. Friend the Member for Stockport (Mr. Hammersley) last week, he said:

> "We have got to try to persuade other countries to act with us in removing the obstacles to the restoration of international trade. I do not myself despair of obtaining a considerable measure of agreement, because I see that the more difficult the situation becomes, the more desperate the position of other countries grows, the more likely they are to be ready to consider any scheme which you may put up to them which will give some reasonable prospect of relief."

Speaking of the task of raising prices he was even more definite. He said:

> "While the Government will certainly spare no effort in doing all that it is in the power of the Government to do to stimulate trade and raise sterling prices, yet at the same time we are not going to disguise from ourselves that the greater objective which lies before us is in the direction of international co-operation. For that purpose too, we shall take every opportunity which presents itself to us to get into agreement with other nations."—[OFFICIAL REPORT, 8th March, 1933; col. 1312, Vol. 275.]

I hope that the President of the Board of Trade may be able to tell us that the second thoughts of the Chancellor of the Exchequer really represent the mind of the Government in this all-important matter. I would like to ask the Government what is their idea and their ambition as to the scope of this conference and what it is that they envisage coming out of it. Is it to be another success on the same scale and of the same order as that which emerged with such pain from the Ottawa discussions? Is that the order of the thought of the Government in facing this vast international problem? In that case, merely a series of arrangements, and some small reductions of tariffs in this direction counterbalanced by additions in other directions, would be quite futile in face of the steady disintegration of the financial structure of the world.

Those who have carefully read the annotated agenda of the World Conference will be led to a more comforting conclusion, and that is that the way out from the present troubles is not hopeless. The position is far from hopeless. There is a way out for recovery, if only the nations will unite to clear the road for prosperity. Those who study the agenda will learn and deduce from it that the greatest slump of all has been the slump in human intelligence, and that it is only by the recovery in human intelligence that the situation can be saved. The lesson of the last 10 years, if it taught the world anything, must have brought home to us that co-operation for the welfare of mankind on a friendly and international basis offers the only chance of making this world a reasonable and fit place to live in. That should be the keynote of the conference.

I would also point out that, in these days, time is of the very essence of this matter. Events will not wait. The whole financial structure of the world is being rapidly undermined. Further unnecessary delays will be fatal. I am not suggesting that this conference should be called immediately; I know that that is not a practical proposition; but at least it would help if the Governments of the world would each state what their intentions are. That would be an important step, and it is, perhaps, the only step which we can take here and now this afternoon. The conference should be brought together at the earliest possible moment, and, in the meantime, the Government should, in clear and unmistakable language, indicate that they intend to pursue, not the policy of acting each one for himself, but the only policy which can lead to the restoration of the world.

3.51 p.m.

Major LLOYD GEORGE: I beg to second the Motion.

In doing so, I should like to congratulate the hon. Member for East Birkenhead (Mr. White) upon his admirable speech, and upon the clear way in which he has laid the facts of the situation before the House; and I should like to congratulate him still more upon having chosen this topic for discussion to-day. If any proof were needed of the serious view that Members in all quarters of the House take of the state of affairs in our own country, it is, surely, to be found in the fact that practically all the resolutions put forward on the days allotted to private Members are concerned with the situation in this country; and since, obviously, many Members will wish to take part in this discussion, I shall not detain the House for very long.

Some of the Motions that have been put down for discussion have dealt with the national situation here, but I am very glad that to-day we have an opportunity of discussing the international situation, because it must be obvious to all that, without international co-operation, there can be no permanent solution of our difficulties. I think it is also agreed in every part of the House that this is a situation which cannot long continue without disaster. As is stated in the report of the experts, the depression has been marked by accumulating stocks of agricultural produce and raw material, the curtailing of industrial production, and the hindering of international trade by various forms of restrictions which have in themselves intensified the very problems which they were designed to cure. Prices have fallen steadily, unemployment has risen to appalling heights throughout the world, and, as the commission of experts states, further loss of ground cannot be contemplated without the gravest foreboding.

That is the situation. There can be no dispute as to its gravity; the disagreements begin when we try to discuss causes and remedies. There is no doubt that it is desirable, as the report states, that there should be a rise in world prices, but there is disagreement as to how that is to be effected. One or two suggestions are put forward in the report. One is that there should be provision for easy money to promote the healthy expansion of trade. We have in this country to-day that easy money, but there is no healthy expansion of trade. Why? I think the Chancellor of the Exchequer gave the reason when he said that we were being prevented from using this money because the barriers to international trade were making it impossible for confidence to be restored. The Chancellor made that statement in this House. It is true. But, in passing, I would remind the Government that that does not apply to our own country. We have no tariff barriers in this country between producer and consumer, and, if it is essential that there should be a healthy expansion of business by the provision of cheap money, we certainly have in this country the cheap money, and the Government say that, thanks to their tariff proposals, they have "regained control of the home market." Having regained control of the home market, I should have thought that the best thing they could have done would have been to expand that market.

Another suggestion which the experts put forward is that prices can be raised by a policy of control and restriction, but they add that that raising of prices could not be maintained unless there were improved trade, which could only be got by the removal of restrictions. I hope that our Government is not going to the Conference prepared to put forward a policy of control and restriction. How can a policy of control or restriction be justified when the legitimate needs of consumers remain unsatisfied, when there is an army of unemployed throughout the world which, with its dependants, probably numbers 100,000,000 people? How can a policy of restriction possibly be justified until their legitimate needs are satisfied? If this or any other Government goes to the Conference and makes such a proposal, it will be not only folly, but criminal folly. If the present economic system can only survive by that means, then I doubt very much whether it can survive, and, indeed, I would say that I do not think it deserves to survive.

An outstanding feature of the report is that, no matter to what it refers—whether it be monetary policy, prices, or anything else—it always states that no lasting good can come until trade restrictions are removed. That is present in practically every one of the recommendations, and it is added that especial responsibility lies in this respect upon the great creditor nations. We are still the greatest creditor nation, though I doubt very much whether we shall remain so if these restrictions are to continue, for it is quite possible that the debts which our debtors owe us at the present time may very quickly become bad debts. There is no doubt as to our responsibility in this country; the question is, do we realise it? To judge from the speeches, some of which have been referred to by my hon. Friend, the Government do realise it. Perhaps I may quote one other by the Lord President of the Council, who put the point perfectly clearly. After referring to the fallacy of any country trying to isolate itself in prosperity, he went on to say:

[Major Lloyd George.]

> "It is the recognition of this that compels the Government to attach so much importance to the proposed World Economic Conference, for it is only through a general movement towards prosperity, started and accelerated by the removal of the obstructions to finance and trade, that this country or any other country may hope to progress."

That is perfectly plain; there is no mistaking the view of the Government; they all say that that is what they stand for. They are prepared to go to the Economic Conference and, they say, they are prepared to move for a reduction of various barriers. There is no mistaking their views, but I want to know: Are they prepared to act? Are they prepared to go to the Conference and put forward what my hon. Friend suggests in his Motion, namely, a definite proposition; or are they prepared to accept such a proposition if it came from another quarter? There is another question, which is very much more important: Are they in a position to make or to accept such a proposition?

I understand that the right hon. Gentleman is going to reply. He has had a great deal of experience. He has been negotiating, I understand, for some considerable time with foreign countries—bargaining, I suppose. Can he tell us to what extent he finds that he is hampered in his negotiations by the Ottawa Agreement? I think that we are entitled to know. We were told six months ago that foreign nations were clamouring at our door, that they were falling over each other to make agreements with us. Some of them have been falling over each other here for a considerable time, but not a single agreement has been signed, although the right hon. Gentleman is quite satisfied that progress is satisfactory. Well, it takes a long time. Six months have passed and no agreements have been come to. That fact confirms the opinion which many of us held at the time that the Ottawa Agreement is a tragic blunder, and there are indications that we are not alone in finding it out. There are indications in other parts of the Empire. They are finding out that the Ottawa Conference was not such a great success as was made out. But are the Government prepared to take the initiative in the formation of a group of Free Trade or low-tariff countries? I think we are entitled to an answer from the Government on those lines. Either you are going to have a tariff for bargaining purposes or you are going to have a tariff for protective purposes. Which is it to be?

Mr. HERBERT WILLIAMS: Both.

Major LLOYD GEORGE: Then I am not surprised that results have not been forthcoming. If the hon. Gentleman wants a tariff both for bargaining and Protection, I do not know how he is to do it. Are we to have the same humbug in economic disarmament as the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Epping (Mr. Churchill) referred to yesterday in regard to another subject? I think we ought to know what they really do mean. If the Government want a tariff for bargaining purposes, they must put forward some concrete proposal to the Economic Conference. If the tariff is for protection, they must apply their minds to another very serious problem. This country depends on international trade. The restoration of international trade is vital to our country with its densely populated areas. Surely I am not saying anything with which anybody would disagree when I say that that is impossible as long as those restrictions on trade are allowed to continue. But if the Government simply want a tariff for protective purposes, have they applied themselves to this question? In view of the loss of our international trade through it, are they prepared to face this question: Are the satisfied that this country can maintain 45,000,000 people in those circumstances? I would like to know whether they have ever applied their mind to it, and I would like to have their opinion upon it, because if they are not going to put forward proposals, they must answer the other question, which is of vital importance to this country. In the terrible situation in which the world finds itself, who is going to give a lead in showing the way out? Is it too much to ask that Great Britain should give the lead? [Interruption.] Never mind, we have more to gain by the lead than anybody else. Are we prepared to give that lead? It is a duty that we owe to our people, a duty that we owe to our millions of unemployed. Further than a duty, it is an opportunity to ritain to serve humanity. I beseech he Government not to lose that oppor- unity.

5 p.m.

Brigadier - General Sir HENRY ROFT: I beg to move, in line 1, to leave out from the second word "that" o the end of the Question, and to add nstead thereof the words:

one of the factors in aggravating world onomic distress has been the consistent ising of tariffs by the vast majority of the untries of the world since the War and e exploiting of the free market of Great ritain, which provided the dumping ground r the surplus products of those countries, ith disastrous results to British industry nd workpeople; congratulates His Majesty's overnment on having established a reason- ble tariff policy which ends the defenceless ondition of this country and renders it ossible to secure trade agreements with iendly countries, and arms the Government with the power to bargain with and, if ecessary, retaliate against countries with ostile tariffs; and further urges that His ajesty's Government, in considering these atters in connection with the World conomic Conference, should be ready so to odify existing treaties as to give tariff advantages to those countries which are ready reciprocate in the promotion of freer ade and to raise tariffs against those ountries which do not desire to recipro- ate."

The hon. Gentleman who introduced his question in a moderate speech to which, I am sure, no one in any quarter f the House could take any exception, irected our minds to one of the greatest roblems which confront not only this ountry but all countries of the world. As sual, we heard from the hon. and gallant Gentleman who seconded the Motion a speech which caught the imagination of he House. Its keynote really was: Are we prepared to give a lead? I think hat this country always appears to be iving a lead, and I am sure that some f us are beginning to hope that we will not give a lead which will make us idiculous and which, perhaps, will be reated with scorn by other countries. In he last few days we gave a wonderful ead to the world—a lead which some f us thought was a little bit hasty in he matter of the supply of armaments o the belligerents in the East. We have iven a lead on many questions, such as nancing countries of Europe in a way hat some of us felt was almost quixotic when one realises the condition of the ountries to which we have lent money. We endeavoured to give countries a lead during the late Government's career, when our late lamented friend, Mr. William Graham, with very great ability and sincerity, endeavoured to promote the idea of a tariff truce. All these leads which we have given have not been very successful, but, for all that, I am sure the whole House will desire to stand behind His Majesty's Government in putting forward any suggestions with regard to these great problems which they think will be helpful to the world as a whole. We only beg them not too hastily to give a lead if they know pretty well that there is no indication that other countries will follow.

I will say, in passing, only one word with regard to the very great problem of currency which the hon. Member mentioned. I think that from every angle business men are hoping that there may be some getting together of the Powers of the world with regard to this question. If the world will not come together on this question of currency, I still believe it is possible to make a start within the British Empire. Whatever views there may be on this subject, no one in any quarter of the House will deny to-day that it was an extraordinary lack of foresight when the Empire gradually grew up that we allowed various currencies to arise in different countries in the Empire. I believe that even now that is, perhaps, one of the avenues which have not been fully explored, and which, I hope, may have the attention of His Majesty's Government.

There is one part of the hon. Gentleman's Motion with which I cordially agree, and that is the last few words. It is very interesting, coming from such a quarter, to be told that the most-favoured-clauses of existing treaties should be modified as may be necessary. I remember speeches to a very contrary effect from those benches in the days gone by, but I find myself in agreement because I do not believe you can ever get what the hon. Gentleman wants and what I want by a somewhat different method, that is, reciprocity between the different countries of the world, until you have dealt with that question. Obviously, it will be impossible to do what he desires, and what, from a different angle, I desire, as long as it is possible to treat your friends better than they treat you.

[Sir H. Croft.]

One other word with regard to the speech of the hon. and gallant Member for Pembroke (Major Lloyd George). He spoke, I thought, rather sweepingly of the policy of restriction. I do not know whether that included primary products, but I think he will probably agree that it may be necessary, while some two-thirds of the world is out of action, namely, those who engage in agricultural pursuits, to have something in the way of restricting production if you are ever going to restore economic prices to those agricultural producers, and thus once more give them the opportunity of purchasing the goods from the industrial nations of the world. The hon. Gentleman's ideas appear to me to be rather of a benevolent character. I think we all agree with the kind of sentiments he uttered, but I venture to submit that he somewhat disregarded the facts. There is something very similar in his Motion to a speech many of us read from the right hon. Member for Darwen (Sir H. Samuel). I think it was when he was lunching upstairs and I was lunching downstairs. There the idea was thrown out of getting together the low-tariff countries, those countries who believe in 10 per cent. or something of that kind. I think it was the occasion when some unkind person in the audience, having lunched too enthusiastically but with great sobriety, threw out the remark that the speech was the death-knell of Free Trade. I am not sure, but the right hon. Gentleman will correct me if I am wrong about that.

Sir HERBERT SAMUEL: You are.

Sir H. CROFT: The genesis of this proposal, I think, comes probably from the same source. If I may use the phrase, I think it is a case of a naughty communication corrupting good politics. If the hon. Gentleman had his way and carried this Motion to-day, in my belief it would cause utter dismay among the whole of the industrial and agricultural population of this country. It is reminiscent of the whole case of the tariff truce. I remember when we gave that lead, and caused a pause for a moment in the thoughts of the world, but the only result, I think, was that four great competitors of ours immediately raised their tariffs. If the hon. Gentleman succeeded, the result would be that those great neighbours of ours who can produce their agricultural products so cheaply would immediately commence—I will not say "commence," because they are doing it largely to-day, but would immediately increase the process of unloading their surplus agricultural produce on this country, and, as he knows, at wreckage prices with which our country cannot possibly compete, and which His Majesty's Government are doing their best to stop at the present time. You would also immediately find that cotton goods, silk, iron and steel would once more pour into this country, and your unemployment figures, which have been held—let us be fair to His Majesty's Government in this respect—would once more advance by leaps and bounds.

I know that I shall be causing offence to a school of economists in this country, and, perhaps, even to one or two who sit on the Government Front Bench, but I think it is holding out false hopes to the people of this country to suggest that if you can get any considerable reduction in tariffs throughout the world that will solve the problem. As a matter of fact, it is very doubtful whether for a considerable time there would be any increased quantity of goods produced or consumed in the world as a result of that policy. You have to remember that since the War you have this vast range of countries which were never manufacturing countries before, which have become very efficient and which still have a wage level of 50 per cent. or more, if you include Japan and others, less than ours and, if you do what the hon. Member desires and get as near an approach as possible to Free Trade, there will still be that 50 per cent. of labour costs which no efficiency of ours can now ever discount in the long run. World prices, of course, are the real cause of the world malady.

I go a long way with the hon. Member in his ideas. I have all my life held the view that you can do a great deal towards promoting international trade by reciprocity. For the first time in our history we have a little brick wall round our country. Other countries have higher barriers. For the first time we are able to say: "If you will take two bricks off your wall, we will take one off ours, and it will be easier for us both to get over them." [Interruption.] Their tariff walls are mostly twice as high. I pass at information to the hon. Member for s edification. For the first time you e able by this means to have something at you can offer to foreign countries. or the first time among all parties in e House this dread of higher prices s been removed. The leader of the rty opposite on several occasions has dicated his belief, which is the belief every sane man, that you are only ing to see the world restored if whole- le prices rise. We had a most interest- g speech from the tutor of the Socialist arty, Mr. Lees-Smith, who delivered an ation not long ago, and he said the ery first action of the next Socialist overnment—he is a long-distance rophet—would be to do everything in eir power to raise wholesale prices. ven to-day the hon. and gallant Gentle- an the Member for Pembroke de- ored the fact that prices had llen steadily. We are getting on. e are getting that old idea out the way now, and we are all begin- ng to realise that the world can only ogress if there is a return to economic oduction. Having got rid of that idea think, if the hon. Member who moved e Motion carries his ideas to their gical conclusion, he will see that if ere is one thing that would prevent n improvement in wholesale prices, in is country at any rate, it is the unload- g of all the surplus products of other untries, which would have disastrous sults to our agricultural community.

May I state what I believe to be the onservative point of view. I believe hat all those who belong to the same arty as myself most heartily congratu- ate the Government on their achieve- ent, and not least do we congratulate hose who have not always seen eye to ye with us on this question that they ave put national considerations before arty. So did hon. Members on those enches who now cheer till their nation- lism evaporated a short time ago, and hey became once more the protagonists f party. This policy was introduced nly in the nick of time. I despair of ne or two hon. Members opposite, but he great majority of the House realises hat this policy came at the eleventh our and stopped a rot which filled every an in the country with alarm. But for he tariff, everyone knows that there vould have been 200,000 or 300,000 more nemployed to-day than there are. No one can dispute that. You only have to look at the figures of the reduction in imported manufactured goods. [AN HON. MEMBER: "Increased unemployment."]

There are more people employed in the manufacturing industries than when the Government first adopted their policy. [AN HON. MEMBER: "Coal and shipping."] I said the manufacturing trades—and coal and shipping are ultimately dependent on the productive industries of British manufacture. The effects of the policy that the Government have embarked upon are only just beginning to be felt in industry. I could take the right hon. Gentleman to South Wales and show him iron and steel works which have been closed for years and have now been opened. I can show him an increase of steel bars for re-rolling. [AN HON. MEMBER: "Where?"] In various districts in South Wales. I received a letter yesterday from a gentleman in the trade in South Wales who invited me to go down. I cannot pronounce the name, but I will give the hon. Member the information. There are in many directions indications of a slight revival. The question of steel has had a remarkable effect also on coal. I can tell the hon. Member the amount of coal that it takes to make a ton of steel bars. Perhaps he did not know that the two things are correlated. I can assure him that they are. The hesitant policy of the Government when they were impelled in the direction of their tariff policy resulted in so great a dump of foreign iron and steel goods in the original stages that it is only to-day that those supplies have been worked off.

I will mention another fact in case the hon. Member really believes that we have adopted a high tariff which is having a very serious effect upon our trade. You will find that our imports of manufactures last year, very largely after the tariff was completed, were only 36 per cent. down on the previous year and only 10 per cent. on 1924, and in volume manufactured imports were the same as in 1923, when the Leader of the Conservative party decided that they were so great that he must appeal to the country. Even with all your tariff policy up to date, you are still importing as many manufactures as you were in the high year 1923. I shall never criticise the Advisory Committee. The Government's policy in appointing it was a stroke of genius, and I hope it is going to be followed in the Dominions overseas. But it always seems to me that the Advisory Committee has never been treated fairly by Parliament. It ought to have had definite advice from this House as to what the House really required in the matter of a tariff. We never gave them any indication. They do not know the very question that was asked by both the Mover and the Seconder, whether our tariffs should be protectionist or revenue or high or low. I think Parliament should consider in the not too distant future whether we could not give to the Advisory Committee the advice which up to now they are lacking. The 50 per cent. Abnormal Imports Duty was introduced admittedly to cover the crisis of the moment. I do not know whether it was Beelzebub casting out sin, but the right hon. Gentleman did not prevent, as he might have done, the rapid scaling down of this duty. I believe that the Abnormal Imports Duty while it lasted was a perfect God-send to British industry and did no harm to anyone in the country.

[Sir H. Croft.]

I hope and pray that we shall see a more reasonable figure in some of these industries. The figures are so important that I must read them. I will give them in round figures without the hundreds. They are the monthly averages of retained imports while the Abnormal Import Duties were in operation. The first figure I will give is from 1st January to 26th April, 1932, and the second figure from May to December, when the Abnormal Import Duties were not in operation. Earthenware, under the Abnormal Import Duties, £4,000 monthly average, and in the last months, May to December, £18,000—a very great increase; glazed tiles, £1,600,000, and in the later months £10,000; domestic tiles £17,000, and in the later months £76,850; illuminated glass, £17,000 went up to £33,000; glass bottles, £9,000 went up to £22,000; tools, £15,000 went up to £25,000; cotton manufactures, £66,000 went up to £161,000; woollen manufactures, £64,000 went up to £140,000; silk hose, £13,000 went up to nearly £44,000. That is the result of Beelzebub, or whoever it was, interfering.

Mr. WHITE: Do I understand that the hon. Baronet's policy at the World Conference would be a general 50 per cent. tariff?

Sir H. CROFT: I can answer that at once. I think the scaling down of these duties from 50 per cent. to 20 per cent. was a most ghastly blunder. I think it was lack of experience. I want to see an average of more than 33⅓ per cent. In fact, I should like to see 33⅓ per cent. as the minimum. Since the hon. Gentleman asked me a question, I am absolutely convinced that if we could have kept this great range of goods on the 50 per cent. basis the right hon. Gentleman could then have gone to the International Conference, and he would have had a very much easier task. I believe that the vast majority of Members in this House do not agree that our tariff was introduced merely to promote Free Trade. Our tariff was introduced to give employment to our people, and we rejoice for what has been achieved. The hon. Gentleman knows that comparing this country with any other country in the world since we introduced our tariff we ought to go down on our knees and thank Heaven that the position of our country is so good compared with that of other countries.

Sir H. SAMUEL: Have not they got tariffs?

Sir H. CROFT: When this country was still under a Free Trade system, as the right hon. Gentleman knows, it was going headlong to ruin—we even persuaded him to join up to the national forces—and nothing could have saved us. All the rest of the world, it is true, are on a higher tariff basis. We have always contended that if you give Britain the same economic advantages as other countries possess, that, not only would we hold our own, but we would certainly do better than any other country in the world. That is what is happening. Let me also tell the right hon. Gentleman that since we have introduced the tariff policy we alone in the world have maintained our export trade.

I want to put a concluding idea before the right hon. Gentleman as to what we should aim at. I suggest that some such formula as this would really be helpful to the country. Each industry should be given such security as would guarantee the highest volume of employment to the workers available or capable of their own work in the particular industry, and only after sustained trial over a period of years should an industry be deprived of the full benefit of the tariff on the ground of unsuitability or inefficiency. I believe that that really is a principle which appeals to my hon. Friends who support His Majesty's Government. I urge them to look at the question from that standpoint.

Unemployment is the cloud which hangs over the land. Every right hon. and hon. Gentleman on that bench, and in every other part of the House, feels this question more than any other. There are still coming into this country manufactures which we can produce ourselves in sufficient quantities to give employment to thousands of our people, and I urge the Government, having regard to the fact that the protection of the Gold Standard no longer exists owing to so many countries having gone on to sterling, and so many other gold countries having adjusted their prices in order to meet the situation, to reconsider the question and to put those great industries once more in hope and heart. If we do that, we shall put a great many into employment in this country, and if we link it up with a stronger policy of Empire development and the moving of populations to where they have more chances of producing within the Empire, we shall really, and it is by that means alone that we shall make a substantial contribution to the employment of our people.

.35 p.m.

Mr. HERBERT WILLIAMS: I beg to second the Amendment.

My hon. and gallant Friend who so eloquently moved it has made a number of interesting suggestions on tariff problems. I am sorry that the hon. and gallant Member for Pembroke (Major Lloyd George) is no longer in his place. I should like to compliment him on the way he delivered his speech, but I disagree with some of the things he said. He referred to the Ottawa Agreement as being a tragic blunder. It is very unfortunate that anybody speaking from the Front Opposition Bench should make a statement of that kind without the slightest evidence in support of it. He merely made the bald statement. I know of no evidence that it has been a tragic blunder, and no evidence has been brought either by the hon. and gallant Gentleman or anyone else to that effect. Therefore, in the strongest possible way I condemn the making of such a statement in this Chamber when it may be reproduced all over the world and create an entirely false idea, particularly having regard to the very distinguished name the hon. and gallant Member bears.

He adopted the philosophical practice of many people of saying, " That it must be this or it must be that." There are so many people who say that it must be black or it must be white, but a great many things are grey. It is the old language of having given up beating your wife. You must have tariffs either for protection or for bargaining. My hon. and gallant Friend pointed out that if we had gone into the conference with foreign nations with tariffs already a little too high we could have negotiated very satisfactorily, and left ourselves adequately protected, and gained the concessions in return. I have often thought with regard to the Import Duties Act that if we had started off without Empire Free Trade but with Empire Preference we might have found it a little easier to negotiate at Ottawa with people who in some industries have tariffs which are obviously too high. In this world you have to be generous with your friends, but, at the same time, you have to be reasonably sensible.

The burden of the Motion which we are discussing is that Free Trade is really desirable, but there is a certain amount of reference to the World Economic Conference which is to come at some time or another. We must not over-emphasise the importance of external trade. The real truth of the matter is that we do literally earn our living, the bulk of us, by taking in each other's washing. There is such a variety of garments to be washed. There is a very large internal economic balance, and a great many people have not the faintest idea of the statistical situation. It will probably startle them to know that only 6 per cent. of the activities of the people of this country last year was devoted to supplying goods to foreigners. All the ancillary work was included in that 6 per cent. That is the relationship between the f.o.b. value of British exports, with all the services spent on them, and the material contained in them, in relation to the value of all the goods and services produced in this country in that period. You must not over-estimate the importance of export trade. There is no intrinsic merit in the export trade at all. The countries in the temperate zone cannot produce all their foodstuffs and raw materials and there are certain manufactures which they cannot produce. In order to pay for these you must have certain exports. As a result of a series of accidents in the past, some industries have been built up under artificial conditions, in that they depend in the main upon their export trade. There is no particular merit in exports.

[Mr. Williams.]

Mr. DAVID MASON: What is to happen to the shipping industry?

Mr. WILLIAMS: There is no particular merit in any industry, unless it is rendering an essential service. If you have two ships crossing the sea, one taking boots from this country to America, and the other bringing boots from America to this country, it is an entirely uneconomic process which ought to be washed out, and the world would gain at large if neither of those ships crossed the ocean at all. The whole purpose of industry is to produce at the maximum efficiency, and there is no justification for shipping to perform unnecessary services any more than there is for a clerk in a Government office to perform a job which need not be done. In the long run you do not create employment or prosperity for people by doing things which ought not to be done at all. It is just as well that we should recognise that this country will always import largely and export largely, but it wants to select its imports. It does not want to import those things which it can obviously produce for itself.

We have been very modest in our tariffs up to now, and I share the view of my hon. and gallant Friend that we are a little too modest. I do not think that anyone realises how modest we are. The very admirable journal produced every week by the Department of the right hon. Gentleman, The Board of Trade Journal, gave us on the 19th January a most illuminating article. It was based on the imports of 1930. That year was chosen because they had not been disturbed by the new tariffs. On the basis of that year we had total imports of £1,037,000,000. We applied duties of 10 per cent. to £204,000,000 worth of goods, 15 per cent. to £35,000,000, and 20 per cent. to £96,000,000 worth of goods. The higher duties on an ad valorem basis only covered £32,000,000 worth of goods. There was £161,000,000 worth of goods subjected to specific duties, and £322,000,000 worth of goods were left entirely on the Free List. There you have a range of tariffs lower than you will find in any other industrial country in the world. Our bargaining weapon in the Conference is to say to the other nations: "We will be willing to maintain our tariffs at the present low level, if you will reduce your already too high tariffs." That is the basis on which we should talk to those foreign nations.

Sir H. SAMUEL: Does the £322,000,000 on the Free List include Dominion and Empire products?

Mr. WILLIAMS: Oh no, it is not on that basis, but on the basis irrespective of their origin. The free list is much larger than that as certain goods are on the free list because of their country of origin. It is a basis irrespective of origin. That situation represents a very high degree of moderation. Though a convinced Protectionist, I have never been a very high Protectionist, because if you carry your tariffs too high you will do harm. I thought that my right hon. Friend (Mr. Runciman) was wrong in putting the tariff at 50 per cent., but if we had started at 33⅓ and kept it at that figure we should have been in a happier position. Fifty per cent. for all time would eventually produce inefficiency on the part of our manufacturers. We have to bear in mind that our balance of trade is still adverse. From the figures produced by the Board of Trade the other day, it is difficult to see where we are at the moment, because one does not know whether to take into account or not the unexpected payment which we made to the United States. If you leave that out of account, we are still substantially on the wrong side. Therefore, our currency system is still in a measure of danger, because we have to find, or we had last year, more money than we receive from the sale of our goods. On the other hand, this year has opened well, and it is clear that there is an upward movement of exports to Empire countries. That was shown in the last three months of 1932 after the Ottawa Agreements some of which were not in operation at all and others had only been in operation for some six weeks.

I agree with the Liberal party on the subject of the Most-Favoured-Nation Clause. I think that it is impossible for us to bring about the reductions in tariffs which we desire until we are free to negotiate and either to impose excessive duties on products of an individual country, or equally to give specially favourable treatment to the goods of an individual country which we are not compelled to extend to others. We have to go back to the system pursued at one time in this country, and which certainly has been pursued to a large extent by the United States of America and is now the policy of Canada, of what is known as the conditional clause. You give an undertaking not to place a country above a certain level and you are entitled to put the country on a favoured list. If hon. Members will read the report of the committee appointed by the League of Nations they will find there set out an example of both the conditional and unconditional clauses. I would like to see His Majesty's Government take their courage in both hands and announce to the whole world simultaneously the renunciation of the Most-Favoured-Nation Clause in every treaty and offer in exchange the conditional clause, and then they would be free to enter into effective negotiations. The hon. and gallant Member for Pembroke said:

> "If our restrictions—which have not been going on very long—continue, the time will come when our creditors will not be able to pay us."

That is a statement loosely made; we so often talk about the "foreigner," as if there was one gigantic collective foreigner. [An HON. MEMBER: "Our creditors!"] I said "foreigner." As a matter of fact, there are some nations that owe us very little, at least on the commercial basis; most of them owe us a great deal on another basis which apparently they are not going to pay, and everybody seems unanimous in saying that they should not pay, provided that we are not going to pay anybody else. But so far as commercial debts are concerned, we are not large creditors of our commercial competitors, but we are creditors largely of people with whom our trade is complementary. If the hon. and gallant Member studies the trade returns for January, in which there is an analysis of trade showing the exports and imports, he will find that the new policy has had little or no effect on our imports and exports with those countries that owe us a great deal of money. His fears, therefore, concern things which have no existence.

The hon. Member who moved the Motion states that the chief factor in producing the world-wide economic depression is to be found in the financial and economic restrictions placed on international trade. That statement does not fit the facts. In 1928 the world enjoyed the next most prosperous year that it had ever known: more people were in employment throughout the world, enjoying a higher standard of living. The only year that beat it was the next year, which continued to be an extremely prosperous year until the beginning of October. There were heaps of tariffs at an abnormally high level, and we were not getting our fair share of the prosperity, though in this country in 1929 there was a larger production of goods, more people were working, and there was a higher standard of living than there had ever been before. Into this world, full of every kind of tariff restriction, which had grown prosperous despite all these tariff restrictions, came the Wall Street crash, which I have always attributed to one outstanding cause: the excessive prosperity of the United States. The Wall Street crash stands out more than any other solitary thing as a cause of the world's present distress. War debts were not the outstanding cause; they were suspended for 18 months, and the position was worse at the end of that suspension than when it took place. We must not exaggerate, or allow people to make statements without looking up the facts of the situation.

I hope that His Majesty's Ministers will be willing to accept the suggestion made by my hon. and gallant Friend that there should be some definite broad direction of policy to the Import Duties Advisory Committee. I agree with him entirely when he says that it would be deplorable if the decisions of the Advisory Committee in respect of individual industries ever became a matter of political controversy. We want to avoid that, and those of us who have sometimes been disappointed with some of the recommendations have done all we could to dissuade our friends from making them a matter of controversy. I do think, however, that it is the duty of Parliament to say to this committee that the general sentiment of the people of the land to-day is in the neighbourhood of 33⅓ per cent.

[Mr. Williams.]

If the time comes when we have in office in this country a Government which is predominantly Free Trade in its outlook, it is not likely to restore a policy of general Free Trade. It might give a general instruction to the Import Duties Advisory Committee in that direction, in terms of a much lower rate of duty, and within that general rate it would be the job of the Committee to make the necessary adjustments to fit every particular industry. But we should be neglecting our duty if we left to those gentlemen the sole responsibility of determining the general tariff level of our country. Naturally the recommendations they make must be conditional on the complete and absolute freedom of His Majesty's Ministers to negotiate either with Empire or with foreign countries. Subject, however, to those conditions, I think it would be an admirable thing if a kind of general instruction were given which would result in the fixing of tariffs on a rather higher level than the existing one. To do so would give a good deal of satisfaction in many industries.

4.51 p.m.

Mr. HENDERSON STEWART: In rising for the first time to address the House, I beg for the indulgence which it so generously and unfailingly accords to a new Member. May I, at the beginning, associate myself with the complimentary remarks that have been offered on the speech made by the Mover of this Motion? I am not sure that I agree with every word in the Motion, but with its general tenor there can be, on these benches here and, indeed, in other parts of the House, very little, if any, disagreement. The hon. Member for Rotherham (Mr. Dobbie), who showed more boldness and alacrity than I in entering the lists of this House, took the opportunity of his speech to interpret the meaning of his victory. Rotherham was lost to the National Government, and lost, as far as we could gather, on one single item of policy—namely, the means test, which was the main subject of discussion during the contest. East Fife, on the other hand, was held for the Government, but, equally with Rotherham, on one main issue. In our case the issue was the Government's handling of the international trade position. That happens to be the subject which we are discussing this afternoon, and I am grateful, therefore, for the opportunity which you, Sir, have given me of making this the subject of my first contribution to the House.

In East Fife, fortunately, we do not experience the acute and widespread distress suffered in Rotherham and industrial areas of that kind. Our people, therefore, are able to take a wider view of the problems of the country than, I am afraid, is possible in a community a considerable portion of whose people are living or expecting to live on the transitional payment. It is difficult to take the big, wide outlook in an unemployment queue. Our better fortune in the North is due in large measure to the variety of activities in the division—agriculture, fishing, mining, linen works, linoleum, jute, and even golf—a not inconsiderable industry, as many hon. Members know. Some of these industries have suffered and are suffering acutely at this time, but they have not all suffered all the time. The prosperity of the lucky ones has reacted on the others, and we have been able, therefore, to maintain a somewhat higher level of employment than other areas.

The diversity of activities—of trades—has had its effect, too, in broadening the interests of the community. Some—indeed, most—of the major trades are concerned with the export market in large or small measure, and it may be for that reason—its interest in overseas trade—that East Fife has been a traditional Liberal seat. I feel sure that my hon. Friend the Member for Dumbartonshire (Commander Cochrane), who represented the Division so ably in this House a year or two ago, will not dispute that suggestion. Indeed it may even be described as a traditionally Free Trade seat. It was represented in this House for well nigh half a century by the most brilliant and powerful advocate of Free Trade that we have ever known. In view of all these facts, it is not surprising that the electors of that division should have taken the keenest interest in international problems, and that I should have chosen as the main reason for seeking support for the National Government its handling, present and future, of the international trade problem. The result of the ballot shows that in that part of Scotland at any rate, with all its traditions, the Government policy is approved and the electors see in its continuance the best hope for the future.

For what is the position? Great Britain—as the Seconder of the Motion said, very rightly—is dependent upon her export trade. I am not sure that I can accept the figure of my hon. Friend the Member for South Croydon (Mr. H. Williams) that the export trade accounts for only 6 per cent. That figure is only, I suggest, an indication of the great fall in all export trade during the last two or three years. The truth is that two out of three of the unemployed at this time are connected, directly or indirectly, with some kind of exporting or shipping trade, and there can be no lasting relief to these men until new markets for their produce have been opened overseas. Next to the maintenance of peace in the world, there is no more urgent problem facing the National Government than that of finding new markets. Time was when the free movement of gold and exchanges, of goods and services automatically adjusted trade. We grew rich under that system. But that day has gone, and we are the poorer for its passing.

I am entirely in agreement with the hon. Member who moved this Motion in deploring the restrictions which deface the frontiers of every country and which restrict the free flow of trade between one nation and another. These restrictions strangle business. Our domestic exports to the United States, for example, have been reduced to one-third of what they were four years ago through excessive tariffs over there. In the Argentine the effect has been in many cases to kill trade. I can offer the House a very small but typical example. Golf club shafts, hickory shafts, invoiced to Buenos Aires at 5s. 3d. each, are subjected to a tariff there of 8s. 7d. each, and the total cost to the buyer therefore amounts to 14s. The result is that the agents for that St. Andrews firm have wired St. Andrews saying: "No more supplies; trade is practically dead." The system of quotas in France has caused endless trouble. The export bounties of Germany, in which the hon. Member for East Aberdeen (Mr. Boothby) is so interested, have threatened to dislocate a great industry in which both he and I are vitally concerned. Everywhere, particularly in the Argentine, where vast sums of money are lying frozen, money belonging to exporters in this country, exchange restrictions hamper trade. Mad with an unreasoning nationalism, countries have followed each other, chased each other, in destroying the channels of trade; and the whole world suffers. In self defence—and here I find myself for the first time at variance with the hon. Member who moved the Motion—we were forced to take emergency measures to protect our standard of living: I could see no alternative. But it is wrong for this country and wrong for every nation in the world to continue these tariffs and other barriers to trade, and the sooner they are removed the better for all nations.

I agree with the Motion in urging upon the Government the earliest possible summoning of the World Economic Conference and the preparation of the British case for the removal of restrictions. But we must face the facts. Circumstances are not favourable, I am afraid, to the world conference now or in the near future. You cannot have a world conference without first having the spirit of conference. I do not see that spirit, rather do I hear the tramping of troops, and that is not the best accompaniment for a close examination of the complicated problems such as the World Economic Conference will have to tackle. What then? I do not subscribe, and I cannot subscribe, to the full policy of reciprocity which has been expounded this afternoon, but I say that it will not be enough to sit down and wait for more peaceful times. We should proceed with greater energy to arrive at agreements as the result of the negotiations which are now being carried on with individual countries. The representatives of the Argentine are in London now. No country presents a more artificial or a more harmful system of trade restrictions than the Argentine. We should strive to reach an agreement so that the products of the two nations can be freely exchanged. Negotiations are proceeding with several countries in Europe; let us expedite these negotiations.

East Fife registered a vote of confidence in the Government, but it also asked for further action. The coal trade of the East of Scotland looks to the Government to secure outlets in Scandinavia. By no other means can the unemployed miners in that part of the country find work. The herring industry looks to Russia and Germany for its markets; they are mainly closed now. I was returned to this House because the men employed in these great industries believed that this Government more than any other, through reciprocal trading agreements, can find markets for them and, therefore, work for them; outlets for their produce. No Government has ever had greater authority than the present Government. It commands still the confidence of the people as no other Administration has done since the War. It must not fail these men who are looking for export markets. The men in the fishing villages are suffering. Their weekly income is often only a few shillings, less even than the transitional benefit to which they are not entitled, Their wives and their children are suffering; families that once were proud to own their cottages are now letting off rooms and living huddled in the kitchen. Food is becoming scarce; but, worse than all, the spirit of these fishermen is breaking. They do not demonstrate. There is no Hyde Park in East Aberdeen, or in East Fife, where these men can parade their complaints. They do not show their poverty; they are too proud to admit defeat, economic or otherwise, but it is crushing them. This Government and this Parliament have a responsibility to every family in these fishing villages. A great, proud people who did magnificent work for the country in its hour of peril, they ask now only for the opportunity for further service. Surely this House will not deny them that simple right.

[Mr. Stewart.]

5.8 p.m.

Mr. CHARLES BROWN: I should like to congratulate the hon. Member for East Fife (Mr. Henderson Stewart) on his very admirable speech. He comes fresh to this House from a triumph in a by-election and he concluded his speech by adding one more to those numerous descriptions which we frequently hear as to how the part of the country which he represents is experiencing, as other parts of the country are experiencing, steadily worsening economic conditions. The hon. Member for South Croydon (Mr. H. Williams) always makes an interesting contribution to our discussions, but to-day he made the most amazing contribution that I have ever heard him make. He intended to convey the impression that the whole development of international trade has more or less been a tremendous blunder in the history of mankind. I could not put any other construction upon his words or upon the arguments he used. But while listening to him I felt that, after all, our social life in this country is what it is largely because in the past we have been able to draw on all the world for many of the things which we now regard as essentials of life. Why the hon. Member for South Croydon should speak in the way he did about international trade passes my comprehension. It may be due to the fact that he has to go out of his way to try and bolster up the very faulty arguments he uses in favour of tariffs.

During the Debate we have heard from the hon. and gallant Member for Bournemouth (Sir H. Croft) and the hon. Member for South Croydon two different views, which have been responsible for the policy out of which many of our difficulties have arisen. The hon. and gallant Member for Bournemouth brought before us again the idea of building the British Empire into a sort of self-contained economic unit, and the hon. Member for South Croydon preached a self-sufficient nationalism. Surely, if the world is suffering at this time from one thing more than anything else it is from this idea of a self-contained nationalism. Most of our difficulties are created by trying to call into existence economic systems founded on this principle. The hon. Member for East Fife talked about the tramping of troops. We all know that the rivalries which are engendered in one way or another by the economic policies which have been pursued in recent times are bound to lead to all kinds of friction, which in the end will find expression in the growth and development of militarism in all its forms. It is the necessary concommitant of economic friction engendered by the self-contained nationalism which is preached in these days.

Having listened to the Mover and Seconder of the Motion expounding the doctrine of Free Trade, and to the proctionist arguments on the other side, feel that the weight of argument lies ntirely with those who have brought rward the Motion. Obviously, if we re going to pursue a policy of restricons and a further building up of tariff arriers, then, inevitably, we shall get to deeper difficulties still. The House -day has been asked to direct its attenon to the forthcoming Economic onference. So far as that conference concerned, and the relations of His Iajesty's Government to that confernce, very much depends upon whether is Majesty's Government have any efinite views as to what should be done. s far as I can gather their views are ot very definite. I can find nothing in e speeches of their spokesmen which ads me, to believe that they have rmed any definite policy as to what ught to be done in existing circumances. They are not prepared to go to e conference and advocate the policy commended in the Motion. I do not ant to discourage the hon. Member for irkenhead (Mr. Graham White) but I not think he will find, even after the dmirable speech he has made, that he ill succeed in inducing the representaves of His Majesty's Government to go the World Economic Conference and pport the policy he advocates. Nor do think that the hon. and gallant ember who moved the Amendment the Seconder will get out of e Economic Conference, as far as is Majesty's Government are conrned, what they are expecting, ecause the Government is really a nonescript Government, neither Free Trade r Protectionist. [AN HON. MEMBER: "That is quite wrong!"] Someone says at that is quite wrong. I suggest that on. Members who are Protectionists and ho feel that the Government is not Proctionist ought to do everything they n to remove it as quickly as possible. also say to hon. Members who are Free raders and who feel that the Government is not a Free Trade Government, at they too should do everything they n to remove the Government as quickly possible.

Mr. BOOTHBY: What are you going put in its place?

Mr. BROWN: The hon. Member asks hat I would put in its place. Before I ldress myself to that question I would comment on the respective policies which are being advocated in relation to what seems to me to be the real difficulty facing us at the moment. That difficulty surely is that the great masses of the people, not only in this country, but in other countries, are unable to obtain many of the things they greatly need. There must be something radically and fundamentally wrong with an economic system which both Free Traders and Protectionists are seeking to bolster up. The Members of the Government will only go to the World Economic Conference to do all they can to bolster up what is obviously a rapidly decaying economic system. Whatever they do will be mere patchwork, because they will not face up to the real issues which confront us in the world to-day.

Now I address myself to the hon. Member for Eastern Aberdeen (Mr. Boothby), who interrupted. In view of the fact that neither the Free Trader nor the Protectionist is likely in the long run to get us out of our difficulties, though they may temporarily alleviate them, the only hope for the country is the substitution of the Government now occupying the Treasury Bench by a definitely Socialist Government, which will direct its attention to the concrete reconstruction of the existing economic system. That is my answer to the hon. Member. Consequently, although at the World Economic Conference I would like to see the Government pressing for a policy of world co-operation, believing as I do that we shall only even alleviate our difficulties by a further integration of the world's economic life, I think that that would at any rate get us out of some of our difficulties. But I have no illusions as to what will be the ultimate outcome of the Economic Conference. It will not solve for us in any way the real economic problem which awaits solution. That can only be solved when the men who govern this country are determined completely to reconstruct a breaking and tottering economic system which, in the course of going to pieces, is inflicting almost intolerable hardship and suffering on millions of human beings.

5.20 p.m.

Mr. BOOTHBY: I would like to join the hon. Member who has just sat down in offering my very sincere congratulations to my hon. Friend the Member for

[Mr. Boothby.]

East Fife (Mr. Henderson Stewart) upon what I humbly venture to suggest is one of the best maiden speeches we have listened to for many a day. Even although my hon. Friend is a Liberal I am bound to say that I find myself in substantial agreement with almost everything that he said. [An Hon. Member: "What are you?"] I am not a Liberal, whatever else I may be. This is a most extraordinarily interesting Motion, touching what I believe to be the most vital question of the hour, and I think that the House owes a debt of gratitude to the hon. Member who brought it forward. We shall probably all agree, whether Liberals or Conservatives or Socialists, that the fundamental cause of the economic crisis in which the world finds itself to-day is the fall in wholesale world commodity prices which has taken place continuously since 1921 so far as this country is concerned, and has sharpened since 1929. I have always maintained that a contributory cause to that catastrophic fall in prices was the financial policy pursued by this country during the years 1920 to 1930—the policy of deflation, which was necessitated by our going back to the Gold Standard at the pre-War parity of exchange. That was a policy which was settled as long ago as 1921 and carried through by successive Governments in this country, and I have never ceased to believe that it was a calamitous policy, not only from the point of view of the interests of this country, but from the point of view of the whole world.

There is no good crying over spilt milk, but I do think that now we are in a position of comparative freedom of action in these matters, we should consider very carefully before we commit ourselves in the immediate future to any very definite policy which might involve similar disastrous results. As a result of this fall in world prices the situation first went slowly down, and then more rapidly from bad to worse. To-day we are in a very different position from that which we occupied in 1929 or 1930. More drastic measures are now required to get us out of the mess we are in, than would have been required a few years ago, because the whole world to-day is literally frozen with fear. Confidence has gone in almost every country. I suggest to Liberals that tariffs and exchange restrictions are not really the cause of the trouble. They are only symptoms of the real anxiety, and even the fear, of every single important Government in the world with regard to the present economic situation.

The Minister of Agriculture designated some of my Liberal friends the other day as "barrier sweepers." He referred to those hon. Members, particularly in the Liberal party, who are always talking about sweeping away the barriers which obstruct world trade. But we shall not get very much further by mere barrier-sweeping now. In my opinion we have to go deeper than that, and to seek what are the causes of the barriers which are admittedly obstructing international trade at the present time. I do not think we shall get very much further by trying to pretend that economic nationalism will be removed from the world in the immediate future. In my opinion economic nationalism has come to stay for a considerable time, and the methods employed by economic nationalists, tariffs, quotas, restrictions, controls, and even prohibitions, are also likely to remain in the world for some time to come. We must adapt ourselves to the conditions with which we are confronted, and see what we can do for our people and for the world in the existing conditions, accepting that the policy of economic nationalism, so far from dying down, shows every sign of increasing; and seeing what, in these circumstances we can do to alleviate its rigours, and trying to lead the world, as I think we can, back to some form of sanity in international economic relations.

The cause of the world economic crisis is admitted by every party—the fall, continuous and steepening, in wholesale commodity prices throughout the world. What is the remedy? Surely the remedy is to re-establish, by some means or another, the relation between prices and costs, not only in this country but in other countries as well. In order to do that we have either to raise prices or to lower costs; and in order to lower costs we have to lower wages. In my submission to lower wages is merely to aggravate the problem, still further to reduce consumption, still further to reduce expenditure, and ultimately still further to reduce prices. I am emphatically in favour of our adopting the former course, which is to raise wholesale prices by me means or another. How can we that? How can we raise wholesale ices in this country and throughout the rld? It seems to me, by any analysis, at there is only one way, and that is increase expenditure, so that demand es up until ultimately it begins to ceed potential supply.

I have always supported the views of ose who maintain that, having got to pitch we have reached now, the only mediate way to increase demand is to crease what the economists call loan penditure. It is often asserted, not ly in this House but outside, that rigid onomy in productive expenditure is cessary to-day in order to increase vings and to make additional capital ailable for industry and private enterise. But observe the double fallacy derlying that assertion in existing cir-mstances. First of all it is assumed at there is a fixed supply of capital.
ere is not. Credit is infinitely flexible, t only in this country but throughout world. It depends primarily upon nfidence, which we have to restore.
condly, it is assumed that in existing cumstances private savings, if they re increased, would find their way into oductive industry. I do not believe at they would. I believe that a great rease in private savings, if it were ought about, would find its way first o the repayment of debts, and then o Government securities, as the safest m of investment.

Nobody but a fool is going to risk prie savings at the present time in indus-unless he sees some chance of a sonable return. You are not going to e the necessary impetus and restart wheels of industry, in this or other ntries by mere barren economy in pro-ctive expenditure for the purpose of reasing private savings. That might ve been effective five or six years ago, t now you have to turn to more drastic asures. In this connection I do not nk it is without significance to recall t, in the second half of the 19th cen-y, the factor which was most respon-le for hauling this country out of two jor depressions was increased expen-
ure in capital development on the railys, and electricity. The factor most ponsible for hauling the United States of the depression of 1921 was the mendous expansion of expenditure in pital development on roads and on motor transport. I believe that if the Government take their courage in their hands, the factor that will be most responsible for hauling this country out of the present depression will be expenditure in capital development upon housing construction in the next three or four years.

Look at Europe at the present time. They are far ahead of us in slum clearance, and in housing schemes. Go to Vienna, to Hamburg, to almost any German city and you will find better working-class conditions, as far as housing is concerned, than can be shown in any big industrial centre in this country. The irony of the business is that a large part of the money which went to create these new housing schemes came from the City of London. It would have been much better had that money been spent in this country, and the City of London would not have regretted it, because they would have had a safer and surer return upon their money if they had lent it in this country than they have in existing circumstances. [AN HON. MEMBER: "But they would be getting less interest."] They would be getting a lower rate of interest but for a much longer time. My argument applies not only to housing, but to electrical development. We are coming along slowly in that respect, as far as the Southern Railway is concerned. But the railways of Switzerland and Northern Italy, and even the French railways are much further on than we are in the matter of electrification. If one compares those countries with this country, if one looks at our filthy slums—a disgrace to civilisation—our declining railways, and our meagre electrical development, one can surely say, "Here is a theme to which the Government should give very close and earnest attention.

I will only give one example, as regards the railways. The railways always complain that people are more prone to travel by road than by rail. Look at the railway stations in this metropolis. Are they inviting? Do they, by their amenities, appeal to people? What hon. Member would willingly go to Liverpool Street, for example, or King's Cross, if he could possibly help it? I ask hon. Members to compare the great termini of London with the magnificent railway station which has been erected recently at Milan largely through the drive energy and inspiration of Signor Mussolini. Apart from anything else, it is one of the finest examples of modern architecture on the Continent. I think the time has come when we ought to show a little less fear in this matter of constructive and productive expenditure, and a little more imagination than we have done in the last few years.

[Mr. Boothby.]

I was very interested, as I dare say were all hon. Members, in an article from the pen of Mr. Keynes which appeared in the "Times" this morning. I think it was the most interesting article so far of the series which he is contributing. In that article, he compared the effect of improving our foreign balance of trade, with the effect of a policy of loan expenditure in this country. He pointed out that the Labour Administration had made some halting, timorous and largely futile, attempts at a policy of loan expenditure, under admittedly difficult conditions, and had failed. He also pointed out, what I am sure we are all agreed upon, that the National Government had made some very bold, resolute, determined and largely successful experiments, in the direction of improving our foreign balance of trade. But, he said, the improvement in our foreign balance of trade had been largely off-set, as far as a revival of prosperity and a reduction of unemployment were concerned, by the reduction in loan expenditure carried out under the influence of the present Government. He said that this was the supreme moment to carry through the two policies of improving the balance of trade by wise and judicious restriction of imports, and of developing and expanding loan expenditure in this country, simultaneously. His submission, if I have read him aright, was that if the Government would pursue both lines of policy, simultaneously and resolutely, we would quickly see an appreciable result on the figures of unemployment.

I believe that in that submission Mr. Keynes is right; and I ask the right hon. Gentleman the President of the Board of Trade, if he is going to reply, whether the Government do not now see that, having successfully restricted the flow of imports, having to a large extent restored the balance of trade, having carried through successfully a great conversion scheme, the essential corollary to all this is a policy of expansion and productive development at home, if we are to make any serious inroads upon the increasingly alarming figures of unemployment in this country? What is the policy of the Government in this matter? That is what we want to know. Is it expansion, or still further contraction? Is it productive expenditure, or better and larger cuts all round? That is what we have a right to know; and that question brings up a vital point raised by several hon. Friends of mine recently as to foreign treaties. We were told at the General Election, and have been told since—and I for one believe it to be true—that one of the main advantages which we would derive as a country from controlling, regulating, or even prohibiting imports from abroad, would be that we should have a weapon in our hands with which to negotiate favourable foreign trade agreements with European countries.

I was glad that my hon. Friend the Member for East Fife raised that question, because the interests of his constituents in this matter are largely similar to the interests of my constituents. We have both a large number of farmers, and a large number of fishermen. Our farmers want to obtain a reasonable price for their produce and our fishermen want access to the European markets. And at the present moment neither can get either. I think the reason is that none of these treaties, about which we heard so much, those treaties which were to be based upon reciprocal advantages to the European countries and ourselves, have so far materialised. I ask the right hon. Gentleman whether he can give the House any enlightenment upon this vital question—is he taking any steps to stop the importation of subsidised goods from Europe? He himself has admitted in figures, if not in fact, that oats and oat products, deliberately subsidised by foreign governments, have smashed the market for our own producers. Is he taking any step to deal with that situation? Then, what steps is he taking—I refer to the industries with which I am more directly concerned, but the coal industry, for example, is just as important—to obtain access to European countries for the goods which we wish to export? All depends upon these commercial treaties which, we learn, he is negotiating. Some of us are beginning to think that the right hon. Gentleman has been negotiating too long, and we ask him, can he not hurry up the negotiations a little? We also ask him whether he is entirely convinced that the most-favoured-nation clause is essential in all these treaties. Some of us are beginning to think that it might be modified.

I beg the Government to give a lead in all these matters. Money, as the right hon. Gentleman knows, was never so cheap as it is to-day in this country. No one but the most violent political partisan would deny credit to the Government for that fact. It is largely because of the confidence in this country, which was restored by the accession of the National Government, that money is so cheap. Why do the Government not use the advantages which they have created, instead of sitting down, having achieved that very remarkable feat, and doing nothing further?

Mr. ANEURIN BEVAN: Surely my hon. Friend will admit that cheap money is a symptom of industrial depression and is an evidence of the failure of the system, and not one of the achievements of the National Government.

Mr. BOOTHBY: I do not agree at all with my hon. Friend. During the time that the Administration which he supported was in power, money was much dearer, and industrial depression was just as bad. Cheap money, I readily admit, cannot by itself rid the country of industrial depression, but it would be a good thing to use the cheap money, and cheap materials as well, when we have the opportunity, in order that an impetus shall be given, which may haul us out of the industrial depression. As a matter of fact you will never balance your Budget unless and until you increase the national income. The only way you can hope to increase the national income is by increasing industrial prosperity; the only way you can increase industrial prosperity is by getting a rise of wholesale prices; and the only way you can raise wholesale prices is by increased loan expenditure for capital development.

Instead of bemoaning tariffs, which have come to stay throughout the world, for the time being, the House would do better to concentrate upon urging the Government, first, to adopt a vigorous constructive and imaginative policy at home—that is the first essential and the necessary condition of any recovery in the world at large—and, secondly, to concentrate upon coming to some arrangement for economic co-operation in the near future, not with the whole world, for we have had enough of world conferences since the War, and they have all been dismal failures, but with the most important country of the lot, the United States. I feel very strongly about this matter. I have not had an opportunity of addressing the House upon this subject since I returned from the United States, and my visit there in November and December last year convinced me more than ever that not only is it possible to achieve economic co-operation with that great country, but that it is the most desirable thing, from the point of view of the whole world, that could happen at the present time.

If we achieved a measure of co-operation with the United States, not only with regard to War debts, which I believe can be done, but also with regard to financial policy, and currency, there need be no fear as to the success of the World Economic Conference. Between us we can carry through anything. The right hon. Gentleman the President of the Board of Trade knows full well what could be done if we came to terms with the United States. I do not mind if those terms involve going back to the Gold Standard under a guarantee that the Federal Reserve Bank and the Treasury in Washington will co-operate with us in working that standard, and making it efficient for international purposes. If we could come to real terms, and arrive at a real economic agreement and basis of co-operation with the United States, I believe it would be a decisive step in restoring the fortunes of the world and of the capitalist system. I believe this can be done, and that never was the opportunity so great as it is at the present time.

Nobody can deny the vigour, courage and imagination which the President of the United States has shown during the last few weeks in dealing with an acute financial and economic crisis. I find myself wishing sometimes that the National Government here, with all the prestige, power and authority which they undoubtedly enjoy—no less great than that enjoyed by President Roosevelt—were now displaying an equal vigour, courage and enthusiasm in dealing with our affairs. I am sure there has never been an opportunity in the whole history of the world when economic co-operation between Great Britain and the United States could be obtained upon such beneficial terms to both, and that the Government of this country ought to address itself to that task above almost anything else. In conclusion, I would like once again to beg my right hon. Friend to urge the Chancellor of the Exchequer, when he comes to introduce his Budget, to produce something constructive, something a little imaginative; to suspend the Sinking Fund, reduce taxation, embark upon loan expenditure, and lift not only this country but the whole world out of the abyss into which we have sunk.

[Mr. Boothby.]

5.47 p.m.

The PRESIDENT of the BOARD of TRADE (Mr. Runciman): The House has listened with great interest to-day to a series of speeches which have shown a degree of unanimity that one would scarcely have thought possible in this House. My hon. Friend who opened the discussion did so in a speech which was very quiet in tone but very forceful in argument, and I congratulate him upon the skill with which he dealt with his subject. The Motion was seconded by my hon. and gallant Friend the Member for Pembroke (Major Lloyd George), who, I was glad to find, was speaking in the presence of his father. His father must have noted with great satisfaction the advance made by my hon. and gallant Friend in his Parliamentary skill. We have had since then a number of speeches marked with considerable ability, and I should like in particular to congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for East Fife (Mr. Henderson Stewart) on his maiden speech in this House.

Let me come now to the speech which has just been concluded. My hon. Friend the Member for East Aberdeen (Mr. Boothby) was enterprising enough in the closing months of last year to go to America. He has been back now, I think, something like three months. It is some considerable time since his return, and during the three months that he was here before the crisis in America, I do not think he told us what he anticipated. I have no doubt that my hon. Friend could see America going headlong to ruin, but he did not tell us. We only expected him to put his intelligence into the common pool and to give us the full advantage of the lessons he has received from his enterprising journey in that great country. But it is not my hon. Friend's American experience with which we are concerned to-day. He has uppermost in his mind a restoration of our prosperity here by a great increase in capital expenditure. I have no doubt that, like other people who have studied this question, he draws a distinction between different forms of capital expenditure. Capital expenditure on work which is unreproductive may give no permanent advantage to those who are engaged in it; capital expenditure which is remunerative—and there is a very large field in which it can be remunerative—may be considered under favourable conditions; and, quite frankly, I think the present is a moment when some forms of capital expenditure of that nature ought to be encouraged. There is very little doubt that at the present moment a little impetus in this direction would be beneficial.

I am not quite so certain that by dabbling in the money problem we should produce all the beneficent results prophesied by those who are so sure about the currency theory. A great many of those who are most reliable on the currency theory are least in the habit of making pronunciamientos, and the man who tells us he knows all about currency is usually a very bad guide. I do not for a moment suppose that we ought to have shut out from our consideration all questions of currency problems, of the influence of money upon trade, and so on. They react one upon the other, but we can very easily exaggerate the influence of money changes made here or abroad. There is really only one thing which will bring about a restoration in trade. I must apologise to the House for saying anything so commonplace, but it really is true that the only thing which will bring about restoration in trade is an increased demand. That demand may be stimulated, it is true, but it may be stimulated sometimes in the wrong direction. Increased demand is the only possibility, as I see it, of there being any return to prosperity in this country or any of the industrial countries of the orld.

Where is that demand most likely to me from? I think everybody deplores e course of events in the Far East. here is no doubt that just at the very me when it appeared that the Chinese arkets, among the greatest markets in e world, were going to be reopened ce more to Western supplies, and the velopment in their own borders of inustry, at that very moment there came e Far Eastern crisis, and there has been ave interruption of the movement wards an increased demand from China. e House has only to be reminded of hat a small amount in every Chinese ousehold, were it asked for, of Western oods would bring about a real boom in me of our staple industries. If every hinese, for example, were to have one irt a year more than at present, the ade of Lancashire would achieve a osperity which it has not known since e War.

Mr. A. BEVAN: What about our own eople?

Mr. RUNCIMAN: My hon. Friend ould remember that the best way to elp our own people is by giving them ork. What I am discussing at the resent moment is the way in which, in very much larger market than ours ere at home, we might bring about a emendous increase in the demand for ritish goods. My hon. Friend surely as not forgotten the fact that there are Chinamen to one Englishman.

Mr. ATTLEE: What about their purhasing power?

Mr. RUNCIMAN: It can only be inreased by increased activity in their own rade, and their purchasing power is inreasing year by year, and has been ntil quite recently. The fact is that in urchasing power China is one of the actors which might have had a great ffect in restoring the trade of the world. f course my hon. Friend opposite is ntitled to say, "What about our people t home?" I do not shut out from my ind for a single moment that an inreased demand here in our home arkets from our own people is bound to e beneficial. These things react upon ach other, but you cannot get an inreased demand from our people who are living upon the dole or who have got the dole.

Mr. BEVAN: You can increase it.

Mr. RUNCIMAN: If you do that, you draw away supplies of money from other purposes, and you are really no better off; you are making a transference from one individual to another in the most unscientific way. The course of the discussion to-day has made it quite clear that the minds of Members of this House are wandering away from the World Economic Conference to problems with which we are all more familiar, but if I may be allowed to say something about the Conference and the prospects which can be drawn therefrom, I would say, in the first place, that that Conference, so far as we are concerned, cannot be held too soon. But we are not the only members of it, and it is absolutely essential that other members of the Conference should be convinced of the necessity for an early meeting if it is to assemble at an early date. We have done everything we could. Our representatives have collaborated in the preliminary discussions, and those preliminary reports convey to a very large extent the views of His Majesty's Government. We have made it clear that as soon as others are ready to meet, we are ready to meet, and we are prepared to discuss with them, with no restraint put upon the subjects to come before the Conference and, I hope, with no restraint in the expression of views of which we shall be the authors, every aspect of international trade and international finance.

I am not sure that others are as ready as we are in that matter, but because we are prepared to go into that Conference, whenever it may be held, ready to enter into discussions, we are not going to allow the time before the Conference is held to be wasted. If we had to wait until the Conference was held, we might have to wait many months. We have lost no time in getting to close quarters with the representatives of other nations whose trading relationship with us is at present under a cloud, and in other directions where we are most anxious that there should be increased traffic between us. We are carrying on at the present time conversations with the representatives of four of the nationalities of Europe and one of South America. We have had the honour of a visit from the representatives of the Republic of Argentina during the last few weeks, a visit which, I need hardly say, we very highly appreciate, and we have had the advantage of discussing at close quarters with them the trade relationships between our two countries.

[Mr. Runciman.]

We have made considerable progress in those discussions. I know my hon. and gallant Friend the Member for Pembroke was a little impatient with us because we were not going very fast. We have been at work with them now, I think, only about two months. I would remind my hon. and gallant Friend that the Franco - German commercial treaty, which was concluded only a short time ago, took no less than three years to complete, and I hope that he will allow us, I will not say three years, but a little longer than two months to carry through a very complicated and difficult transaction with an important country like Argentina.

Mr. D. MASON: Who is to issue the invitations to the World Economic Conference?

Mr. RUNCIMAN: If my hon. Friend will give me notice of that subject, I shall be glad to give him a full answer, but I think we may take it that that is one of the functions of the League of Nations. The Conference has been summoned by the League of Nations, and I presume that the invitations will be issued by the League of Nations. When I was interrupted, I was making reference to the speed with which our negotions were being carried on. I can assure the House that we are losing no time, but it would be a great mistake for us to be impatient, to hurry along a path which we had not carefully surveyed, or to enter into engagements the repercussions of which we had not very carefully considered; and just as it is necessary for us to proceed with great caution, it is equally necessary for the other Governments with whom we are negotiating. A mistake made in regard to one of our great staple industries would do harm, not to the negotiators, but probably to thousands or tens of thousands of people who may be engaged in that industry. We have to safeguard their interest as well as we can.

I may tell the House quite frankly that we are attempting, as far as we can, to give a broad and general survey to the whole of our interests. We are doing what we can to get out of the habit of thinking with a one-track mind, which very naturally is a fault into which men engaged in a particular industry all their lives can very easily fall. I plead guilty to it myself. I know how easy it is to exaggerate the details with which you are in daily contact and to allow others to slip by. We have, therefore, to hold the balance as carefully as we can, to take the widest possible view of our requirements, and to appreciate to the full the difficulties of those with whom we are negotiating. It is in that spirit that we have in the last few weeks made very considerable progress, and as soon as we are able to make any announcement with regard to preliminary agreements which we have reached we shall make it first in this House.

I have been asked what effect the most-favoured-nation clauses will have upon our negotiations, and my hon. and gallant Friend the Member for Bournemouth (Sir H. Croft) is apprehensive lest the most-favoured-nation clause in our commercial treaties should impede our freedom of action. I would, therefore, like to say a few words about the clause, which has been such an essential part of our commercial treaties in the past. The real difficulty which arises in regard to it is that it has become the corner stone of all our commercial treaties. There are 42 of those treaties in existence which contain the most-favoured-nation clause. Although that clause does, to some extent, handicap our freedom of action, it has, on the other hand, very great advantages. If we take an evenly balanced view of it and look at it from both sides, the House will admit that for a country with such world-wide interests as we have, the most-favoured-nation clause cannot be easily dropped. The House will observe, however, that in saying that I do not commit myself by phraseology or otherwise to adhering to the most-favoured-nation clause under all conditions and at all times.

One advantage of the most-favoured-nation clause is that it ensures a general absence of discrimination, and that in itself is a great advantage for our business men here. Furthermore, if we had not the most-favoured-nation clause in our commercial treaties, it would be necessary for us to deal with every item in our tariffs, with probably a different series of rates applicable to particular countries, and the variety of duties which would have to be considered by our business men, our contractors, our salesmen and those who are drawing up estimates, would be enormous almost beyond imagination. Every item of every country, all varying and none of them on any one settled principle and covering such a variety of conditions, make it almost impossible for the ordinary business man to know where he is. The advantage of the most-favoured-nation clause as it stands at present is that he can look at the tariffs and see what is the lowest rate, and he knows that he is entitled by commercial treaties to claim that treatment. He knows that that is an advantage which ought not to be too readily thrown away.

The most-favoured-nation treatment does not prevent countries reducing tariffs. There has been a tendency in some quarters of the House to believe that the most-favoured-nation clause is an obstacle to the reduction of tariffs. It does not prevent countries dealing with tariffs, however high or low they may be, and it in no way affects the heightening or the lowering of a tariff. This clause has become such an essential part of our commercial policy that in all the recently concluded treaties—those between France and Germany, France and Belgium, France and Czechoslovakia, Germany and Italy, Germany and Sweden, Germany and Finland, as well as a great many other minor treaties—we have had full most-favoured-nation treatment given to us without our having to go into the negotiations or to take any part in the very long adjustments, which in the case of France and Germany took three years. When they concluded that treaty, we had the full advantage which we enjoy at the present moment.

Sir H. CROFT: Does not that apply to a large number of other countries at the same time?

Mr. RUNCIMAN: That is perfectly true, but directly we come to the region of discrimination, we get a new set of difficulties which we must consider one by one. I would like to point out in passing that, although most-favoured-nation treatment plays a part in those treaties, there are some cases, such as France, where most-favoured-nation treatment is not likely to be continued to us. The quota system as it has been worked in France may become really a form of discrimination. It has been my duty to draw the attention of the French representative to the way that discrimination in other matters is operating to our detriment, and we may have to take the matter further. We cannot allow it to rest where it is. There has been discrimination with regard to the surtax in France. We are not receiving the most-favoured-nation treatment there. France is giving Belgium advantages which are not held by the citizens of this country. Again, we have not only to draw the attention of the French to this fact, but we have to make it clear that it is a condition to which we cannot permanently be parties, and the time must arrive when action is necessary with regard to their exclusion of us from the benefits which they give to others.

My hon. Friend who opened the discussion obviously had in his mind the treaty between Holland and Belgium when he spoke of a low-tariff movement. I would like to say exactly what happened over the Belgium-Holland Treaty. When we were in Lausanne last year, the Belgian Foreign Minister came to me to tell me that Holland and Belgium were contemplating a commercial treaty which would give each other advantages which they did not at present enjoy. He told me that the parties to the treaty would make progressive reductions of their tariffs in each other's favour by five annual steps of 10 per cent., so, however, that the reductions were not to go below 4 per cent. ad valorem on semi-manufactured products, and 8 per cent. on fully manufactured products. I was then asked by him if we would be prepared to come to a similar arrangement. I had to point out to him that our commitments with practically every commercial country in the world prevented our entering into any discriminatory arrangement with either Belgium or Holland, and that so far as we were concerned we could not waive our most-favoured-nation rights in either country. In doing that I was not merely taking part in a debate between two countries; I was thinking of the interests of our own people at home. How could I possibly have been a party to entering into an arrangement between Holland and Belgium which would place Belgian steelmakers in a favoured position in Holland as against our steelmakers? I had to make quite clear to them that so far as treaties between Holland and Belgium were concerned, we could not waive our most-favoured-nation rights; we intended to adhere to them, and we have adhered to them to the present time.

[Mr. Runciman.]

There has been a suggestion that by doing that we have stood in the way of a low-tariff movement. I do not think that we have done anything of the kind. If there were to be an extension of low-tariff arrangements on the Continent, it could be done irrespective of our most-favoured-nation rights and in spite of them. The truth is that the Continent was not ready for any arrangement of this kind. I do not know whether it is readier to-day. I hope that it is, but I am not sure of it. I think that it is much more likely that Europe will have to pass through the experience not only of harder times, but of hard negotiations, before we shall be able to persuade the Powers of the Continent that there are great advantages to be got, not from economic warfare, but from economic agreement. It is because we are proceeding alone the line of economic agreement that I am more hopeful of the future. I do not think that we should have gained anything by going into the Holland-Belgium arrangement. We should have gained no advantage to our business men, and made no progress in our international negotiations.

If there is to be anything in the nature of a low-tariff group, we must examine how far it is likely to affect our own manufacturers and exporters and importers. That will be our first duty. when we have examined that, we shall be better able to know how to deal with proposals that are placed before us. I have no objection to belonging to a low-tariff group as long as our own rights remain intact. I should like to see all Europe going on to a lower level. My hon. and gallant Friend the Member for Bournemouth is fond of the illustration of a brick wall. I should welcome the lowering of every wall; I should like to see them all come down, but let us be quite sure that when we are talking about lowering tariffs we do not do it to our own detriment. We have to consider first what are the interests of this country.

I should like to mention four things which might be conditions for any scheme that is likely to be made. First, it must be likely to be effective in securing really tangible reductions of excessive tariffs; second, it must command a sufficiently general measure of support, it must cover a wide enough area; third, it must not impose upon this country sacrifices disproportionate to those demanded of other countries; fourth, it must not have injurious repercussions or lead to tariff wars or other economic hostilities. Within those limits we are ready to consider any proposals that may be put forward. I have not time to deal with the negotiations with every one of the countries with whom we are in discussion, but we are using the organisation of the Government, both political and permanent, so that we can proceed with the greatest rapidity along this road. I will, in conclusion, make one practical statement with regard to our negotiations. They cannot be one-sided. If they are one-sided, neither we nor the representatives of the countries with whom we are negotiating will separate satisfied. Unless the arrangements which are made satisfy the requirements of both their countries and us, they are not likely to last.

Moreover, in negotiating, both sides must make concession. I want to make it clear that if any nation sits back in the hope that we will enter into successful negotiations with another Power and that they will be able to achieve most-favoured-nation treatment without consideration coming from them, they will come to a deadlock. If they gain any advantage from us, they must be reciprocal in their action. They must be ready to make concessions similar to ours and to those of other countries. Unless they do that, we cannot agree to most-favoured-nation treatment being retained as a permanent element in the conditions which control their traffic and ours. If it is used against us in any instance we will drop it at once, and we will be ready to take individual measures without regard to most-favoured-nation treatment in such cases as I have in mind. I hope those who now are doing so, after discussing it with us, will bear in mind, therefore, the fact that while this system plays such a large part in the commercial life of this country, we are not so firmly wedded to it that we can allow it to be used to our disadvantage. In the knowledge that we are proceeding along the right path, I would ask the House to be patient while our negotiations are conducted, and I hope that we shall have a happy issue out of all our afflictions.

.16 p.m.

Sir STAFFORD CRIPPS: The right hon. Gentleman has dwelt at considerable length upon the negotiations now proceeding with foreign countries, but he has not told us anything at all about the Government's policy for the World Economic Conference, and I was under the impression that the Motion to-day was dealing with the World Economic Conference. He told us, with the same gloom that comes now every time from the Front Bench opposite, that we have got to face harder times. I think the country is getting more and more depressed with a Government which can do nothing but reiterate the coming hardships and open up no prospects of their solution. The right hon. Gentleman said that he was delighted to have got out of the one-track mind. I congratulate him, but unfortunately he has got into the no-track mind, which perhaps is even worse. The one-track mind at least leads somewhere, but the no-track mind leaves you wandering about in a circle in which you inevitably lose your way. The right hon. Gentleman told us that there was only one thing to bring about a restoration of trade, and that was increased demand. I should be glad to know whether he has at last reversed his policy. Does he now believe that that belt which he advised us all to tighten ought to be loosened again? No, he does not believe it.

Mr. RUNCIMAN: I never said anything about a belt.

Sir S. CRIPPS: The reference was to slimming. I was referring to the wrong article of clothing. One associates with the slimming policy another article of clothing which I will not mention. The right hon. Gentleman is now, perhaps, going to put the patient upon the other diet. Are we now to understand that the only way to bring about a restoration of trade is to increase demand, that the Government are no longer favouring a policy of creating a diminution of supplies in order to raise prices, but a policy of increasing demand so as to raise prices, that is to say, that they no longer regard the problem as one of over-production but as one of under-consumption? If the right hon. Gentleman and his colleagues have at last come to realise that, after having been told it from all sides of the House for 18 months, we must at least congratulate them upon that amount of intelligence.

Looking round the world he says, "Where can we expect this increased demand? China? Unfortunately, there is a war in China, so the coolies cannot buy any more shirts." Might I suggest to him that there are plenty of people in Great Britain who want shirts at the present time, and if he desires to put the mills of Lancashire to work upon making shirts he could do it quite easily by distributing shirts to the unemployed. He would thereby create increased demand for shirts, which is what he wants; he would produce employment in the mills of Lancashire, and he would enable some of the money and credit which are lying idle to be put into circulation by the purchase of shirts. Surely we have not yet reached the stage when, to increase the demand for commodities at home, we have to wait until the Chinese war is over. That is the only prospect the right hon. Gentleman holds out to the country, that we have to wait till China is again quiescent, till the purchasing power of the Chinese has been raised sufficiently to give an increased demand for commodities in this country. If that is all the right hon. Gentleman has to offer the country I am afraid they will not be very grateful to him.

This Motion, as I understand it, is to call attention to the possibilities of what might be done at the World Economic Conference, and it proceeds upon the basis that the best thing we can do is, by agreement, to get rid of tariffs and economic antagonism, what I might call the international method of procedure, and to try to bring about a reasonable frame of mind by international agreement. The Amendment, on the other hand, proceeds upon the basis of the old fallacy that if you want to stop war you should arm yourself strongly. It proceeds upon the basis that the best way of getting rid of economic nationalism is to be as nationalist yourself economically as you can be. We believe that to be a profound mistake. It is exactly that spirit in other people of which we are so loudly complaining, and if we ourselves now adopt it we can hardly expect our action to help to solve the problem. But in our opinion all these views are not views which are either going to solve the problem or which can be usefully advanced to achieve anything at a World Economic Conference. These economic antagonisms which are displayed in the ultra-nationalist views now held all over the world arise, as was quite rightly said by the hon. Member for East Aberdeen (Mr. Boothby) out of the capitalist system, exactly as military nationalism and the armament problem equally arise out of the capitalist system. Neither Free Trade nor tariffs, as has been mentioned by one or two speakers, can be held to be responsible for the present circumstances of the world, nor will the abolition of the one or the other bring about any cure.

[Sir S. Cripps.]

The other feature which has been spoken of to-night—international indebtedness—is just another typical example of the international capitalist burden. The discussion on the Austrian Loan which we had in this House not so long ago was very typical. The argument was put forward by the Government that we should supply Austria with money in order that she might be able to pay her debts, in order to continue this structure of international capital indebtedness which everybody admits, even capitalists, is vitally hindering the process of distribution throughout the world. It is exactly the same when one comes to look at the economic system which is causing all the difficulties to-day. It is the intense competitive antagonism between countries which lies at the root of the tariff and trading difficulties, the quotas, the exchange difficulties and everything else; and just as you cannot get rid of war until you get the spirit of disarmament among the nations, so you cannot get rid of this economic war until you get the spirit of co-operation instead of competition as the basis of national and international trade.

However difficult the problem may be internationally, surely the Government might give a lead to the world, as has been said by one or two speakers to-night, by seeing whether they could not first eliminate cut-throat competition in the industries of this country. Then, at least, they could go to the rest of the world and say, "We here have the power to control an economic unit which we can arrange with you shall fit into a world structure," because that is what, after all, the World Economic Conference is for. It is to build up a world structure of finance and trade in order that we may do away with all those vicious barriers and hindrances. Surely one of the first objects of everybody going to the Conference who wants to be able to lead it, is to be able to say, "So far as my country is concerned, we have eliminated all these vicious processes. Here we have a co-operative State run for the benefit of the community. We have eliminated competition and now we are prepared to fit into a world structure of a similar sort." If that could be put forward by His Majesty's Government at the coming Conference, there might then be some hope of world economic peace, but as long as the Governments of the world go to the World Economic Conference imbued with the theories of competitive capitalism, it is idle to talk of a world economic peace. Hon. Members who may smile at that thought will, I feel convinced, after the World Economic Conference has met and come to whatever decisions it may come to, find by experience that it has not brought about world economic peace.

6.27 p.m.

Sir H. SAMUEL: We have had to-day, as the President of the Board of Trade has said, a most interesting Debate, and I must begin, as others have begun, by congratulating my hon. Friend the Member for East Birkenhead (Mr. White) both upon the value of the subject he has chosen for to-day's Motion and also upon the admirable and effective speech in which he moved it. We would also extend our thanks and our congratulations to the hon. and gallant Member for Pembroke (Major Lloyd George), whose speech, I think, pleased the whole House, and no less we add our congratulations to the hon. Member for East Fife (Mr. Henderson Stewart) who made a striking maiden speech this afternoon. On the whole, the Debate has not spread too wide. We were anxious in moving this Motion to concentrate the attention of the House upon the one question of the World Economic Conference and the policy to be advocated there by the Govnment of Great Britain. Had we in- uded all aspects of the economic ques- on now occupying men's minds we ould have required a Debate not of four ours but of four days, or longer, and r that reason, and not because we nder-estimate their importance, nothing s been said from this quarter to-day bout monetary policy, a matter upon hich my hon. Friend the Member for ast Aberdeen (Mr. Boothby) spoke, and hich is unquestionably one of very great, d perhaps prime, importance, but is a bject for a separate discussion. So so with the question of the employment capital in valuable enterprises in this untry as a remedy for unemployment. hat is a matter to which, of course, we tach the very first importance, and on hich we have often spoken, but we ex- uded it to-day only for the reason that have mentioned.

The question is, What should be the jective of the United Kingdom at the orld Economic Conference? Should it the openly-declared, definite and ener- tically pursued policy of the removal the restrictions upon world trade, or ould we, for various reasons, such as ose mentioned by some hon. Members which I shall again refer, be luke- arm or even indifferent in pursuing at object? To restrict production is ry easy; it has been done by all untries continually. To increase nsumption is very difficult. The rmer policy is wrong and the latter licy is right. It is only by pursuing, hatever its difficulties, the latter policy at the Government at the Economic nference can render useful service to e world. On these matters, to-day's ebate has evoked many interesting ex- essions of opinion, but it has not oked, I am afraid, any very definite onouncement from the Government. e right hon. Gentleman the President the Board of Trade has told us very tle. We did not expect him to say ything about negotiations now in pro- ess. Necessarily, when a Government engaged in prolonged and difficult nego- ations, it must complete them before can declare to the House and to the untry what the results have been, but e did hope that the right hon. Gentle- an would give a general indication of e course which the Government is pur- ing, and for which he wishes the country's support when the World Economic Conference meets.

The right hon. Gentleman elsewhere has made occasionally very specific pronouncements. For instance, just over a month ago, speaking in his constituency of St. Ives, at the chamber of commerce there, he used words which already have been referred to by my hon. Friend the Member for East Birkenhead:

> "I only wish the German Government would put a stop to that insane quota system which has become the curse of European trade."

Again, in his speech he said:

> "The French have a most difficult task before them. We wish them well, but again I would ask that they would bring to an end the quota system."

Yet two days ago in this House was introduced the Agricultural Marketing Bill, which provides that the quota system shall be established here for our own agricultural products, not temporarily for the sake of any emergency, but permanently, as part of the fiscal policy of this country, and on the back of the Bill is the name of the right hon. Gentleman the President of the Board of Trade. If a quota system is insane and the curse of European trade, how can the right hon. Gentleman propose with his colleagues to establish it in this country, not for purposes of bargaining, but as a permanent part of our agricultural and commercial policy? How is it that the Free-Trade Dr. Jekyll of St. Ives, by some sinister transfiguration, turns into the ultra-Protectionist Mr. Hyde of Whitehall?

Lord DUNGLASS: Will the right hon. Gentleman allow me to interrupt? Was not the name of the late Secretary of State for Scotland on the back of the Wheat Quota Bill?

Sir H. SAMUEL: The wheat quota is not an import quota. The word "quota" in that connection means an entirely different thing, and is a complete misnomer. [HON. MEMBERS: "Oh!"] Hon. Members do not seem to be aware of the distinction. It should be obvious to anyone who has studied the matter for a moment that the wheat quota is a sheer subsidy. It consists in demanding from the consumers, through the millers, a certain sum on each sack of flour, which is distributed among the wheat growers.

Sir H. CROFT: Is that better than the Agricultural Marketing Bill?

Sir H. SAMUEL: Yes, far better than that Bill. I would be led too far away if I were to argue on the wheat quota. I would repeat with emphasis that the wheat quota is not an import quota. There is no restriction of imports of any sort or kind, and there is no attempt to raise the wheat price of Great Britain above the world price. That was the specific undertaking, given before the Bill was introduced, that no attempt would be made to raise our prices above world prices. When you have a quota, saying that you shall only have a certain amount of wheat from this or that country, and only a certain amount from another, that may be good or bad, but it is an entirely different thing. Therefore the interruption of the hon. and gallant Member applied to an entirely different set of circumstances.

One of the main questions that have emerged from the discussion is this: Are our tariffs to be used for protection or for bargaining? Hon. Members have said that they are to be used for both. They cannot be used for both. In so far as they are maintained for protection, they cannot be used for bargaining, and in so far as they are for bargaining they cannot be used for protection. The right hon. Gentleman the President of the Board of Trade said that there was a great deal of unanimity in different quarters. I beg to disagree with him. On this issue there is no unanimity. The hon. and gallant Member for Bournemouth (Sir H. Croft) said to-day, as he has said very many times before for very many years, that our tariffs must be maintained in order to give employment to our people, because other countries have sometimes 50 per cent. lower wages. There is no question of bargaining there. Whatever other countries did, if they abolished their tariffs altogether, the hon. and gallant Member would say that our tariffs must still be maintained.

Up and down the country, year after year, he has made eloquent speeches on platforms to great multitudes of people, saying that if only you shut out the importation of foreign manufactured goods, those goods would have to be made here, and that our own people would be employed. He has used a lively imagination and astronomical figures in regard to the manufactured goods concerned and to the number of people who would be brought into employment in this country. That is his policy—unless you shut goods out you do not get that employment, and in proportion as you shut goods out you do get employment.

Sir H. CROFT: You must always retain freedom to lower your protective duty for a country that treats you on a friendly basis.

Sir H. SAMUEL: That illustrates the essential inconsistency of the hon. and gallant Member. He says, at one and the same time, "You must shut out the goods of countries who have lower wages because they will compete with us unfairly, but if they are ready to abolish their tariffs, we shall be ready to abolish ours." On which leg does he stand?

Sir H. CROFT: I have no difficulty in standing on both legs.

Sir H. SAMUEL: I should be very interested to see the hon. and gallant Gentleman stand on both legs now and tell me what he would do in circumstances in which a country with a lower standard of wages was willing to abolish its tariffs if we abolished ours.

Sir H. CROFT: Since the right hon. Gentleman is so kind as to put a question to me, I can only answer him in this way: When your tariff is a 50 per cent. tariff, you are perfectly at liberty to give protection to your people and to reduce that tariff by 20 per cent. or 30 per cent. if the other country is willing to do the same.

Sir H. SAMUEL: And still maintain a tariff?

Sir H. CROFT: Yes.

Sir H. SAMUEL: That is the admission that I wanted the hon. and gallant Member to make. No matter what other countries do, you would still maintain your tariff if their wages are lower?

Sir H. CROFT: Yes.

Sir H. SAMUEL: I have obtained that very definite statement from the hon. and gallant Member, and now I shall draw the deduction. The hon. and gallant Member said that if our Motion were carried and acted upon, it would cause dismay to the agricultural and industrial interests of this country. No matter what other countries did, our Motion would abolish our Tariffs if other countries did the same. We had a discussion in the House the other night which has a bearing upon this very point. I will come back to the hon. and gallant Gentleman. A colleague of his, the hon. Baronet the Member for Barnstaple (Sir B. Peto), putting forward some fiscal views in a very small House, after 11 o'clock on the Motion for the Adjournment, stated the case of the fabric-glove makers of his constituency. He said, "Why have the Government held up the Recommendation of the Import Duties Advisory Committee in regard to fabric gloves?" The Import Duties Advisory Committee has made a Recommendation, which has not been published, and no one knows whether it is a Protectionist decision or not. The hon. Baronet said, "We are concerned with the fabric-glove industry, which is being ruined by importations from Saxony. We know that the increased Duties have already made a considerable difference over and above the advantage of the appreciation of the pound, but they want, as I want, a still higher duty in order to shut out all gloves from Saxony." The Government said, "No. We are now engaged in negotiation with Germany, and this may be a useful bargaining counter." The hon. Baronet the Member for Barnstaple said, "I do not care about your bargaining counter. Your bargaining will not benefit my constituency. I want a good stiff protective duty against fabric gloves." An hon. Member who represents a constituency in the Potteries got up and said exactly the same thing. During an agricultural Debate many agricultural hon. Members said, "Why should our constituents be subjected to a flood of imports from Denmark, or any other country, in order to get advantage in the Danish market, or in any other market, for our manufacturers?"

You cannot at one and the same time protect and bargain. You must make your choice. That is a point that I wish to emphasise most strongly to the House to-day. We are often told that this country is the greatest food market in the world, and we are told, "Let us use that great economic power to secure advantages for our export trade in other countries of the world." We are told to-day that the agriculturists say, "Oh, no. We must retain our market to the utmost possible extent for our own agriculturists." What becomes of the utility in bargaining in the greatest food market in the world? At the time of the General Election, when people voted they were told that the National Government, if it adopted tariffs, would use them in order to secure freer trade throughout the world. Millions of electors voted for candidates for the National Government on the assurance that that would happen, and that tariffs would be used to get rid of tariffs. The Lord President of the Council, when he went to Ottawa, very distinctly declared that to be the objective of the Government. We even have the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who has been an arch-Protectionist all his life, using just one week ago very different language, after some experience of what Protection really has resulted in in this country. I will venture to read these words, because they are most significant of the movement of opinion which has affected even the most obdurate minds. The Chancellor of the Exchequer said:

> "We have always to remember that in this country we have been in the past a great exporting nation. We have a large number of our people who earn their living by making goods and selling them to foreign countries."

I would remind the hon. Member for South Croydon (Mr. H. Williams), who is not at this moment in his place, of this declaration by his leader, because he said that our export trade was of very small importance, and that what really mattered was the home market. The Chancellor of the Exchequer went on:

> "In the last few years our foreign trade has shrunk until it is half of what it was. The idea"— and these are the significant words—

> "that we can replace what we have lost in foreign trade by any artificial stimulus, applied in this country, appears to me one doomed to disappointment."

I was not able to be present at that Debate, but I read those words in the OFFICIAL REPORT. I rubbed my eyes to see that I was reading the Report of the right date and a speech by the right speaker—that I was not reading a speech of my own in answer to a speech of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. I found that it was a speech by the Chancellor of the Exchequer answering himself—answering what he has been saying all his life long. He went on:

[Sir H. Samuel.]

> "It is a hard saying, but it is necessary to say again what I firmly believe in my own mind. You cannot expect that this country can attain prosperity while all the rest of the world is depressed."—[OFFICIAL REPORT, 8th March, 1933; cols. 1302-1304, Vol. 275.]

That is the view of all the expert advisers who have been summoned by the various Governments of the world to give counsel on this difficult and complex matter. Unanimously the experts appointed to prepare for the World Economic Conference—appointed by the League of Nations, appointed by the various countries, appointed by the Bank for International Settlements—have agreed that that is vital; they placed in the very first rank the importance of getting rid of these restrictions. Therefore, I suggest that, if the Government are in any degree consistent with their own declarations, and unless they reject the considered advice of the greatest economic experts in the world, they must go to the World Economic Conference with the very firm resolve to use their bargaining power, if they can, to get rid of tariffs and other restrictions, including quotas, and to secure greater freedom of world trade. But can they do that? Will the course of events during the last 12 months permit them to do it? We have argued the Ottawa Agreements so fully that I do not propose to do more than mention them, but there was established at Ottawa a series of agreements which prohibited this bargaining so far as relates to all the duties that are imposed in order to give Imperial Preference.

The iron and steel industry here has been guaranteed for another two years the very high duty of 33⅓ per cent., no matter what the World Economic Conference may decide, no matter what other countries may be willing to do. The Agricultural Marketing Bill which is now before the House establishes a new system of quotas with respect to a number of agricultural products—quotas which are to be retained permanently, and which cannot be bargained with. In addition to those obstacles, we have an even greater one, namely, the pressure of the whole Protectionist movement in this country—the pressure of the hon. and gallant Member for Bournemouth, the pressure of the hon. Member for Barnstaple, the pressure of the hon. Member for South Croydon, the pressure of all those who, irrespective of bargaining, are determined to maintain tariffs in this country. The Government will be in a dilemma in this matter, and the President of the Board of Trade has given us no guidance as to whether, when they go to the World Economic Conference, they will make it their prime objective to bargain and reduce, or whether they will yield to Protectionist influences and maintain. It will be a struggle—a pull between those who are in favour of maintaining restrictions for Protective purposes and those who are in favour of the free importation of flour or other commodities. It will be a question of "Pull devil, pull baker," and I am not at all sure that baker will win.

It is not to be expected that at the World Economic Conference all the high Protectionist countries will agree to an effective reduction of their tariffs. Are we, therefore, doomed to anticipate failure? Is any high Protectionist country, like France, or the United States if it still remains so, to be allowed to exercise a veto upon the whole Conference—a kind of liberum veto such as existed in the old days in Poland? That brings us to the proposal which has already been brought before the House, and which has been made in the country, that we should not allow ourselves to be absolutely blocked by lack of unanimity, but should endeavour to form a group of low-tariff or Free Trade countries which are impressed by the necessity of removing restrictions, and are willing to do so among themselves. The President of the Board of Trade spoke about it, but he took a very detached view. He is ready to consider what will happen. If any countries come along with a proposal of that kind, the Government will see what they think of it. We are the greatest commercial and the greatest shipping country in the world, we have a far greater interest in this matter than anyone else, and it is our business, the Conference being here in London, in our own capital, to indicate some objective to the Conference and to pursue it. It has been said that it is not for us to give a lead; but not only have we not given a lead hitherto, but we have stopped the lead given by other people—by Belgium and Holland. I agree with the right hon. Gentleman that we could not straightaway form part of the group that was then proposed, but if we had to give, for the time being, a negative answer, at all events we could have said to Belgium and Holland: "You are on right lines; we will support you in endeavouring to secure the widest possible agreement on this point," and so have given encouragement to a movement which is in itself sound. We find the world in its present condition, with 100,000,000 people, including dependants, workless in the chief countries, with deficits piled up, with taxation increasing, and extreme distress in this country and throughout the world, and yet the Government are failing to give a lead on this essential matter, but are waiting to see what other people may propose.

Lastly, there is the question of the most-favoured-nation Clause, to which also the right hon. Gentleman has referred. I have been advocating for more than a year, in private and in public, that the most-favoured-nation Clause will have to be reviewed if any progress is to be made in the reduction of tariffs. I have not, however, advocated its abolition. I agree with all that the President of the Board of Trade has said to-day as to the value of maintaining a form of most-favoured-nation Clause, but it must be a form which allows of exceptions. Hon. Members have said constantly to their constituents that they believe in treating well as regards tariffs those countries that treated us well, and in treating not so well those countries that treated us badly. But you cannot do that so long as the most-favoured-nation Clause prevails. If any country, like Sweden, or Argentina, or whatever it may be, treats us better under its tariff, and we make concessions on our part, we have to extend precisely the same concessions to all other countries, whether they treat us well or ill. That should have been obvious from the beginning, before the Government embarked upon a policy of this kind. Now, however, there is a growing volume of opinion in this country and in other countries that there must be a modification of the most-favoured-nation clause if we are to make real progress. The Association of Chambers of Commerce have approached the Government on the matter, and that is a very significant and important fact. They have as yet had no reply. Two Members of the late Conservative Government have declared in this House that they are in favour of a modification of the most-favoured-nation clause, namely, the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Sparkbrook (Mr. Amery) and the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Tamworth (Sir A. Steel-Maitland), and to-day the hon. Members for Bournemouth, South Croydon and East Aberdeen have all said the same thing.

I agree with the President of the Board of Trade that whether we can agree to this modification depends upon the area of countries that agree to a low-tariff arrangement. If there were only one or two, we might lose more than we gained. But, at all events, we could make it widely known, urbi et orbi, that, if there is a tendency in the world to reduce tariff restrictions, and if a large number of important countries are prepared to agree to proceed along those lines, we are willing no longer to adopt the original position which this country has always adopted, but would be prepared to agree to an alteration of commercial treaties which would facilitate such arrangements. Political events which are now proceeding in the world have their origin very largely, if not mainly, in economic movements. It is the distress caused by the collapse of world markets, the reduction of world trade by two-thirds in three years, and the consequent unemployment, that gives rise to so much political unrest, and the working class will not endure these conditions indefinitely in silence. It is essential that we should act, and act quickly, on these matters, or we shall find in various parts of the world growing disturbance and growing political danger. We are obsessed and overmastered by these economic facts. As Emerson wrote in a very striking and famous phrase:

> "Things are in the saddle, and ride mankind."

It is our business to restore human affairs to the control of human intelligence. The World Economic Conference gives an opportunity for that. I trust that our Government and other Governments will have the wisdom to seize it.

6.57 p.m.

Mr. CLARRY: I wish to take up only two points which have arisen during the Debate. I should like, in the first place, to reinforce and supplement the observations which were made by my hon. and gallant Friend the Member for Bournemouth (Sir H. Croft) when he was referring to the effect of tariffs on the steel industry of South Wales. According to the official weekly out-turn figures, in October last—when the last portion of the stocks which had accumulated by dumping steel bars in this country was still in evidence—their output was 17,000 tons per week. That has been gradually going up until in January the output in South Wales was 24,000 tons per week; and the figures ascertained during the last few days for the weekly output in February amounted to 25,000 tons per week. That is an increase as compared with October of approximately 40 per cent., which is regarded as very satisfactory, and which is definitely put down, irrespective of politics, to the effect of the tariff arrangements which have been made.

My second point is this: I understood that the basis of this discussion was the question of the sweeping away of tariff barriers throughout the world. That seems to me to presuppose that the whole world is living on an equal standard, and that people require the same amount of money to keep themselves in all countries. We know that that is not the case —that there is not an equal standard of living in Europe or through out the world. therefore, if we in this country are to maintain the standard of living which we have set up for ourselves, and which is one of the highest in the world, it is essential that we should have some weapon with which to protect ourselves and to protect that standard of living. It seems to me that, in the arguments that may come before the World Economic Conference, whether dealing with currency, trade agreements or any point or problem whatsoever, the answer will always turn on this, that, if we can get together at the earliest possible moment a strong, dominant and irresistible Empire, we shall have the greatest possible safeguard both for trade revival and for world peace.

6.59 p.m.

Lieut.-Colonel KERR: I am going to try to keep as far as possible to the idea which I believe the hon. Member who moved this Motion had in his mind, namely, that we should try to give some indication to the Government as to what we hope they will do when they go to the World Economic Conference. There is one point about which I am extremely nervous. That is the question which seems to be universal, not only here, but all over the world, of artificially, or at any rate by some means, raising prices. To me it does not really very much matter whether prices are raised or not. That is not really the point. We should, somehow or other, increase consumption. If that were accomplished, prices would rise in a perfectly natural and healthy way. It seems to me that the whole object of this World Conference should be to make the consumption and production of the world balance. That is the great point upon which we want to concentrate. If we in any way attempt to raise prices by jugglery in any shape, or in any artificial way, the result will be perfectly disastrous, and we shall suffer worse than we are doing to-day. We have got to face a completely new world. It is no use looking back on the past. Past conditions are gone, in my view, for all time. There was a time, to which I, and many Members of the House who are not so old, can look back, when the worry of everybody was to get enough to go round.

We have a totally different position to-day, and I think it requires totally different methods to deal with it. We have, I believe, got to make up our minds that some of the things which were thought madness from an economic point of view a few years ago, are now perfectly sane economics. We have got to take risks about that, and unless we do take risks I cannot see how we are to get out of the difficulties in which we are. The buying power of the people must be maintained and, if possible, increased. Our power to sell our exports against imports must be maintained. If these two conditions are not safeguarded, low price countries will defeat us and also, in the end, ruin themselves. There is one situation in this country which I have heard described as serious, but which I think is one of great strength, that is, that we are the great consuming market of the world. Because we are that, I believe we are in a position of great strength.

We know quite well that other countries are dependent for their prosperity upon our markets. We ought to bear that in mind very carefully in discussing this matter. I was very worried by the description of the difficulties the Minister put before us this afternoon—difficulties which he had in dealing with world affairs. It does appear that the whole world has got into a condition so complicated, and so difficult, that it seems to me a problem almost impossible to unravel. I would, therefore, ask the Minister, and the Government, to try to visualise this new world; to try to forget altogether the past, and things successful in the past, and see whether we cannot scrap a great deal of what is at present looked upon as fundamental in dealing with world affairs.

I propose very shortly to put forward two very simple suggestions. We have heard a great deal about tariffs this afternoon, and the simple proposition I wish to place before the House has relation to the one anxiety of us all—the methods by which we can put a restriction on our imports without ultimately damaging our export trade. I have studied this question with many experts and many economists, and have found no one put up any argument which shakes my belief in the proposal. It is simply that we should decide to put on a tariff of 25, or 30, or 50 per cent. I do not mind what figure it is, but I will take it as being a 30 per cent. tariff on all imports into this country. But if any country, individual, company, or corporation, anywhere outside these shores, buys anything from this country he, or they, shall have the right to import into this country an equivalent value of goods free of all duties. By that process there should be a tendency to balance our trade. The process would also have the effect of helping to lower our export prices in the markets of the world. That system, if adopted would not interfere with Ottawa, for, if we wished, we could have our Preferences within that system.

Anyone, whether he is a Frenchman, Italian, or anyone else, who is going to import goods into this country would, if he did not make an equivalent purchase, have to pay the whole duty. There would be a market in these credits. Of course they would never be the value of the duty, but would vary according to demand. It seems to me that this system would encourage our exports and balance our trade. If we adopted such a system, and other countries adopted it, there would be no limit to the business which would go on internationally in the world. We would get back, as far as we could, to the old idea of barter and interchange of goods throughout the world. That is the proposition, and I do hope the House will give its consideration to that simple idea. It would get rid of the terribly complicated business to which the Minister referred this afternoon.

My second proposition is one which I almost thought the Minister was himself going to suggest when he mentioned China and Japan. There are many people to-day in favour of doing something about the currency of these countries. There is certainly, I believe, 50 per cent. of the population of the world living under a depreciated silver currency. By some stabilisation of silver, in ratio to gold, we have immediately a means of increasing our customers to a most enormous extent. These are two ideas, which I commend to the Government for consideration when they go to the World Conference. It will simplify everything if they can be brought about, and, if once instituted, they will be readily adopted by everyone. I would like to impress upon the Government that the past is gone, and I do not believe the experiences we have had in the past are any good in the present complicated world conditions. The Government, I hope, will take the risk, and try something completely new in the direction I have indicated.

7.11 p.m.

Sir JOHN SANDEMAN ALLEN: We have had an interesting Debate, and it has travelled over a large number of subjects. I would like, for a few moments, to go back to the starting point of the Motion, namely, what should be done with regard to the World Economic Conference. I listened with interest to the suggestions made by my hon. and gallant Friend the Member for Montrose (Lieut.-Colonel Kerr). He brought forward two suggestions, regarding one of which he said he had consulted many experts and that none had found any flaw in it. As to the other one, I could make a present to him of a dozen experts who would find flaws in it at once. These matters should, however, be fully considered in connection with the World Conference. But to go back to the general discussion, there has been a tendency to treat this matter too much as if it were a question of Free Trade and Protection. There are a great many other questions, and a great many other barriers, which have to be considered.

[Sir J. Sandeman Allen.]

Some people argue that it is the Gold Standard which has caused all our trouble. Others say that trade barriers are the cause of our trouble. As to the Gold Standard, the bulk of our business people are thankful to know our Government take the line that before this question is considered we must have the other difficulties, which make it impossible to work the ordinary trade and finance of the country in a normal manner, out of the way. We had an interesting suggestion also from the hon. Member for South Croydon (Mr. H. Williams), but I think that if we look at the present position of affairs we shall find that one of the great troubles is the enormous amount of indebtedness, and the incapacity to meet that indebtedness. That is a matter which the World Conference will have to consider. That Conference will have to consider how far it can bring creditors and debtors more closely together. If a creditor country is to be sure of getting its money, it must take care that it can receive the payment in goods or services. It has got to take care it does not shut out that means of payment. That has been the trouble in a great many quarters.

I do not agree with the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Darwen (Sir H. Samuel) that you cannot protect and bargain at the same time. I think it all depends on how you work. I submit that the two legs can be stood upon, if it is done wisely. There are certain limits which must be insisted on to prevent the swamping of the country in an improper manner, and the rest can be used for bargaining. It is not a question of Free Trade or Protection. It is a business transaction. I cannot help feeling that we must get closer together in all these questions. It is a primary point that creditor nations should get in touch with debtors, because sanctity of contract is a very vital matter. I feel that all these points have to be dealt with in connection with the conference.

There is another matter which has not been referred to, though I cannot help feeling that the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. White) had it in his mind. I think that he has in mind, as I and many others have, the serious impediment to the shipping of the country caused by the subsidies that other countries are giving. The United States shut out our goods by an impossibly high tariff and kill our services by a subsidised mercantile fleet, which costs more in subsidies than it earns in freights. We ought to stop that system, and I hope the Government will go to the conference determined to tackle this very vital and serious point. I want to refer to another point which has been mentioned in another way in the Motion. We cannot hope to break down tariffs and to get a low tariff movement in a moment. We have put our tariffs on in order to bring tariffs down ultimately. We shall never get every nation to agree at once to make these alterations, but surely we can in the meantime find quite a number who are prepared to work with us on reasonable grounds. If you cannot get it by universal agreement, you can by bi-lateral and multi-lateral agreements secure a good deal in the direction that we all want, and, if so, why not come to terms with those who are sensible; in other words, with people who are not going in for excessively high tariffs?

Many of us were pleased to hear what the President of the Board of Trade said about the most-favoured-nation clause. We want to make reasonable arrangements with different countries, and we must make it a condition that, if they do not give us reciprocity, we must put them in a different category from those who do. In other words, we have to divide the nations of the world into those who are friends and those who are not, those who are willing to lead a family life together on the principle of give and take, and those who are not. All these points have to be considered very carefully. I am confident, in spite of the suggestion that the Government have no scheme and no ideas, that the Government have already formed very definite ideas and will continue to do so and, while they may not agree with extreme Free Trade views on the one side or extreme Protectionist views on the other, they will be in harmony with the general views of business men, who are quite satisfied that the Government have done an enormous amount by balancing our trade and establishing our credit.

After all, it is confidence that counts for so much and, when we look back two years, we know the confidence that the country has inspired and the credit, which goes hand in hand with confidence, is to-day better than it has been before, and I am sure that at the Conference we shall help to move towards better days. We have to clear away not only high tariffs but exchange restrictions and maritime subsidies. I intensely dislike quotas, and I am very much inclined to agree with what has been said on the point, but there may be reasons and excuses for that, as for many things that are done, particularly if they are only little ones. At the same time, there are all these difficulties in the way which we must set ourselves gradually to clear up. Let us deal with the whole question as a big commercial nation out not for theories but for practical results. We want trade improved in this country and in the world. We cannot improve our own trade if we do not improve the trade of the world. While we cannot accept the Motion, I am sure the discussion has been of great value.

7.22 p.m.

Mr. JAMES REID: I think it has been assumed rather widely, particularly by those who sit below me, that the most important, indeed the only important, thing that the World Economic Conference has to deal with is the reduction of tariffs. It appears to me that tariffs are only one and not the most important element that the Conference has to deal with. It has been suggested that it is not possible at the same time to protect your own market and to bargain successfully with the foreigner, but, surely, the matter is very simple. Let us take, for instance, the case of agriculture. I have not the exact figures in my head, but let us assume that the utmost proportion of our foodstuffs that the British producer can produce is 50 per cent. You protected the British producer, that is, you insist that 50 per cent. shall be grown in this country, and you still have the other 50 per cent. to bargain with. It is the simplest thing in the world to protect your own producer, who cannot fill the whole demand, and go to your various suppliers and say: "You may have a half, or a third, or two-thirds, of the foreign quota on condition that you give this, that or the other." I can see no inconsistency whatever between the fullest protection of our own market and the fullest use of our bargaining power in respect of the other 50 per cent.

Sir H. SAMUEL: What would the Dominions say?

Mr. REID: I was including the Dominions in the figure of 50 per cent. I do not think the home market can produce 50 per cent. of our foodstuffs. We have a very large surplus percentage to bargain with after having satisfied the immediate possibility of production in this country and the Dominions.

May I make one suggestion about the Economic Conference? It seems to me that, since the War, we have failed time and time again at these conferences because we have tried to do too much. We failed to a large extent in the Peace Conferences, in setting up the League of Nations and in the conferences that have followed because we have tried to abolish war altogether. We have set up something which is going beyond what the nations of the world will support. It was no use starting "No More War" and setting up a League of Nations which was going further than the then state of public opinion would warrant. Do not let us have an economic League of Nations. Do not let us try to work out the World Economic Conference within the limits of the present system. Let us rather try to make the present system work than to invent some new system on the spur of the moment. It is by no means impossible within the sphere of economic nationalism to make things work and, if you go to the World Economic Conference thinking you are going to abolish economic nationalism and substitute an internationalism which only hon. Members opposite can see, even on the furthest horizon, I think you are giving away all the chance that you have of securing very substantial results.

The problem is set forth in the agenda plainly for everyone to read. It is: How are we going to get the mechanism of distribution working again? It is true that the main obstacle is the lack of freedom of exchange. There are two ways of tackling that question. The simplest way is to consider how it grew up. These restrictions have grown up in the last few years because prices fell away to such an extent that countries could not afford to go on without imposing restrictions. Surely, rather than try to break the ice with a sledge hammer, it would be very much better to direct your policy so as to get such a rise in prices as will render the restrictions unnecessary. The restrictions were caused by falling prices. As soon as you get rising prices, countries will be able to take off the restrictions which they were forced to put on by falling prices. I agree with those who put in the forefront of what they think should be the main objective of the Conference financial and currency problems rather than problems purely of tariffs and restrictions of that kind. I believe the currency and financial problem is the more fundamental. If you tackle that satisfactorily, the other problem will to a very great extent solve itself.

[Mr. Reid.]

Mr. ENTWISTLE rose——

Mr. WHITE rose in his place, and claimed to move "That the Question be now put," but Mr. SPEAKER withheld his assent, and declined then to put that Question.

7.29 p.m.

Mr. ENTWISTLE: The Motion emphasises one aspect of what will come before the World Economic Conference.

Mr. WHITE rose in his place, and claimed to move "That the Question be now put."

Question, "That the Question be now put," put, and agreed to.

Question put accordingly, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question."

The House divided: Ayes, 58; Noes, 203.

Division No. 83.] AYES. [7.30 p.m.

Acland, Rt. Hon. Sir Francis Dyke
Attlee, Clement Richard
Banfield, John William
Bernays, Robert
Bevan, Aneurin (Ebbw Vale)
Brown, C. W. E. (Notts., Mansfield)
Buchanan, George
Cape, Thomas
Cocks, Frederick Seymour
Cove, William G.
Cripps, Sir Stafford
Daggar, George
Davies, David L. (Pontypridd)
Dobbie, William
Edwards, Charles
Evans, Capt. Ernest (Welsh Univ.)
Evans, R. T. (Carmarthen)
Foot, Dingle (Dundee)
George, Major G. Lloyd (Pembroke)
Greenwood, Rt. Hon. Arthur
Grenfell, David Rees (Glamorgan)
Griffith, F. Kingsley (Middlesbro',W.)
Groves, Thomas E.
Grundy, Thomas W.
Hall, F. (York, W.R., Normanton)
Hall, George H. (Merthyr Tydvil)
Hamilton, Sir R. W.(Orkney & Zetl'nd)
Harris, Sir Percy
Hirst, George Henry
Holdsworth, Herbert
Janner, Barnett
John, William
Johnstone, Harcourt (S. Shields)
Jones, Henry Haydn (Merioneth)
Jones, Morgan (Caerphilly)
Lansbury, Rt. Hon. George
Llewellyn-Jones, Frederick
Logan, David Gilbert
Lunn, William
Macdonald, Gordon (Ince)
McEntee, Valentine L.
McGovern, John
Maclay, Hon. Joseph Paton
Mallalieu, Edward Lancelot
Mander, Geoffrey le M.
Mason, David M. (Edinburgh, E.)
Maxton, James
Molson, A. Hugh Elsdale
Parkinson, John Allen
Rathbone, Eleanor
Samuel, Rt. Hon. Sir H. (Darwen)
Thorne, William James
Tinker, John Joseph
Wedgwood, Rt. Hon. Josiah
White, Henry Graham
Williams, David (Swansea, East)
Williams, Edward John (Ogmore)
Williams, Thomas (York, Don Valley)

TELLERS FOR THE AYES.—
Mr. Walter Rea and Sir Murdoch McKenzie Wood.

NOES.

Acland-Troyte, Lieut.-Colonel
Agnew, Lieut.-Com. P. G.
Albery, Irving James
Allen, Sir J. Sandeman (Liverp'l, W.)
Aske, Sir Robert William
Atkinson, Cyril
Baillie, Sir Adrian W. M.
Barclay-Harvey, C. M.
Beaumont, Hon. R.E.B. (Portsm'th,C.)
Blindell, James
Borodale, Viscount
Boulton, W. W.
Bower, Lieut.-Com. Robert Tatton
Bowyer, Capt. Sir George E. W.
Briscoe, Capt. Richard George
Broadbent, Colonel John
Brocklebank, C. E. R.
Brown, Col. D. C. (N'th'l'd, Hexham)
Brown, Brig.-Gen. H.C.(Berks., Newb'y)
Buchan-Hepburn, P. G. T.
Burnett, John George
Campbell, Edward Taswell (Bromley)
Campbell, Vice-Admiral G. (Burnley)
Campbell-Johnston, Malcolm
Caporn, Arthur Cecil
Carver, Major William H.
Cazalet, Thelma (Islington, E.)
Churchill, Rt. Hon. Winston Spencer
Cochrane, Commander Hon. A. D.
Colfox, Major William Philip
Colville, Lieut.-Colonel J.
Cook, Thomas A.
Cooke, Douglas
Cooper, A. Duff
Copeland, Ida
Craddock, Sir Reginald Henry
Craven-Ellis, William
Crookshank, Col. C. de Windt (Bootle)
Croom-Johnson, R. P.
Cross, R. H.
Crossley, A. C.
Cruddas, Lieut.-Colonel Bernard
Davies, Maj. Geo. F.(Somerset,Yeovil)
Denman, Hon. R. D.
Dickie, John P.
Donner, P. W.
Doran, Edward
Duggan, Hubert John
Duncan, James A. L. (Kensington, N.)
Eady, George H.
Eastwood, John Francis
Edmondson, Major A. J.
Ellis, Sir R. Geoffrey
Elmley, Viscount
Emrys-Evans, P. V.
Entwistle, Cyril Fullard
Erskine, Lord (Weston-super-Mare)

Essenhigh, Reginald Clare
Evans, Capt. Arthur (Cardiff, S.)
Everard, W. Lindsay
Ford, Sir Patrick J.
Ganzoni, Sir John
Gault, Lieut.-Col. A. Hamilton
Glossop, C. W. H.
Goldie, Noel B.
Goodman, Colonel Albert W
Gower, Sir Robert
Graham, Sir F. Fergus (C'mb'rl'd, N.)
Grattan-Doyle, Sir Nicholas
Greene, William P. C.
Gretton, Colonel Rt. Hon. John
Grimston, R. V.
Guinness, Thomas L. E. B.
Guy, J. C. Morrison
Hacking, Rt. Hon. Douglas H.
Hales, Harold K.
Hanley, Dennis A.
Harbord, Arthur
Hartland, George A.
Harvey, Major S. E. (Devon, Totnes)
Heilgers, Captain F. F. A.
Hepworth, Joseph
Herbert, Capt. S. (Abbey Division)
Hore-Belisha, Leslie
Hornby, Frank
Horobin, Ian M.
Horsbrugh, Florence
Howard, Tom Forrest
Howitt, Dr. Alfred B.
Hudson, Capt. A. U. M. (Hackney, N.)
Hurst, Sir Gerald B.
Jennings, Roland
Joel, Dudley J. Barnato
Ker, J. Campbell
Kerr, Lieut.-Col. Charles (Montrose)
Kerr, Hamilton W.
Kimball, Lawrence
Lamb, Sir Joseph Quinton
Lambert, Rt. Hon. George
Law, Sir Alfred
Lees-Jones, John
Leighton, Major B. E. P.
Lennox-Boyd, A. T.
Liddall, Walter S.
Llewellin, Major John J.
Locker-Lampson, Rt. Hn. G. (Wd. Gr'n)
Lockwood, Capt. J. H. (Shipley)
Lovat-Fraser, James Alexander
McCorquodale, M. S.
McKie, John Hamilton
McLean, Major Sir Alan
McLean, Dr. W. H. (Tradeston)
Macmillan, Maurice Harold
Manningham-Buller, Lt.-Col. Sir M.
Margesson, Capt. Rt. Hon. H. D. R.
Marsden, Commander Arthur
Martin, Thomas B.
Mayhew, Lieut.-Colonel John
Meller, Richard James
Merriman, Sir F. Boyd
Moreing, Adrian C.
Morgan, Robert H.
Morris, Owen Temple (Cardiff, E.)
Morrison, William Shepherd
Munro, Patrick
Nation, Brigadier-General J. J. H.
Nicholson, Godfrey (Morpeth)
Normand, Wilfrid Guild
Nunn, William
O'Connor, Terence James
O'Donovan, Dr. William James
Ormsby-Gore, Rt. Hon. William G. A.
Pearson, William G.
Penny, Sir George
Perkins, Walter R. D.
Peters, Dr. Sidney John
Petherick, M.
Peto, Geoffrey K. (W'verh'pt'n, Bilston)
Potter, John
Raikes, Henry V. A. M.
Ramsay, Capt. A. H. M. (Midlothian)
Ramsay, T. B. W. (Western Isles)
Ramsden, Sir Eugene
Ray, Sir William
Reed, Arthur C. (Exeter)
Reid, David D. (County Down)
Reid, James S. C. (Stirling)
Remer, John R.
Rentoul, Sir Gervais S.
Rhys, Hon. Charles Arthur U.
Roberts, Sir Samuel (Ecclesall)
Ropner, Colonel L.
Ross Taylor, Walter (Woodbridge)
Runge, Norah Cecil
Russell, Alexander West (Tynemouth)
Russell, Richard John (Eddisbury)
Rutherford, John (Edmonton)
Rutherford, Sir John Hugo (Liverp'l)
Salmon, Sir Isidore
Samuel, Sir Arthur Michael (F'nham)
Samuel, Samuel (W'dsworth, Putney)
Sandeman, Sir A. N. Stewart
Savery, Samuel Servington
Shakespeare, Geoffrey H.
Shaw, Helen B. (Lanark, Bothwell)
Shute, Colonel J. J.
Skelton, Archibald Noel
Smiles, Lieut.-Col. Sir Walter D.
Smith, Sir Jonah W. (Barrow-in-F.)
Smith, Louis W. (Sheffield, Hallam)
Smith-Carington, Neville W.
Somerville, Annesley A (Windsor)
Sotheron-Estcourt, Captain T. E.
Southby, Commander Archibald R. J.
Spears, Brigadier-General Edward L.
Spender-Clay, Rt. Hon. Herbert H.
Stanley, Lord (Lancaster, Fylde)
Stanley, Hon. O. F. G. (Westmorland)
Stewart, J. H. (Fife, E.)
Stones, James
Storey, Samuel
Strauss, Edward A.
Strickland, Captain W. F.
Summersby, Charles H.
Thomas, James P. L. (Hereford)
Thompson, Luke
Thomson, Sir Frederick Charles
Thorp, Linton Theodore
Vaughan-Morgan, Sir Kenyon
Wallace, Captain D. E. (Hornsey)
Ward, Lt.-Col. Sir A. L. (Hull)
Ward, Irene Mary Bewick (Wallsend)
Ward, Sarah Adelaide (Cannock)
Wardlaw-Milne, Sir John S.
Warrender, Sir Victor A. G.
Wells, Sydney Richard
Whiteside, Borras Noel H.
Whyte, Jardine Bell
Williams, Charles (Devon, Torquay)
Wilson, Clyde T. (West Toxteth)
Windsor-Clive, Lieut.-Colonel George
Wise, Alfred R.
Womersley, Walter James

TELLERS FOR THE NOES.—Sir Henry Croft and Mr. Clarry.

Question proposed, "That those words be there added."

Mr. MANDER rose——

It being after half-past Seven of the Clock, the Debate stood adjourned.

RURAL INDUSTRIES.

7.40 p.m.

Brigadier-General CLIFTON BROWN: I beg to move,

"That this House is of opinion that the encouragement of rural industries and the maintenance of a thriving and contented village life, together with a prosperous agriculture, are vital to this country, and urges His Majesty's Government to take every possible step in this direction."

When I put down this Motion, I inadvertently gave notice that I would call attention to the plight of rural industries. I meant really to call attention to the condition of rural industries. I do not want it to be thought that rural industries are grumbling at a condition of affairs which is not being shared by many other industries at the present time. When I moved a similar Motion in March about six years ago, I went a good deal into the historical details of rural industries in Tudor times and into other matters, and I was twitted by an hon. Member opposite as having begun my speech with William the Conqueror and finished it with the Minister of Agriculture. I do not propose to go into historical details to-night, nor do I wish to alarm my right hon. Friend by saying that all the ills from which the countryside suffers have anything to do with him. It has to do far more with past generations in this country. We must realise even in the country that as things change so also does the countryside. The old industries which used to be essential are no longer essential.

Thousands of acres of the best agricultural land are built upon yearly. I was interested in a cutting which I saw in the "Times" of yesterday, which stated that agriculture in Surrey had lost 3,000 acres in 10 years owing to land being built upon. I often think that the loss of agricultural land for which agriculture has often been blamed has been more due to the spreading of the towns into rural England that is realised. We have to face the fact that the big towns are spreading and that rural England is becoming urbanised. We must also realise that many of the rural industries which were necessary for our fathers and our forefathers are no longer necessary. As far as village life and life in the far off rural areas are concerned, the cinema, wireless and motors have very much altered the outlook of our village folk.

[Brigadier-General Brown.]

When people coming to this country from Eastern countries, India, or from European countries approach the cliffs of Dover, or go up the Bristol Channel, to Avonmouth, or wherever they hit rural England, they feel that there is a different land before them than that from which they have come. The fields are greener, and they are smaller. If you happen to go to Kent a little later than this in the year you will see the most wonderful garden in the whole of the world. I think that Kent has been well described as "England's garden." England is very different from other countries, and our countryside is a very great asset, which we should do all we can to preserve. When you come to talk to the villagers in our villages, they may be more reserved than the foreigner, but they have a sense of justice and fair play that strikes you almost at once as different from what you meet in a foreign land. They are bred up with fewer comforts, but they are healthier from their harsher circumstances. They learn from nature, by which they are surrounded, to understand nature—human nature—and they learn more patiently and truly to distinguish what is false and what is true. How to maintain, under modern condition, what Shakespeare so well describes as is really the question underlying my Motion this evening. There are, of course, many rural industries which we cannot help to resuscitate or revive. Most of the rural industries depend on one thing, and that is a prosperous agriculture. If we get a prosperous agriculture in the country, many of those industries will revive. On the other hand, there are industries not dependent on agriculture which still ought to be kept in every kind of way from underselling by the foreigner, industries which give much employment. As far as agriculture is concerned, I gratefully recognise the effort which the present Government have made in very difficult circumstances to give real help to that industry. I have been a Member of this House for 10 years, and can honestly say that I have never been under a Government that has really tried to help industry as the present Government is doing at the moment. It has nothing to stop it, because it is looking from a business point of view, without any Protection, Free Trade, Socialism, nationalisation or any other point of view, at the problem before it.

> "This happy breed of men, this little world,
> This precious stone sat in the silver sea"

I do not agree with many of the things that the Government put forward, but no honest person can deny that it not only has the chance but has the will, and is making an effort to make agriculture, the most important industry in our countryside, really prosperous once again. If it succeeds—and I think that every man and woman ought to help in this object—it will be the only thing that will stop the drift of our young people to the towns from the countryside where they ought to be. It will be the only thing that will encourage investors to put capital back into our agricultural land instead of investing it in businesses, perhaps overseas and in a foreign land. I should like to say with much pleasure to my right hon. Friend, who I am glad to see here to-night, that there is only one test of all the Government legislation; whether it gets a fair price for the producer. Then it will pay; otherwise, it is not worth the trouble of doing anything. The people of England must understand that if they want a prosperous agriculture and a prosperous countryside, they must pay a fair price to the producer for the goods in the countryside, in the same way as the dweller in the countryside must pay a fair price for the goods he buys for his work.

I should like to put forward one fact about the countryside. We are luckily now able to evolve schemes for properly planning the town and countryside of England. Nothing is more important, as you realise when you see the shocking spread of industrial towns into the countryside, than to get committees formed all over England, on a big scale and composed of the right people, to decide which is to be country and which is to be town. The Town and Country Planning Act, 1932, which will come into force on the 1st April, will I hope be used wisely and well. Under that Act there is at all events some chance of dealing with those who come from the towns and desecrate the countryside, coming down in their motors and opening gates, breaking glass bottles and leaving them about where they can cut the feet of the cattle; setting woods on fire, as sometimes they do. There will be some chance of stopping that conduct and forcing those people to behave in a proper way. Many persons talk about the countryside being abused. We welcome all people who want a quiet day in the country, but we want to feel sure that they are not abusing our hospitality or desecrating the beautiful scenery which we have spent many years in producing, and that they will behave properly, as they do in the streets of London.

Some industries could be revived without other help at once, if agriculture is made more prosperous. If we get agriculture prosperous, we shall be building farm buildings, and owners, as every agricultural owner has done in the past and will do in the future, will provide cottages for those who work on the farms. That will be, without any doubt, an alleviation of the rural housing problem. There are local brickmaking works in many parts of England—in Southern England there are thousands of them. If agriculture is prosperous, there will be a bigger demand for bricks, land drainage pipes, and tiles for cottages. You will encourage the industry and get more employment for it. It does not want other help; it is doing fairly well now, but it would be enabled to employ more men and to have a more prosperous time. Thatchers, again, are a skilled race of agricultural labourers—there is no race more skilled. They are getting scarce. There are various reasons for this. Mechanisation plays its part in the unemployment of skilled workers on the countryside. Another reason is that Dutch barns are going up with iron roofs that require no thatch, whereas a thatcher was required before. On the other hand, if agriculture is prosperous, there will be more demand for thatching in the fields, and the demand for skilled thatchers, who are so important, will be kept up, and they will be as skilled as they have been in the past.

There is one very sad side, from a picturesque point of view, in the disappearance of one part of England—the old mills that used to grind the corn. They are either derelict or have disappeared, and there are very few left. I doubt whether under modern conditions they are worth being resuscitated, even with a prosperous agriculture. But an old workman told me that in his father's time, when the workmen wanted some more flour to bake bread, they went to the governor and asked him to send wheat over to the mills to be ground. He sent it over at once; the price was paid, and they had flour for their old ovens in the cottages—which, unfortunately, they do not have now—and it was very much to the advantage of the farmer, who got cheap offal from the grain for his stock. I was sorry that flour was not forbidden to come into this country as well as the whole wheat; I believe that such a step might have given some encouragement to the country mills, which are not only a picturesque ornament to the country and add to its beauty, but are a useful and cheap means of giving the farmer flour and offal with which to feed his stock.

Those are some of the industries that depend on successful agriculture and which will come right with the prosperity of agriculture. It is essential that some other things be kept up in the countryside, and one of these is to give the children in schools a rural bias in education. In a quiet way, in many schools in many counties, gardens are provided for these children and a competition is held at the end of the year by the squire or the farmer. Tours are arranged for the children round the farms to show them the cows being milked and other kinds of work. Education in one form or another can be given without any expense to children who are going to be the skilled agricultural workers of the future, to give them some keenness in agriculture, so that at 15 and 16, when they would otherwise want to go off to the town, they will desire to stick to the country where they were brought up.

[Brigadier-General Brown.]

No one has helped the countryside more in education, not only among children but among workers, than the Rural Community Councils formed under the Rural Industries Bureau. They get a grant from the Development Fund of only £6,300, but I am very glad that they have something. Of this they give to the Rural Community Councils some £5,400, and very good use is being made of this money with the help of private subscriptions. The Bureau does its best to send people down to teach craftsmen, such as blacksmiths, wheelwrights and saddlers, in the villages; they are given instruction, and these little men who have that knowledge in a village can nearly always get a living and are a very useful asset to the farmer. The average county, I understand, has 100 smiths, wheelwrights and saddlers. The Bureau also says that if estate and farm repairs were carried out as in pre-War days, all these men would be busy. Harrows, drags, horse hoes, and cultivators, specially designed to suit local conditions, are still manufactured by blacksmiths, especially in the Eastern counties.

There are many other activities, especially in Scotland and elsewhere, and although I do not plead for further funds, especially at a time like this, I hope that the Government will give all the encouragement it can. The local Community Council in my own county of West Sussex has been formed for the last 10 years. Among other things, it undertook to ascertain through its constituent bodies, if the rural districts wanted public libraries. Owing to the action it took, we now have libraries in the villages. They also carried out inquiries in the local villages on what craftsmen were at work, and made great efforts to popularise many forms of industries, by giving lectures and holding exhibitions. With the help of the Women's Institutes of that county they have spread education among those who desire to have it and among those whom it may benefit. They have taught lobster-pot making, they have set up experimental plots for growing willows, and have started underwood work. But I think that their best effort in my county of Sussex—though I am not Member for Sussex, I live there—has been to start the young farmers' clubs, which are so well known in most counties, where all young agriculturists can receive good training in the work on which they are likely to be employed in their later years.

I was told that there was very little to talk on in this Motion, but I have so much down that I must hurry on. I do not think that I can pass over this subject without paying a real tribute to the Women's Institutes, which deserve all the encouragement that they can possibly get. By working in with the educational policy of the Rural Community Councils, they have done almost more to spread education than any other body that I know. There are two interests for which I want to put in a plea with the Minister. I am afraid that it is not exactly a matter for the Minister of Agriculture. It may be more to do with the Board of Trade. There are industries independent of agriculture, which employ a good many people in one way or another and which ought to be encouraged in this country. I am referring to forestry and to the underwood industry, which in many counties are going on very hard at the present time. It is an industry which gives employment to many hands in the winter time, when work on the farm is rather slack. In the old days the agricultural labourers were employed in the forests of the neighbouring estates, but owing to the poor prices ruling for timber very little work has been done either in planting or cutting. Indeed, the forests of England are getting seriously denuded, and it is a matter which should receive most serious attention for the future.

I went as a representative of the Central Landowners' Association, who produce a great deal of this timber in this country, before the Imports Advisory Committee. We went with the timber merchants in order to support their plea for a higher duty on hard wood, which we can grow in this country in sufficient supplies. I asked a question last June as to what had been done, and it has not been answered yet. I am told that the reason for this is that the Board of Trade are bargaining with other countries over other materials. If that is the case they are doing so to the detriment of the forestry industry in this country, and it is time that they made up their minds as to whether they are going to treat this particular industry fairly or whether they propose to use it in bargaining as against some other industry. That does not help the countryside at all.

Forestry employs a great many hands in its various ramifications. We can produce the timber in this country. We have been told that before anything can be done by the Government the industry must organise itself. I want to tell the Minister of Agriculture that the Central Landowners Association, the producers of this timber, or a large part of it, are getting on with a scheme for the reorganisation of the production and selling of timber. We have been assisted by the Forestry Commissioners, who are the largest producers of this timber in this country. We are doing our best to get a proper organisation of the timber producers, and we want to get the timber merchants in as well. When we have this organisation and go again with our application to the Imports Advisory Committee we do expect to get better treatment than we had before. We do not expect to be used as a pawn in bargaining with some other industry. If something is done in this direction it will make a great deal of difference in the number of men employed. Up to this year it employed all the spare hands in many villages, but for the first time there is no demand this year for underwood at all, entirely owing to foreign competition. It is found that the people who use this kind of wood are able to buy their supplies from outside this country at so cheap a price that the producers in this country cannot compete with it. This is a rural industry which should get fair play; it should not be treated as a pawn.

Another industry which the Rural Community Council has done much to help and assist is the osier growing industry. Why has that gone out? Osiers make baskets. In their report they say:

> "The recovery of the underwood industry depends on the recovery of general trade. Besoms are used largely by docks and wharves and also by the steel trade, though the demand for this has completely ceased for the present."

There are figures to show that this industry is hard hit by unfair foreign competition. The osier growing and basket making industries provide work for a considerable number of men, including many blind persons. The home trade has shown a marked downward tendency in recent years. In 1926 it was down by 5.49 per cent. as compared with 1925, in 1927 by 7.87 per cent. as compared with 1925; in 1928 by 27.41 per cent. as compared with 1925; in 1929 by 12.49 per cent. as compared with 1925; in 1930 by 17.69 per cent. as compared with 1925, and the last census figures gave 7,000 basket makers as employed in the industry as compared with 4,500 at present. The number of employers in the industry is about 900. Osier growing in our rural districts gives employment to at least two men per acre, and if my suggestion is carried out employment could be given to agricultural workers in this way and also for part of the year in the forests. For some years the growing of osiers has been diminishing and unemployment has increased by 60 per cent. and 70 per cent. I am only talking of small things but these small things make all the difference in the life of the country. They cannot cost very much even if a little more protection is given them.

I hope the Debate, academic as it be, will do something to encourage sturdy British village folk all over rural England to hold fast to their old traditions of faith and character. It will be a gesture of good will and remind them that even in these times of national crisis, when great industrial problems present themselves for consideration, that their interests are not overlooked in this great assembly of the House of Commons.

8.10 p.m.

Mr. LENNOX-BOYD: I beg to second the Motion.

The House has this afternoon been considering urgent matters of great international importance, and it may be something of an anti-climax when we ask it to consider a matter of this kind, but I venture to suggest that there may come a time when the various concerns with which the House has interested itself this afternoon, deflation, reflation, inflation, sterling, prices and tariffs, and all matters of that kind, may well be merely a part of history, and that any legislative assembly which may survive may still be called upon to decide questions vitally affecting rural and agricultural life. I do not go so far as to say that in the future they will still be flint knapping in Norfolk, as they have been doing from neolithic times, or that they will in Barnstaple be making pottery as they have made it for the last 1,500 years, but I think it highly improbable that the inventive genius of man will ever discover a more effective way of sustaining life than by the cultivation of the fields, and as long as that remains true, any question which vitally concerns agriculture must demand the attention of any Parliament in the world.

[Mr. Lennox-Boyd.]

My hon. and gallant Friend who has proposed the Motion referred to the previous Motion which he himself moved in 1927, and perhaps the House will remember that that Motion was rather rudely interrupted by a count. There are all the indications that some such situation may arise to-night, but I have every intention of being very brief, and especially because the Minister of Agriculture has been courteous enough to be present and proposes to speak in the course of the Debate. When my hon. and gallant Friend proposed his previous Motion he was speaking at a time when during the 16 years previous no fewer than 126,000 agricultural workers had left the countryside for the towns. Since he made that speech a further 17,000 agricultural workers have left rural Britain and gone into the towns, and have gone either upon the dole or superseded other industrial workers, who have themselves gone upon the dole. In the same period in almost every quarter of rural Britain the rural workshops which were flourishing 18 and 20 years ago have been closing down. In a period of five years in Norfolk and in Suffolk nearly 1,000 rural workshops have closed down and over 1,500 men have lost their employment.

When my hon. and gallant Friend proposed his Motion in 1927 it was perfectly true that more people were employed on the land than are employed to-day, but there was a very definite difference between the position which ruled when he made his last speech and the position which rules to-day. To-day agricultural Britain knows with gratitude and certainty that the Government have decided on an agricultural policy and have put it in the hands of a Minister who commands the respect and loyalty of the whole agricultural community. The situation is indeed different to-day. I want briefly to try and explain what I understand is meant by rural industries. I am afraid that there is grave danger that some people may go away with the idea that the Mover and Seconder of this Motion are concerned with some of those trades like raffia working, and arts and crafts which can scarcely form suitable subjects for the deliberation of Parliament. I can assure the House that we have no intention of asking for a subsidy to encourage raffia working, nor do we want a subsidy to bring about what the Prime Minister described as an artistic Utopia, a Medici print in every cottage. We want to draw attention to real rural industries which are ancillary to agriculture, and which have been going through times even graver than the great industry of agriculture to which they themselves cater.

I refer primarily to the rural building trade, the building by small rural craftsmen of houses which are in every way suitable for the district in which they are placed. Secondly, to the old rural past-times, hedging, ditching, thatching, shoeing and blacksmith work, all of which it is vital to retain if we want to keep in our midst live craftsmen living upon the land. It should not be necessary in times of agricultural enlightenment to stress the advantages of rural trades. They are vital to agriculture, and if you once allow people who can perform them successfully to die out, and no successors to be reared, you will find at a time of agricultural expansion that you lack the people to whom you must turn. To-day anyone who examines the figures will find that we have few young men, in many districts no young men who are taking up such a vital rural trade as thatching. You can survey counties from end to end and count on the fingers of one hand the young men who are being trained to carry on this vital trade. That is not the only advantage, because rural trades have provided in the past for nearly every agricultural householder a highly valuable source of alternative income.

I represent an agricultural district, where, if the same amount of work in one trade was being given to-day as 20 years ago, no less than £12,000 would be paid out every year in wages, in a district no larger than 20 square miles. It is rather a tragic thing that we should, in response to the gospel of cheapness, have allowed this industry—the peeling of onions for pickling—to be superseded by cheaper onions imported from Holland and other countries. Also in the district I represent there were, until a few years ago, no fewer than 7,000 people who brought home every week to their homes a considerable sum of money through the making of Bedford lace. To-day what is a really historic and important English trade is carried on by people who can be numbered in mere hundreds.

It has been suggested by my hon. and gallant Friend that these rural industries would keep enterprising men on the land. I would like to refer to what I consider almost the most valuable thing that such men could do, and that is to produce beautiful and artistic things and gradually to raise the whole public taste. Everyone knows that at the moment mass production is killing enterprise and the power to create the simple and beautiful things that our fathers turned out. If we are ever to overcome the undoubted degrading of the public taste which mass production has brought about, it will be largely because of the demand for the products of the village skilled craftsman, who in time will make his wares popular and thereby affect mass production itself.

It is all very well to catalogue a series of grievances and not to suggest one or two practical steps which the Government could take. Obviously a first step, a step which we in this House can ask of our Government—the Government is responding—is to pursue with vigour a live agricultural policy. It is true that a number of our rural trades, not all and not even all the vital ones, will revive with a general revival in agriculture. If we look at the various important wood trades, rakes, hurdle making and trades of that kind, we find that their depression has coincided very largely with the general agricultural depression. We shall find it very difficult when the better times come, the times for which the Minister is working with such vigour and such chance of success, to find people who will be trained enough to carry on these trades, unless something is done now.

Another thing which we can suggest to the Government is that in their industrial policy they should remember that in a good many rural districts of England the recovery of rural trade will come about through industrial recovery. It is impossible to over-emphasise the collapse in agricultural rural life which has been occasioned by the decline in the purchasing power of the great towns. If only we can revive that purchasing power we will find an enormous fillip given to our rural trades. There are a whole variety of small ways in which a revival in industrial life would bring about a revival in rural industries as well. If, for example, the iron and steel trade and the shipbuilding trade revived there would be an immediate response in the small rural trades which makes heather besoms on the northern moors. If the textile trade were to revive the bobbin mills of Yorkshire and the Lake District would be called upon to satisfy some of the new demands.

A third way in which the Government could help would be to give rural trades that protection against foreign imports which many of them can legitimately ask. There was for many generations a very flourishing rush-plaiting trade carried on in this country. It was carried on for centuries. It had been entirely killed by the cheap imports of Belgian plait. When the War came there were Belgian refugees in England, and a man in the district who had bought his plait from Belgium naturally thought that he might get some of the Belgian plaiters to work here by taking them to Islip, and that so he would be able to purchase cheap plait such as he had bought previously from abroad. But he was met with the reply that not a single man among the refugees could carry on this trade, because it had been invariably performed by convict and reformatory labour in Belgium. So in response to the gospel of cheapness we had allowed a very old and romantic and attractive English rural craft to be faced with extinction.

The Government have faced up to the problem in one vital trade to which my hon. and gallant Friend referred. That is the basket trade. It is not generally recognised that Covent Garden Market requires every year 2,000,000 sieves and half-sieves. It is absurd that market gardeners in agricultural districts which produce the goods should be forced to buy their baskets from foreign countries. There was a duty put on foreign baskets in 1932, and the immediate result of that duty was a reduction by one-half of the imports of foreign baskets. I can speak from personal experience and I am sure that though a certain part of that figure is met by a falling off in demand, the greater part is met by increased production among the basket-makers of England.

[Mr. Lennox-Boyd.]

My hon. and gallant Friend referred to rural bias in education, and I would make a brief comment on that subject. In 1926 the Board of Education issued a pamphlet in which they explained why it was that the secondary education of England was rather taking the form of industrial as opposed to rural education. They said that as secondary education was voluntary it was inevitable that the form of education provided should conform to what the public wanted. They said that the average parent believed that if a child who had had a secondary education went into any occupation other than commerce or clerical work, that child's secondary education was inevitably wasted. I hope that the Government, through the Board of Education, and everyone who has influence, through the normal channels, will do all that is possible to impress upon the people the fact that probably many rural trades to-day are a far better climax to a secondary education than industrial or commercial life. It would be a real service to dispel the illusion that the only man whose education has justified itself is the person who can wear a black coat—and then find, when he looks for work, that there is no job at hand. It is a widespread belief.

Take, for example, the primitive and ancient trade of charcoal burning. There is very little prospect of an increased demand for charcoal, unless the League of Nations embroils us in war with Japan and more gunpowder is required. But our charcoal burners are living in huts which are almost exactly replicas of the hut-circle habitations of our primitive ancestors. But a Government inspector comes round and finds that, though these men have worked for generations in those huts and have taken no harm from the woods, the huts do not conform to some regulation of the Ministry of Health, or that a small boy in the hut is ignorant of some algebraic problem, and the whole force of Parliament is brought to bear, an Act is prepared, the Government Whips are probably put on, a bright new red brick villa is built in the woods, an asphalte path is laid from the villa to the school, and there the child learns of the day when William the Conqueror came to the Throne, but he will be taught to despise a trade which was old at the time of the Conquest. His feet will be planted very firmly on the ladder which will eventually land him outside an Employment Exchange in some nearby town. If we are to put an end to that, we must do our best to revive the old honourable and useful system of apprenticeship. You will never revive rural crafts and give the people a proper sense of what true education is, unless you revive the system of technical apprenticeship which built up the prosperity of Britain and provided, in nearly every case, that career open to talent which it must be the aim of elementary education to give.

No one who speaks on the subject of rural industries ought to leave altogether out of account the progressive and tragic degradation of the face of Britain which has been taking place for the last few generations. Any Government which determines to tackle firmly the problem of rural industries must assume almost autocratic powers. If we had a dictatorship of the fine arts in Britain, as we could quite properly have, a dictatorship which this Government with its gigantic majority could assume, it would be possible, immediately, to insist that no local authority should pass for building the plan of any cottage or house which did not conform as best it could, to the prevailing architecture of the district. It would be possible to insist on the use of local stone and local slates and the employment of local craftsmen and it would be possible, if need be, to waive some of the exaggerated and unnecessary regulations which exist at present.

There was a case a little time ago in which a rural district council of great good sense, required some gutter stays for its houses. Somebody suggested that a local craftsman might produce them almost as cheaply as and certainly better than a firm of manufacturers. They used the locally-made article with the result that the houses which they have built are improved architecturally and from every other point of view. The people who live in cottages of that kind and who go from those cottages to earn their daily bread in that revived agriculture which my right hon. Friend the Minister is doing his best to bring about, will be better citizens and happier men than if they had been put into some Addison monstrosity in some new street. It was well said by an Irishman only a few days ago, speaking of a friend: "He was born a countryman, as I was, but the streets closed in on him—at the end—God pity him." We have an opportunity, by encouraging these rural trades, of keeping on the soil in happy and profitable content a generation of men who, if we do nothing, will inevitably gravitate to the towns. I hope that my right hon. Friend the Minister who has shown great courtesy in being here and who is, I understand, to speak in this Debate, will give some encouragement to those who believe that a rural bias in education is almost the outstanding educational need of the day.

8.30 p.m.

Mr. LLEWELLYN-JONES: I should like to congratulate my hon. and gallant Friend the Member for Newbury (Brigadier-General Brown) upon introducing this Motion. My only regret is that more hon. Members were not in the House to hear the very lucid way in which he presented it. I am disposed to think that that, to a certain extent, may be an indication of the attitude which is too often taken by those who live in towns or industrial areas towards the requirements of the country districts. But if the rural population of this country continues to drop and drop as it has been doing nothing but disaster lies ahead of this country and it is well that Parliament should address itself to what is one of the most important and urgent problems connected with our national life.

This Motion is complementary to the Bill which received a Second Reading a fortnight ago dealing with home and Empire settlement. In the Debate on that Bill a good deal of attention was paid to the problem of home settlement and there can be no doubt that there is increasing anxiety in various circles as to the situation in our rural areas to-day. The problem to-day is not merely one of stopping the drift from country to town but also one of endeavouring to bring back to the country as many as possible of those who have gravitated during the last generation to the towns. This problem is closely associated with the problem of unemployment. I believe that, with a definite, progressive, forward policy in connection with the rural areas, much might be done to assist in dealing with unemployment.

The depopulation of the rural areas is not merely a quantitative problem. It is a qualitative problem also. Anyone who has been brought up in a rural area or a country village and whose recollection goes back 30, 40 or 50 years, must realise the great change that has taken place in that time. When I first read this Motion a few days ago I was at home. I took one of my usual walks in the country and went into the parish where I lived in my boyhood. I began to make comparisons between the situation in that parish 50 years ago and the situation to-day and I could not help being struck by the great and serious difference in the character of the inhabitants. There was a big drop in the population but, apart from that, I found that the two or three blacksmiths' shops which were there 20 years ago had been closed; there was no saddler and the two flour mills had long since been closed and were in a dilapidated state and very unlikely ever to be set going again. These changes meant that other occupations had also ceased to be practised in that district. The wheelwrights, for instance, had gone. If one were to make a survey of a number of parishes and rural areas one would find the same story repeated. Not only has the population gone down but the local crafts have died out, and all the work required in these districts has to be carried out at neighbouring towns.

The remedy is not merely to bring men back to the land, not merely to encourage men to remain in the country, but to see, as far as possible, that there is no further drop in rural industries and that something is done to restore those industries which are capable of being restored. There are many, of course, that cannot be restored, such as the milling industry of the country, but there are certain industries which have migrated into the towns for whose return to the rural areas we might hope, and something has been done of recent years in this direction. The hon. and gallant Member who introduced this Motion referred to what has been done by the Rural Industries Bureau, in co-operation with the Rural Community Council, in organising craftsmen in various parts of the country. Reference has also been made to the activities of the Women's Institutes which are scattered throughout the country. It may be of interest to hon. Members to know that the first women's village institute was started in Anglesey, in North Wales, in a small village with a very long name—probably, if it were printed in full, the longest name on the map of England and Wales. [HON. MEMBERS: "Say it!"] I am afraid it would be eleven o'clock before I had finished it.

[Mr. Llewellyn-Jones.]

I propose now to refer to what has been done in Wales in connection with one industry, because I believe it is some indication as to what might be done in other parts of the country. I refer to the woollen industry. There was a time when the woollen industry was one of the great industries of Wales. Long before any coal mines were opened in our country, our small woollen factories not only supplied their own localities, but flannel and cloth were sent across the border to markets in border towns, from North Wales to Oswestry and Shrewsbury, and from South Wales to Hereford and other border towns; and a great quantity of it was conveyed from these towns to all parts of England. Unfortunately, that industry gradually declined, but at one time there must have been hundreds of small woollen factories in all parts of Wales. The water power in the rivers and the valleys of Wales was found to be of immense value in connection with this industry. Recently, there has been a turn of the tide, and the woollen industry in Wales, although it is suffering at the moment owing to the depression in the mining districts, has some prospect of revival, I believe.

Reference has already been made by both speakers who have preceded me on this subject to the importance of educational work. It may be interesting to know that a few years ago the Welsh University took up this matter. A certain fund was placed at the disposal of the university in connection with Welsh industries, and a committee, of which I had the honour to be a member, decided that it might very usefully be expended in making a survey of the woollen industry, to see what could be done in order to develop it in various parts of Wales; and an advising and organising officer was appointed. In the first instance, a very interesting report was published on a survey of the Welsh textile industry. The report gave an account of the mills and factories in various parts of Wales, and made certain suggestions in connection with organisation in the future. As a result, the Welsh Textiles Association was founded, and this association has not only assisted in stimulating the industry, but has done one important thing which was absolutely necessary in connection with it, namely, improving the design of the cloths woven at the different small factories in Wales. In probably the same report to which the hon. and gallant Member referred, the report of the Rural Industries Bureau, reference is made to this matter, and I think perhaps a few sentences from this report will give the House a better idea as to what has been done in Wales in this connection than can any words of mine:

> "The Bureau works direct with the Welsh textile industry . . . . Welsh industry consists of 100 rural mills hitherto producing flannel, blankets, and coarse cloth. With Bureau help Textiles Association has been formed, and new modern fabrics designed by the Bureau and gradually being introduced have been exhibited, for the first time, at the British Industries Fair, where export orders were received from all over Europe. Assistance with design will continue and two looms be permanently devoted to design experiment. The technical advice is supplied by a Welsh-speaking expert working permanently in Wales. The industry uses local wool, employs 1,000 men, and is capable of employing 2,000. After success at Fair, interest in design and new methods is spreading to more factories in Wales."

When the House realises that there are something like 140 factories, the great majority of them in the three counties of South and West Wales—Cardiganshire, Carmarthenshire and Pembrokeshire—it will be seen what can be done by organisation of this character. This is one of the rural industries which I believe has largely been saved by the assistance, given, in the first instance, by the Welsh University, and subsequently by the Welsh Textiles Association, which was established in conjunction with the Rural Industries Bureau. This is not the only industry to which attention has been devoted of recent years in Wales. In a very interesting report, published in the year 1927 and compiled by Miss Anna M. Jones, reference is made to a large number of other small industries, such as pottery and basket-making, and it is an indication that a good deal can be done if, in various localities, there is some kind of organisation, and a possibility of receiving advice, and in some cases, of course, of getting certain financial assistance to start an industry.

The question to which the House naturally desires to address itself is what can be done to stimulate this movement. No one disputes the importance of developing rural life in its various aspects, and the Minister of Agriculture has certainly a great opportunity. I like to regard the Minister of Agriculture as the Minister of Rural Industries dealing with all aspects of rural life. I will suggest in this connection that, so far as Wales is concerned, the Welsh Secretary of the Board of Agriculture, who is stationed in Wales and has a staff at his disposal, might work in conjunction with the local authorities and the education authorities to deal with all aspects of rural life. I am very glad that such emphasis was made upon the importance of giving a rural bias to education.

I speak with a good deal of knowledge of the educational movements in Wales when I say that I am afraid that our elementary schools have been regarded too largely as schools to train children to go to the secondary schools. Our secondary schools again—the great majority of them, at any rate—have simply gone largely upon the old idea of giving either a good literary education or an education in science subjects. The practical side of education has been neglected to a very great extent, particularly in the rural areas. What is the result? A very large number of the children who pass through rural schools think that their only possibility of a decent future is in the towns or in industrial districts. If something can be done in the elementary schools to give a more practical side to education, it would certainly mean that more children would be prepared to remain in the country. A child should not be brought up with the idea that it is only by following what many people regard as more respectable occupations that he can find a future after he leaves school.

I trust that the Government will not merely accept this Motion to-night, but will follow it with action. I cannot imagine that there will be any attempt from any part of the House to oppose it. The danger is that once a private Member's Bill has had its Second Reading and is sent upstairs to Committee to be scanned, and once a private Member's Motion is passed, it goes into the pigeonhole of some Department or other and is forgotten until it crops up again three or four years afterwards. This is one aspect of many of the problems which are baffling us in this country, and I trust that the Minister of Agriculture and the Government will, after the House adopts this Motion, as I am certain it will, will see that something is done at no distant date in order to implement what I believe to be the views of the great majority, if not of the whole House.

8.50 p.m.

Mr. J. P. L. THOMAS: As I represent a constituency whose welfare is entirely bound up with the prosperity of its agricultural population, I should like to add my congratulations to my hon. and gallant Friend the Member for Newbury (Brigadier-General Brown) for bringing this Motion before the House, and to congratulate the hon. Member for Mid-Bedford (Mr. Lennox-Boyd) for the very able and charming way in which he did his share by seconding the Motion. I welcome the Motion on my own behalf, for to those who represent agricultural constituencies one of the most pleasant features of our work lies in the attraction and the interest which we find in village life. Any action or trouble that we may take now cannot be too great a burden if thereby we can do anything to preserve the happiness and contentment of the people in our villages. For some time past we have watched the drift of our rural population from the countryside to the town. Year after year we have watched them with a feeling of despair because we felt that our hands are being tied behind our backs by a futile and worn out system of Free Trade. Until this Government came into office we had been powerless to help them, and we had to stand by while our rural industries had to stand up by their own unaided efforts against the competition of the foreigner.

[Mr. Thomas.]

That day is now passed, and it is because the Government have put into our hands the weapon of Protection, and because the Minister of Agriculture with great courage has launched us on a venture of building up once more the greatest of our British industries, that we support this Motion with more optimism than we possibly could when last the hon. and gallant Member introduced it in the House. The decline in the prosperity of agriculture has seen the decline also in our rural industries. In this country it is the concentration on manufacture in urban localities which contributes so largely to the displacement of the population of our rural areas. Unlike other countries, we have taken no steps until a short time ago to preserve the balance between our towns and the population of our countryside. It has not been so in other countries. Germany, for instance, as far back as 1870 after the ending of the Franco-Prussian War, was engaged in reconstructing her life as a national unit. She aimed at balancing the claims of the country and of the towns. She adopted that policy 60 years ago, and we have waited until the present day before we ourselves have attempted to adopt it. That it was a right policy is beyond doubt, because in the years of the Great War she reaped her reward. Her resistance to the blockade was one of the greatest wonders of the War.

This example has not altogether been lost on us, although we could have made greater use of the methods which they used, for successive Governments since 1921 have given practical financial help to the Rural Industries Bureau Development Fund. This has worked most successfully in at least 18 of our counties, through either the rural community councils, the rural industries bureau and other bodies, especially the women's institute. I, too, would like to seize this opportunity of paying a very fleeting tribute to the women's institutes, who, with their most admirable instruction work, do so much to bring content into our village life.

As the county which I represent is one of the 18 which are receiving this help. I hope I shall not bore the House if for one moment I give an example of a rural industry in Herefordshire. The hon. Member for Flint (Mr. Llewellyn-Jones) told us how the people of his county used to market their goods in the markets of Herefordshire. We have taken a leaf from the book of the hon. Member for Flint. We have set about and are making great strides in the industry of woven tweeds, but we do not return the compliment of using Flintshire as our market. We seem to have gone farther afield, for to-day not only are Herefordshire tweeds being sold in all parts of the British Isles, but they go to South America, South Africa, Czechoslovakia, Ceylon and Denmark. Now, with a mixture of linen and wool, we are preparing to produce light-weight tweeds suitable for use in tropical countries. The development of this new industry is already having a tremendous effect on the building of new looms, and giving great work to village carpenters in my constituency.

The hon. and gallant Member for Newbury spoke to us of the possibilities of basket-making were it given sufficient Protection against the foreigner. We, too, in Herefordshire make baskets. He pleaded for an increase in the tariff against foreign goods. I understand that certain of the basket-makers are asking for what I should call a prohibitive tariff against foreign imports. I assure the House that I should be the last person to grudge tariff Protection to any agricultural industry, but there is a danger on this particular question. The customers of our basket-makers are the users of what we call containers, and if regular supplies at reasonable prices are too difficult to obtain there is a possibility that they will give up the use of baskets and take once more to non-returnable boxes and to crates. Although I hope very much that the 20 per cent. tariff which I understand is at present upon the products of that industry may be increased, it is just as well that it should not be increased to a prohibitive level too suddenly.

I certainly have no wish to pose as a person with any particular knowledge of the subject of this Motion, but, if I might with very great respect make one suggestion to the Minister, it would be to extend to these rural districts the benefits of a marketing organisation. We have all seen the very attractive products of our rural craftsmen at exhibitions, and surely we can agree that there must be a very large potential demand for the products of our village blacksmiths, our wheelwrights, our potters, and our textile workers. The trouble at the moment seems to be that the large stores and distributors are unable to purchase these articles wholesale in sufficient quantities, and to be certain at the same time that they will be up to sample. Would it not be possible for rural producers to be registered at some central organisation, possibly the Rural Industries Bureau, which would be in a position to accept orders on a large scale knowing that it would be possible to meet the demands in a satisfactory manner? The cost of a marketing organisation would have to be considered, but if we follow the examples which have been presented to us during the last few months, and especially on Monday, surely that cost might be defrayed by producers in the form of a levy. I am quite convinced that this is a step which will have to be taken if these rural industries are to continue to prosper and to expand.

I realise that this Motion may seem possibly, a question of secondary importance to the Minister of Agriculture, who is for the moment facing such tremendous problems in his Department—tremendous problems in all the branches of agriculture—live-stock, arable and dairy farming—with such sympathy and with such courage. I say of my own knowledge, and I am speaking for one of the greatest live stock areas, which has been terribly hard hit through the collapse of prices in the meat market during last year, that in that area he has won from the farmers and agricultural workers the greatest admiration and the greatest confidence. That is the case to such an extent that I am sure he will be victorious, with their help and co-operation, in rebuilding our great industry and recreating a rural civilisation. But if that picture is to be complete it must contain within its framework the prosperity also of the rural industries referred to in this Motion, and I feel sure that he will look upon the suggestions which have been made in previous speeches with the greatest sympathy. I would also ask him, with great respect, whether he does not think the time has come when a very serious inquiry might be held into the following three points: first, to see what other rural industries existing already in foreign countries might be started here in Great Britain; second, to see how best to develop the rural industries already in existence here; and thirdly, and to my mind most important of all, to consider the need of a sales organisation. I support this Motion because I realise, as does every other right hon. and hon. Member of this House, that the eventual triumph and the eventual strength of the agricultural population, will rest upon the initiative and the native craftsmanship of every individual agricultural worker.

9.3 p.m.

Commander COCHRANE: I wish to give whole-hearted support to this Motion, and I start by saying that because I would like to give my very brief remarks a rather different direction from that which has been followed by any of the other speakers up to the present; and for this reason. I think my hon. and gallant Friend who introduced this Motion was, if he will forgive me for saying so, speaking about to-morrow in the terms of yesterday. Even in the rural districts things will not be in the future as they were in the past. I regret exceedingly that that should be so, but it appears to me that conditions are changing so much in this country and throughout the world that we cannot expect to get back to those conditions, which I am sure we should all like to see, where the rural industries which he indicated were the ones which could be successfully carried on in our country districts. I think one of the greatest mistakes which we have made in this country in the past has been to divorce the great industry of agriculture from our other producing industries.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hereford (Mr. J. P. C. Thomas) mentioned just now what had been done in Germany, saying that there they had endeavoured for the last 50 years to weld together, as I understood him, the agricultural industry and other productive industries. I believe that the Germans describe that process as making their people "crisis-resistant," that is to say, the inhabitants are not entirely dependent upon either one or the other industry. I do not think that there was ever a time in this country when we had more need to apply the same principles. To-day, as a result of the displacement of men, not entirely but largely because of the so-called rationalisation of industry, that is, by the perfection of machinery, men are becoming unemployed, and, at the same time, voluntary associations all over the country are trying to find small plots of land so that those men may do something to keep themselves until they can get back into employment in their own industry.

[Commander Cochrane.]

We cannot regard that as a satisfactory state of affairs. On the one hand, skilled men are being turned off because of the excessive use of machinery, and on the other hand, every effort is being made by those voluntary associations to find the unemployed men some occupation at which they will not produce anything useful. The voluntary associations are at once in difficulties as soon as they produce anything for which they must find a market. There must be some middle course which would avoid those two extremes. I think that we must accept the possibility that the industries of this country, and by that I mean the great agricultural industry and the other productive industries, must be more closely linked together, if we are to have a prosperous country in the future. The Government are taking steps and powers which will make it possible for them to bring about this great change in the country. The question I would submit is, would it be right for them not to do so? We have only a limited amount of land, and we must face the question as to whether that land is to be used for the purposes of producing food-crops by the ruthless use of machinery and so on, or whether we are going to employ that limited amount of land in order to sustain as many people as possible? I submit that the only rational way in which we can make use of the land of the country is by giving as many people as possible some alternative source of income.

I come back for a moment to the people I mentioned just now who have been thrown out of ordinary productive industry. Would it not be a much happier state of affairs, and should we not see the people of our country much more crisis-resistant if each of those unemployed men had a comparatively small plot of land which they could use for part-time employment, and from which they would gain a certain amount of produce? My hon. and gallant Friend the Member for Newbury (Brigadier-General Clifton Brown) mentioned with approval —and I entirely agree—what has been done by the Forestry Commission. He mentioned also the Central Landowners' Association. Men are employed part-time at forestry and part-time upon smallholdings. I have never understood why the production of trees should be thought the only productive industry which could be usefully linked with agriculture. I believe that much can be done in the way of adding other productive industries to agriculture.

I am encouraged in that view by the fact that, in spite of all the talk that there has been in recent years—you do not hear so much about it now—of the rationalisation of industry, there were, in 1930, 97,000 factories in this country each employing fewer than 25 men. There were another 11,500 employing between 26 and 50 men each. All those factories might have been in rural districts; I do not say that they all were, but it would be possible that they should be in rural districts. There is nothing in a process which can be carried on in a factory employing fewer than 25 men which prevents it from being carried on in a rural district. The total number of people employed in the smallest class of factories was very nearly 650,000 in the depressed year 1930. I believe that we must look to a development of that sort in the future, and it is for that reason that I ventured at the outset of my speech to say that I should feel bound to suggest to the House a rather different argument than that which had already been put forward.

We are embarked on this course. I do not say that it is our fault. World conditions are such to-day that the Government having taken powers, with the full assent of the country, to plan conditions in the rural districts for the future, if they face that problem as they faced the great difficulties with which our other producing industries are faced—and, after all, they are inter-linked problems —they will find it more and more necessary to link agriculture and other productive industries together. By doing so, I believe that we shall witness a revival of rural industry, but I do not think that those industries will be on quite the same lines as those which have been the stand-by of our country districts in the past.

9.12 p.m.

Mr. CROSSLEY: It is with some trepidation that I take part in this discussion, partly because in my constituency there are but a few fields, and on them only a few black sheep, and partly because I want to raise a question on those craft industries which the Seconder of the Motion, in a most admirable speech —I am sorry that the hon. Member is not in his place—deprecated as not worthy of the attention of Parliament. I wanted to make some rather imaginative remarks upon that matter, because we have to-day on the Front Bench a Minister who, we hope, is the most imaginative Minister. There is a good deal of difference between imagination and fantasy. Imagination leads to truth; fantasy leads to deception.

It was once my good fortune to go into the Law Courts when a breach of promise case was on. The learned judge was just beginning to sum up, and he began by going into the complete history of engagement rings since they first became desired by, and satisfactory to, the vanity and the avarice of young ladies. This question of craft industries is one which cannot be studied without first looking into history, noting those periods when craft industries flourished and seeing if those conditions are compatible with conditions in this country at the present time. Those industries certainly flourished in monastic days, when the craft guilds in every rural town in the country looked after the interests of the industries themselves and insisted upon the system of apprenticeship.

Now, however, those craft guilds have fallen into disrepute; they have sunk away into the dim ages; and even their town confreres, the City companies, have also become merely centres of conviviality and erudition. The goldsmiths, who, again, in the country, used to encourage craft industries, are also gone. These were succeeded by the period of the parson and the squire, when the parson and the squire were mostly engaged in disporting themselves either over a country or under a table, or came up here to Westminster as rather scaly-skinned diehards and opposed every bit of progressive legislation that was put forward by their opposition, the Whig aristocracy. The Whig aristocracy, quite clearly, performed a most admirable service to the country. They did encourage some craft industries. But, at the same time, they mostly gave their attention to more refined and cultured people abroad. They went on the Grand Tour, and brought back tastes in Venetian pictures. Then we had the industrial revolution, and our craft industries were really endowed with very small strength to meet the temptation to flock into the towns.

I want to go into another little reminiscence. When I was at Oxford, the wise and benevolent president of my college decided that it would be a good thing if I spent one term in the country. I chose, as the place to go to, a little village, and lived there with a reverend gentleman who had a house which was entirely built in the style of the village —built entirely by local craftsmen. It was fitted up in every part with beautiful old furniture; the candlesticks were of wrought iron, made in the country; the tables, perhaps, were made in the old monastic days; the pottery was made in the country. Everything was beautiful, and everything was in its way significant. The point that I want to make is that every one of those articles was actually made by people, not as luxury articles, but intended for everyday use.

To-day our new houses are furnished entirely with machine-made goods, and they are often built to the complete desecration of the country side. In the Vale of Conway, for instance, a new village has been built right along the hillside, and great interest has been taken in it by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Carnarvon Boroughs (Mr. Lloyd George). It is a complete blot, a straggling blot, on the face of one of the most beautiful valleys in England. I do not know whether this is not the appropriate time, even with all the appalling problems with which we find ourselves confronted, for the right hon. Gentleman, who, as we hope, has the imaginative mind, to turn to this piece of really constructive legislation, to fortify himself with powers to stop the building of country houses with bricks which are incongruous in the district in which they are used. To restore the balance between town and country, something must be done to add dignity to our modern countryside.

Something in that direction is being done to-day. There is a church which Gilbert Spencer is decorating at Cookham; there is the glass which is being made at Broadway; there is the monastery which is being built at Buckfast, in Devonshire, by the monks. All of these are definite undertakings which will have the effect dignifying the countryside. Is it not possible to relate activities of that kind to the problem of to-day in our towns? Is it not possible to start settlements in the country of small groups of people who, under the guidance of competent craftsmen and competent artists, will undertake to revive those industries? I know that there are plenty of competent craftsmen; I come across them every day in the district in London where I live—craftsmen who would be only too glad if the chance to go and guide a community in the country towards developing a craft industry.

[Mr. Crossley.]

There are three questions that have to be asked: Where do you get your men? Where do you get your money? And, most important of all: Where do you get your markets? I suggest that you could get your men from the occupational centres which are springing up in the towns. I believe that you could get your money if the right hon. Gentleman would make a statement—a positive, emphatic statement—that he believed that there would be a market for those goods. It depends, of course, upon the answer to the question: Would there be a market for those goods? I do not know what is the use of a great deal of our education if it is not going to lead to appreciation of the fact that what is made by hand is, generally speaking, more significant than what is made by machine.

We live in a time when capitalism is floundering in the morass that it has created, and the only alternative given is a Socialism which has absolutely no ideals for an individual, or else something frictional in between the two. The study of history satisfies me that, when you have a period in which you do not make use of your capacity to create beautiful things, to dignify both town and country with what is beautiful, then you have a period of national decay. Where there is no vision, the people perish. As was said by the hon. and learned Member for Central Nottingham (Mr. O'Connor) the other day, it is our duty to build up a new capitalism that will give hope for every person with a brain—a brain to appreciate, a brain to use, a brain to construct. I suggest that this is not a wrong time at which to ensure that that capitalism shall partly be a capitalism of the countryside.

9.24 p.m.

Sir ALAN McLEAN: Like other Members of the House, I desire to congratulate my hon. and gallant Friend the Member for Newbury (Brigadier-General Brown) on his fortune in the Ballot, and to thank him for the use that he has made of it. This Motion asks the House to record its opinion that it is vital to the country to maintain a thriving and contented village life, together with a prosperous agriculture; and, of course, if we could restore prosperity to agriculture, there is not the slightest doubt that it would go a very long way indeed, if not the whole way, to getting a thriving and contented village life. My hon. and gallant Friend has been fortunate in that this Motion comes before the House at a time when we may be said to be in the middle of a Second Reading Debate on probably the most important agricultural Measure that has been before the House, at any rate since the War. The Corn Production Act did for the time restore a great deal of prosperity to agriculture, but we hope that the Measure which will get its Second Reading next Monday will have a far more permanent and beneficial effect.

In this House we frequently talk about the depression in agriculture but, partly no doubt from the fact that the agricultural labourer does not come within the unemployment insurance scheme, we have difficulty in comparing the depression in agriculture and among agricultural labourers with the depression in other parts of the country. I believe that, in a purely agricultural county, such as Norfolk, our position is comparable to the position in South Wales or the North-East of England. In Norfolk we share the unenviable distinction with the county of Durham of being the most highly-rated counties in the country. In a county where you have industries other than agriculture, the men and women in those industries are maintained to a great extent when they fall out of employment, first, by the benefit they get under the Unemployment Insurance Act and, secondly, by transitional payment. To that the residents in other counties contribute through the taxes, and the residents of Norfolk help to contribute to that benefit in every other county in the Kingdom. Yet in Norfolk, owing to the fact that we have got no unemployment insurance in agriculture, we have to maintain our own unemployed agricultural labourers. This additional burden is one of the reasons why the smaller industries, the shopkeeper and others, in a county like Norfolk are feeling the pinch in the way they are now.

If we are to get, in the words of the Motion, "a thriving and contented village life," we must get employment for our agricultural labourers at a time when work on the land is normally at a low ebb. Nothing can be more depressing to a man who is reaching the end of his job than to feel that there is not another job waiting for him. If we can get him to realise that the moment he finishes a particular job there is another waiting for him, it will do a great deal to restore contentment to that man. In East Anglia we have, in our sugar-beet industry, an industry which does give employment to a great many agricultural labourers at a time when they would normally be thrown out of employment on the land. The present system of help for the sugar-beet industry in this country comes to an end next year, and I hope that, in considering the future of that industry, my right hon. Friend will press on his colleagues the importance of this industry from the point of view of giving employment to people in the countryside at a time when normally they cannot get very much work.

There is another industry in the countryside which also gives work to our agricultural labourers in the winter time, the malting industry. This is not the time to go into the vexed question of the taxation of beer, but in our country maltings we have an industry that does give a great deal of employment throughout the winter season. Those country maltsters have a permanent staff all the year round, but they take on a good many men in the winter season. Owing to the depressed condition of the industry at the present time, many of these country malthouses are closed down altogether and others are employing far fewer men and for a shorter time than in the past. One of the malting houses of my constituency is employing something like a third of what it has been accustomed to employ. I had a letter a short time ago from one of these maltsters in which he said:

> "The men are engaged in malting when they are not required on the land. This was always the case in normal times—95 per cent. of the men had employment waiting for them directly they finished malting, and more often than not the farmers would approach us asking when the men, who were required for the haysel, hoeing roots, and harvest would be at liberty. The two industries dovetailed in and helped one another. The men were at work all the winter months under shelter, earning good money, and left in good fettle for land work."

If we can restore prosperity to our country malthouses, we should be doing a good deal to get that contentment in village life which we all desire to see.

I was glad to hear references to afforestation. We hear a great deal now about the futility of most of such relief work as doing to-day the work that would normally be done to-morrow, and there are difficulties in finding the kind of work that will give benefit to the country as a whole. Many jobs that could be done in the countryside cannot be done because they give benefit to an individual or a small group of individuals, but in afforestation we are giving jobs to men, the whole benefit of which will result to the nation at large. In East Anglia, in Norfolk and Suffolk, the Forestry Commission are planting something like 40,000 acres, about one half of which is in my own constituency. A tree growing singly is a very beautiful thing, but, when you have trees growing in hundreds of thousands, mile after mile of them, opinions may differ as to whether they are real beauty or not. There are advantages and disadvantages to the country in these schemes of afforestation, but, if we can use that scheme for giving employment to our people, especially in times of adversity, there is a great deal to be said for it.

In the process of economy the Forestry Commission had to cut down to some extent their schemes, but they are naturally keen to carry on as evenly as possible their normal planting of so many acres in order to have a regular continuity of plan. There is scope at the present time for the Government and the Forestry Commission getting together to see if there is not work to be done on the forestry lands which will permanently improve those lands and will at the present time give employment to men otherwise unemployed. The cost to the country will not be great because one can set off against the cost of employing those men on the land the reduction in the cost of transitional payment or public assistance. I hope my right hon. Friend will do all he can to get that kind of work done, because there again it will be giving work to men in that difficult season of the year when there is not much work on the land. For all these reasons, I desire to support very heartily the Motion now before the House.

[Sir A. McLean.]

9.34 p.m.

Mr. McKIE: I am sure the whole House is under a deep debt of gratitude to the hon. Member for Newbury (Brigadier-General Brown) for using his chance in the Debate to secure for us this valuable discussion on rural life in all its aspects. Although the hon. Member and the hon. Member for Oldham (Mr. Crossley) in his particularly picturesque address dwelt upon the minor rural industries, they will forgive me if I do not follow them in detail, because I wish to address myself particularly to the great central rural industry of agriculture. We are all hoping, we are as near being certain as we can be in this mortal life, that the efforts of the National Government will speedily result in agriculture attaining once more the position that it ought to occupy in the body politic.

There are one or two other matters which at once thrust themselves upon our attention when we think of expanding agriculture, namely, What are we going to do to provide for the housing of the additional workers who, we hope, are going to be called for and what are we going to do to provide them with the other amenities of life? A very great deal remains to be done in the villages of England, and Scotland, too, towards providing a proper system of drainage and giving them the water supplies which other more fortunate citizens possess. I hope very much that the Government will devote much of their energy in this direction. Even at present when, alas, many agricultural workers are being driven out of employment and the absence of any scheme of unemployment insurance for the rural worker prevents us knowing what the real figures of unemployment in the industry are, there is a housing shortage. What will conditions be like when in a few years' time we will hope there are more workers to be housed? The House has had under consideration within the last few weeks housing Measures with regard to both England and Scotland. I am very glad indeed that the Government saw fit to deal with the housing question in North and South Britain by two separate Measures. In doing so, they showed that they fully realise the different conditions that obtain, both in town and country, in England and Scotland. Much of the controversy that has raged around those Measures has been on the question of subsidies.

Mr. DEPUTY - SPEAKER (Captain Bourne): I must point out to the hon. Member that the Motion is somewhat limited in scope. He now seems to me to be getting far away from it.

Mr. McKIE: My point was simply the question of the provision of houses for the rural worker and the plea that has been made that adequate steps should be forthcoming owing to the withdrawal of the subsidy. In Scotland the rural worker will be in a more happy position, because the continuance of the subsidy will ensure him an adequate supply of houses. I hope the Government will devote their energies to the provision of houses for the rural workers with the same ardour that I hope they will display with regard to providing drainage systems and water supply. With regard to the agricultural industry——

Mr. DEPUTY-SPEAKER: Again, I must point out that the agricultural industry does not arise on this Motion.

Mr. McKIE: I was under the impression that it arose owing to the words "prosperity of agriculture" appearing in the Motion. More than one speaker has alluded to the Marketing Bill which we were discussing only two days ago.

Notice taken that 40 Members were not present: House counted, and 40 Members being present——

Mr. McKIE: The attitude of the farming community towards the Government is not that they are dissatisfied that the Government have done too much. With regard to what legislation has already been undertaken towards resuscitating agriculture, pleas are repeatedly made from the benches below me that nothing has really been done to benefit the farmers, that what has been done would have been much better left undone, and that those engaged in agriculture will find that their last state is worst than their first. I would warn hon. Members that when they make such statements they are in no way meeting the requirements of the farmers. I warn them also that when they embark upon such a crusade they will be sowing the seeds of a terrible harvest whenever the next General Election comes, at all events, in the rural constituencies. It is all very well in this House to try and score debating points, and to say that Ottawa, for instance, did nothing for the farmers. That is merely one side of the picture. It is begging the question and is providing no alternative whatever. The farming community, especially in Scotland, are far too shrewd and long-headed to be beguiled by such specious pleas. It is not that Ottawa or anything else went too far. The farming community still think that matters have not been carried far enough. In view of what the right hon. and gallant Gentleman has said on more than one occasion recently, the farmers are beginning to feel more satisfied and comfortable with regard to the future. The Government have nothing to fear from action, but they will have everything to dread from delay.

9.47 p.m.

Mr. RHYS: We must be grateful to my hon. and gallant Friend the Member for Newbury (Brigadier-General Brown) for introducing this Motion and providing an opportunity for this discussion. There has been a very serious drop in the number of children attending many of the schools in the countryside of England, and it is a very close indication of the decay which is going on, not only in the agricultural industry but in the ancillary industries grouped around it. I wish to draw the attention of the right hon. and gallant Gentleman to two or three points in the hope that he may bear them in mind in future. Unemployment, unfortunately, is growing in the villages, not only among the agricultural labourers, but among the community who act as gardeners and grooms. Although it is perhaps not entirely a question for the Department of the Minister, I hope that he will use his influence to secure a reduction of taxation—particularly of Death Duties—which is draining the countryside of its very lifeblood. It is easy enough to sneer and laugh at that kind of remark, but the fact remains that agriculture is having its lifeblood drained away, and the men who usually find employment in gardens and in stables are finding it more and more difficult to support their wives and families.

Another industry which is suffering very severely along the Surrey-Sussex border and which used to be a very prosperous one, is that which was referred to by my hon. and gallant Friend, namely, the underwood industry. In days gone by many farmers and estates made a considerable profit every year from the sale of their underwood, particularly for the purpose of fencing, and, in some districts, for hop-poles. The best of the wood was usually sold for hop-poles, and to some extent this still goes on. The fencing industry, however, is very nearly dead owing to foreign competition. These may be small points, but I am sure that hon. Members will realise that 10 or 12 men out of work in a small village constitutes a considerable proportion of the population, and to the particular village it means a great deal. There is a large number of small country brickfields dotted about the country, and I hope that the housing policy of the Government will have the desired effect of re-employing men who are now being stood off in those small brickfields.

I urge the Minister to bear in mind the proposals which have so far been put forward, but they do not really touch the problem of the agricultural labourer's cottage. The low wage of the agricultural labourer has in the past been in some measure compensated for by the low rent at which he has been able to occupy his cottage. If my right hon. and gallant Friend can urge his colleague the Minister of Health to take a further step forward with regard to the provision of cottages for agricultural labourers, it will have a very desirable effect upon employment in the villages near the brickfields. These two or three points which I was anxious to raise appear to be very small compared with the importance of the Debate to which we have listened this afternoon, but, after all, the lives of the individuals who live in the countryside are just as important to them as our lives are to us. We ought not to lose any opportunity of bringing those questions to the fore whenever we have such a splendid opportunity as that which has been provided for us this evening.

[Mr. Rhys.]

9.52 p.m.

Mr. RAIKES: I should like to congratulate my hon. and gallant Friend the Member for Newbury (Brigadier-General Brown) upon bringing this Motion forward at a singularly appropriate time when we have the Agricultural Marketing Bill being steered through the House of Commons by my right hon. and gallant Friend. If there is one thing which is certain it is that rural industry cannot possibly revive until agriculture itself is placed upon a satisfactory and sound basis. The whole weakness and difficulty of agriculture in the past few years has been that there has been no incentive whatever for agriculture to reorganise, simply because there has been no security for the home market nad for agriculture as a whole. Now, at any rate, we are facing a new situation, which by helping agriculture will help all those rural industries which are dependent upon the main branch. Agriculture will realise when my right hon. and gallant Friend has had his way and in a comparatively short time, that it can obtain some security provided it is reorganised.

The whole of the village communities and rural industries are dependent upon one thing, namely, that of a flourishing organised agriculture. It is not simply a question of the people who are actually at work in agriculture itself. It goes beyond that and embraces many sidelines of the agricultural industry in which men secure employment when agriculture is prospering. These include local veterinary services, blacksmiths, and trappers, who when things are prosperous are able to get employment and be their own masters, but who when, on the other hand, agriculture is fading and dying simply drift away and are lost. All their knowledge is lost, and the small individualism which they represent goes too.

Beyond those local trades there is the advantage to what I think is one of the best sides of village life, namely, the work that exists for the Jack-of-all-trades. I mean the man who is not directly concerned with any particular branch of agriculture, but who may, with the aid of his wife, keep the village grocery store, He ekes things out a little further by usually doing a certain amount of slaughter for local farmers, perhaps keeps a few poultry, possibly a cow or two, or a pig or two, and at the same time very likely keeps ferrets, which he also loans out at a price either to neighbouring farmers or to poachers, who also need those animals. That is a useful function, and he is a man of some individualism. He is a man who works for himself; he is his own master, and one of the troubles of the whole situation to-day, throughout all this country, is that agriculture is over-industrialised, and there are not enough small men able to work their own job and able to make use of their own gifts.

Beyond him you have one thing which I think we should face. So far as mixed farming advances, it helps rural industries—all those people who lie, so to speak, in the wake of successful agriculture. But we ought to be careful not to turn our minds too much in one direction, which we have been inclined to emphasise of late: that of more cereal farming. On cereals alone you get the same danger of complete industrialisation and mechanisation that is one of the troubles of the towns. The danger in the cereal side of agriculture is that you may get away from individualism. You may gradually denude your land of men by means of mechanised inventions; you may, in fact, kill those very virtues which are the chief reasons why agriculture is still the basic industry and the greatest industry of the land. I say, quite frankly, that I am afraid of that sort of mechanised, industrialised capitalism, whether it is a capitalism of the individual or simply a capitalism of the State. It is more and more making our own people throughout this country cogs in a great machine, without individualism and without the opportunity to develop their own talents, which, after all, in the long run make or mar a nation. Rural industry, so far as it has been developed on the small lines that I have indicated, can at any rate give men a chance of getting out of the mere common rut.

There are two further points on which I should like to say a word in support of my hon. and gallant Friend. My hon. Friend the Member for Guildford (Mr. Rhys) raised a question concerning Death Duties. If you are going to have Death Duties at all, I submit to my right hon. and gallant Friend that in the long run Death Duties taken from the land ought to be put back on the land and not simply frittered away on things outside. There is some argument for taking money out of capital if it goes back, in a sense, into capital. If Death Duties on the land were transferred back into schemes of forestry, electricity or drainage, they would not simply mean, as they mean to-day, the killing of capital and the still further weakening of a very great industry.

Beyond that there is the question of banking. More harm has been done to agriculture as a whole by irresponsible loans from banks than, perhaps, by anything else. Agriculture for nearly 100 years has been gradually getting into the hands of the rentier class. Farmers have had too much credit, and too much credit is quite as big a danger as too little credit. I should like to see the re-establishment of land banks, so far as it could be done, on the lines of the old county banks, which have some knowledge of the individual's security, the individual position of the individual man. They can give help in a worthy case and can judge a case on its merits, and at the same time they are not working simply to pile mortgage upon mortgage until in the long run they ruin the producer. The future of this country lies with the producer. You must, so far as you can, make the producer rather than the distributor or any class of rentiers the real factor upon which to concentrate and for which to find employment.

My final criticism is that in our rural education we tend far too much to allow townsmen to teach our boys and girls mere useless town stuff. You ought to have more countrymen as teachers in our village schools; you ought to give more practical rural information and teaching to those boys and girls. I suppose it is the Liberal party—who are mainly townsmen—who have played the chief part and done the most work in this movement. If you can be a little less dogmatic, if you can give a little bit more of real practical education to your village and agricultural children, you will be helping the drift back to the countryside. Although I differ from my friends of the Labour party, I believe that the Labour party are going to realise the value of the return to the land. In fact, it has been asserted that we must, in this country and in foreign countries, have a definite scheme of bringing men back, of stabilising the home markets, rather encouraging people to go in for agriculture and to work out their talents within that vast industry than letting them drift away and join the mechanised millions who are displaced time after time and queue up at the street corner and increase and increase. Until you get back to the land you are, day in and day out, weakening the virility of your country and wasting every opportunity of pulling it round to a strong and lasting state. You have to secure your home markets; you have to encourage the small man, to encourage the subsidiary industries that touch on agriculture. I venture to say that my hon. and gallant Friend's Motion to-night has at any rate ventilated a great and important problem, and I look forward, old-fashioned Tory as I am, to some support and some help from my friends on the Socialist side and on the Liberal side to the Tories in bringing these schemes forward.

10.4 p.m.

Mr. ATKINSON: I only rise to put in a plea to the Government to encourage and support the County Development Associations. They do more than any other body to encourage rural industries. There are several in existence, and my own county of Cheshire has an excellent one. It is the duty of the Government to do their best to help these associations. It is very important to get every urban authority and every district authority interested in them, and to support them financially. I suppose there is no more essentially rural industry than pig production, and that there is no county more fitted for the production of pigs than Cheshire; yet there is not a bacon factory in that county. We could produce very good cheese, but the marketing arrangements are limited, and there is no advertising at all. The association hopes to do something for those industries. That is merely an illustration of the way in which these associations help; many others could be given by Members in connection with their own counties. I should like to urge the Government, among the steps that this Motion urges it to take, to assist the formation of these associations, and I should like to urge hon. Members to do their best to encourage the local authorities in their constituencies to join these associations. It is only by organised effort that these industries will be assisted.

[Mr. Atkinson.]

10.5 p.m.

Dr. O'DONOVAN: The Motion refers to the need of a contented village life, and in order to secure that asks for the assistance of the Minister of Agriculture and that His Majesty's Government should take every possible step. Therefore, this is a very wide Motion. The hon. Member for South-East Essex (Mr. Raikes) pointed out that we must take every care of the small man. But we must first of all produce the small man. Nothing has been more regrettable than to see in the Press the appreciative paragraphs referring to the fact that many of the villages of England were really museums of the ancient, consisting of small cottages, housing men and women 70, 80 and 90 years of age. If village life and village rural industries are to prosper and progress there must be a fostering care on the part of the Government of the village labourer's wife. There can be nothing more disheartening than for a village labourer's wife to come to London and see the lavish social services at the disposal of her sister in London, and to compare that with the impoverished social services at the disposal of the village labourer's wife.

You can see arising in every city expensive buildings, staffed by an expensive body of experts, for maternity and sickness, but in the country village you have the country doctor who suffers in contrast with the panel doctor in the town. You have the village midwife working under great difficulties, whose return hardly pays for her existence. To ask village life to prosper under these conditions is to ask a lot, and I am sure that His Majesty's Government must give a care to the return to the country of some of the money they take from the country in the form of social services comparable to those received by town dwellers. It may be difficult, but difficult problems should be the prize of good administration. If village life is to prosper there must be a complete culture; it must not be a half life. I agree that the veterinary surgeon can contribute to village culture, but you must have a complete civilisation; and in addition to the village parson you must have a first-class village teacher and parish doctor, and, I think, a squire. There must be leaders in the social, medical, clerical and teaching world, and then civilisation in the country will be complete, and able to stand against the false blandishments of town life. When men decay in the villages the country cannot prosper. I shall support the terms of the Motion which asks His Majesty's Government to give a care to village rural life.

10.10 p.m.

The MINISTER of AGRICULTURE (Major Elliot): I am sure that the House will realise that in the years which have passed since the hon. and gallant Member first brought forward this Motion that the subject has matured and ripened; and that the count which brought that Motion to an untimely end has served on this occasion to ensure a more continuous audience, which has throughout the evening displayed a remarkable ingenuity in the variety of the subjects it has found possible to raise under this head. It is true that the hon. Member for Galloway (Mr. McKie) was debarred by the Chair from entering into a discussion of the building industry, and I could see him chafing against the restraints of order which kept him from making the speech which we should have expected from him; but there is quite enough in the Motion, and in the speeches which have been made, to give us plenty of food for thought. It is clear that the House is more and more anxious about the position not merely of agriculture itself, but about the focal points of civilisation, the villages and the industries which the villages support.

It is true, I think, that mechanised agriculture, producing quite as much in the way of tons of meat and butter and cheese as agriculture does at present, may be organised in such a way that it would not be a great contribution to the strength of the nation: indeed the reverse. There is a more ancient kind of life than to hear a whistle blown at six o'clock in the morning, calling everybody to work. There is a more ancient and honourable way of existence which gives a close contact of the man with his job, and with the fruits of his job; knowing where they are to go and working well because it will be appreciated by the people who are personal friends of his own and whose good will he desires to secure and maintain. That is essentially the link which it is desired to have between village industries and the users of village industries; and that is the object which for years past His Majesty's Government have done their best to secure and extend.

The work of the Rural Industries Bureau has been of the greatest service to village industries during a time when village industries were not as highly thought of in the councils of the nation as they are to-day. I should like to pay my tribute to Mr. Vaughan Nash who both at the development commission and at the Rural Industries Bureau worked whole-heartedly and enthusiastically. Until his lamented death he did more than any single man towards keeping alive the spirit of village industries, to which we are all looking forward to a much greater development. The work of the Rural Industries Bureau and the Rural Community Councils has been referred to, but there was one aspect which, oddly enough, has not been mentioned, and that is the emphasis which the Rural Industries Bureau has laid upon the blacksmith and the smith as craftsmen whom the village finds impossible to dispense with.

The danger of the village losing the smith is a real danger indeed. Horse traction, in spite of everything, is still a live factor in our countryside, and I think it is possible that horse traction will in this country, as in many other countries, be able even on an economic basis to compete and perhaps surpass mechanised traction. But not without the blacksmith, not without the smith. I was reading a book written by a nephew of the President of the Board of Trade, who, after a career as a young man in the Flying Corps and other services, settled down as a village blacksmith, but who in addition to being a good blacksmith was able to write a very useful and entertaining book about it. I think it is an example of what we hope to find increasingly in the future, that people will devote themselves to labour not merely for the purpose of making money out of it, but because they realise that a mode of life is as valuable a thing as a pocketful of money, and that it is possible that our factories have overdone the necessity for toil from morning to night for the purpose of filling a big pay envelope at the end of the week. We have certainly got a mode of life which is a much less attractive one than that of the village worker who is in an industry small enough for him really to feel a sense of possession in the work and in the products of his labour.

My hon. and gallant Friend the Member for Dumbartonshire (Commander Cochrane) brought out a note in a very short but extremely interesting speech—the remarkable figure that there were in this country at the last Census of Production no fewer than 90,000 factories employing fewer than 35 men each. As he truly said, there was no particular reason why those factories, or a great many of them, should not be in smaller centres of population rather than in larger. It may be that the dovetailing of winter work with summer work, of work on the land with work in the shop or factory of some kind, to which other speakers have referred, notably, the hon. and gallant Member for South-West Norfolk (Sir A. McLean), can be found not merely in the older industries but in the new industries which are growing up.

Henry Ford has put it forward as his ideal that all men should be in the country, and that they should work on the manufacture of parts, which should subsequently be assembled in a larger central depot, and that a considerable proportion of every factory worker's time should be devoted to work on the land. That American dovetailing does not always work out so satisfactorily when brought to the test of actual experience, but it is at any rate interesting to note that one of the oldest of rural industries, the malting industry, draws its strength from precisely that dovetailing which in a more modern form has appealed to the most modern of men, the American millionaire, Henry Ford.

It is possible that we, in looking at the decay of certain rural industries, neglect the rise of certain other rural industries. To-day there are some rural developments which are favourable to life in the countryside and in the village, as against developments which 25 years ago were unfavourable. I do not quote the motor omnibus as an unfavourable factor in village life; I should quote it as a favourable factor. It removes the sense of isolation, by making the rural dweller feel that he, or rather she, can get into the town and return again to the country. That makes it more easy for people to remain in the village. It is not that one can get out of a place that upsets one, but the feeling that one cannot. If one feels that one can leave a place, or a man's company, at any moment, one is more content to stay in a place.

[Major Elliot.]

The wireless has also done a great deal to make people contented with village life. They can listen-in to the words of the great ones of the land and come to the conclusion that those words are not any more intelligent than what they could hear at the blacksmith's or the cobbler's shop while, in the case of the wireless, they have not the great fun of butting in and putting their own side of the case. I am not at all sure that even the cinema has not its good side as well as its bad side in this respect. The dweller in the countryside can see exactly the same show as the town dweller. I do not think that those shows are always of the sort that any of us particularly admire or value but at any rate the man or woman in the country has exactly the same chance of seeing "Shanghai Express" for instance, as the town dweller. I do not say that "Shanghai Express" is the sort of thing on which we should wish either the town or country dweller to concentrate too much. At all events, if they want a fairy story, there is a fairy story —one which has, apparently, no relation to real life whatever. The dweller in the country can see it and say, "If that is the sort of thing that they get in London and the big towns we might just as well go out and look at the sunset which is much better entertainment and has the advantage of being free."

Here, then, are features which are favourable to rural life, but all these are useless unless we have the foundation of an economically sound rural life. I shall not dilate upon that point because we have other Measures and other opportunities for bringing that about, but I heartily sympathise with the expression of opinion which has come from speaker after speaker, that, without a sound economic life, it is no use trying to make a synthetic "arty and crafty" sort of rural existence, backed up by subsidies. I appreciate the words of my hon. Friend the Member for Mile End (Dr. O'Donovan), who pointed out the necessity that the services which are available for the town dweller should, to some extent, be available for the country dweller also. That point was stressed by other speakers—it was one of the points got in by the hon. Member for Galloway before he was called to order—particularly with reference to water supply. The kind of village life that we all desire must not be based upon the slavery of the housewife. Efforts must be made to see that the rural housewife has access to sources of clean water, and that when she is bearing children she has the same services as those afforded to her sisters in the towns and living nearer to the great centres of medical research and education.

This Debate has been marked by many interesting speeches and by a particularly interesting speech from the hon. Member for Hereford (Mr. J. P. L. Thomas). He brought forward several points which will certainly receive the attention both of myself and the Department. His suggestion that it may be desirable to look again, not merely into the organisation of existing industries but the possible foundation of new industries, is worthy of attention at the present time. In the attempt to rebuild rural life in a near-by country, in Ireland, when Lord Balfour took up his work as Chief Secretary, one of his chief efforts was to investigate through the Congested Districts Board the possibility of new industries, and to cooperate with the inhabitants and with people willing to take some leadership in the question, to see whether new industries could be set up in the congested districts of rural Ireland. That work met with a great deal of success by not trying to impose some cast-iron structure upon the whole industry, but by realising that only by individual effort, by picking out here and there where a seed was likely to grow was it possible for an efficient rural industry to be started. The carpet industry and other industries in Ireland owe their inception to the stimulus given through the Congested Districts Board when we were attempting to solve the problem of the rural life in another country. Let us hope it will be possible to take some lessons which we learned when working on the rural life of another country and apply them when we are trying, as we are here, to develop our own. Another point which was made by several speakers, and in particular by the hon. Member for Mid-Bedfordshire (Mr. Lennox-Boyd) was that the school was a key point in rural life and that the bias given one way or the other in the school might be a factor of overwhelming importance in the subsequent attitude of mind of the scholars towards the whole question of existence in the country or in the town. One or two speakers have pleaded for a greater education in practical agriculture, notably my hon. Friend the Member for South East Essex (Mr. Raikes). I am not quite certain—I am not here speaking as Minister of Education, although we have the great advantage of a Minister of Education who has been himself a Minister of Agriculture and has sympathies with the countryside as large as any man in Parliament to-day—whether the ideal of education in agriculture or of education in rural life is the better, because education in agriculture may have the effect of most of our education, that is to say, filling one with an enduring disgust of the subject in which one is educated, and I should be most unwilling to see the land and agriculture obtain the same wholehearted dislike in later years by the scholar that the great dramatist Shakespeare does when one has been driven through his plays as a school subject for the purpose of passing examinations.

It is again noteworthy that the Danes, when they started on their efforts to recreate rural life, went for a cultural, not an agricultural, education. I am not dogmatising on this, but merely contributing my part to a Debate which has been singularly fruitful in the pooling of ideas, and I merely ask my hon. and hon. and gallant Friends who have spoken to consider whether in fact the best of all solutions would not be the highly educated man who comes to agriculture or to rural life with the desire to make a success of it, believing that, after trying other things and having all the resources of civilisation open to him, rural life is the best thing he can possibly take up and the soundest way of life for a really rational man to engage upon. These things, of course, take one a little far from what one might call the sealed pattern of a rural industries Debate. I am sure that at the present time we have to go a little wider than these close examinations if we are to get down to the real recreation or revival of rural life which we all desire.

I think the success, which has been also referred to in this Debate, of the Women's Institutes has done as much as any single factor towards the recreation of rural life. They did not stop simply with agricultural education. It is true that in many cases they have developed into rural handicrafts in a most admirable and praiseworthy fashion. I had an opportunity of visiting an exhibition of handicrafts which the Women's Institutes recently had. It included needlework, basket-making, leather work and the making of things which one does not immediately associate with women's activities, such as carpentry and even iron-work. All these things were put forward in a most interesting exhibition. That started from working at community life and desiring to obtain the feeling that people were not merely isolated units in a village community, but a group of people who were working together and living in the country, and intended to go on living in the country because that was where their lot was cast and they had no desire to depart from it. I think that the rural community councils which have been spoken of to-night are striving to do and will more and more take on important work. They are off-shoots of the National Council of Social Service, which has recently been asked by the Government to undertake important duties, and which, I think, is performing them to the satisfaction of all.

In accepting this Motion we do desire not merely, as the Mover and Seconder said, to insert it in a pigeon-hole and see that it is not again taken out except for the purpose of dusting it some years hence. The encouragement of rural industries and the maintenance of a pride in village life are fundamental to the policy of the Government. We are making a start with the great industry of agriculture. These other industries are ancillary to the industry of agriculture.

[Major Elliot.]

It may be that agriculture itself cannot reach its full stature except with the assistance of these odd outlying industries of which both my hon. and gallant Friend the Member for South-West Norfolk and my hon. and gallant Friend the Member for Dumbartonshire have spoken to-night. Let us always remember that rural industries are a part of the life of Great Britain as a whole. Do not let us segregate town and country. As so many speakers have said to-night, we have too much developed the life in the towns but the people there are all Scots, English, Irish or Welshmen, and they are not very far away from the country; they are not many generations removed from it. If you can make life in the country heathy, tolerable and cultured, we shall find our people returning there. The queues at the Employment Exchanges are the strongest propaganda for the rural life. The people of this country are not fools, and are looking at the queues and saying, "If this is the end of factory life, perhaps our forefathers who stayed in the villages were wiser men than their sons who went into the towns."

10.35 p.m.

Mr. T. WILLIAMS: If only for the purpose of pleasing the hon. and gallant Member for Newbury (Brigadier-General Clifton Brown) I rise just to say that we offer no opposition to the Motion which he so ably submitted to the House. We are rather sorry to have to intervene for one moment in what has been a very pleasant afternoon since 7.30. In 10 years I have never seen a more happy family party in the House of Commons than we have had during the last four hours. A mutual admiration society would perhaps better describe the position. How the Minister felt when congratulations were coming in upon him from North, South, East and West I really do not know. I think the right hon. Gentleman was correct if he felt apprehensive. In any case the Motion has provided an opportunity for a very varied discussion on rural life, which has been pleasing, helpful and constructive. Sometimes I felt that we had more representatives of Gandhi in this House than we had hitherto thought. Many hon. Members want to go back to the state of Gandhi, to the hand loom and the many towels round the body, and so forth. I think the hon. and gallant Member for Dumbartonshire (Commander Cochrane) was quite correct when he said of somebody that he was thinking of to-morrow while looking at yesterday. That was a fairly accurate description. Nevertheless, many of these rural industries which have died out are a distinct loss to this nation, and could circumstances be created under which they could be restored, even though they employed only two or three men in a village, it would be of distinct advantage not only to village life but to the health and the social life of the nation as a whole.

One thing dawns upon us in listening to the long lament over the depopulation of the countryside—that the lopsided development from which this nation is now suffering has at long last brought many rural Members, and even the hon. and gallant Member who introduced this Motion, to a stage in their development where they have at least begun to realise that the depopulation of the countryside is not of value to the State. It is rather a pity that the hon. and gallant Member should not have thought of this 30 or 40 years ago, for he must have known then, as we all know now, that it was because profits in industrial life were so easy that the countryside, village life and all those glorious things to which he referred were sadly and seriously neglected. We are suffering the consequences to-day. Social life and social value were ignored for the material life which was so easily obtainable in a world of expanding markets. Now, as the hon. Member below the Gangway who had the misfortune to take an uncomfortable seat said, we have lost a great deal of our social life and our social values, through having paid too little attention to the production of food and the development of village industries. We paid more attention to the towns and the profits which were so easily obtainable therefrom on an expanding market than we paid to the development of a strong, healthy, vigorous race in the country.

I would say to hon. Gentlemen who want to restore large numbers of people to country life that they must take the hint of the hon. Member for Mile End (Dr. O'Donovan), who suggested that we cannot expect people to leave the social life of the town for the countryside until the services in the country are almost equivalent to the services in the town. We cannot expect people to migrate from the towns, where they have electricity, water, sanitation and all the other social services, unless the countryside is similarly served. That becomes a question of money and of interest. Hon. Gentlemen who want the restoration of a happy, vigorous country life may think out how we can give our village population a good water supply and a good supply of electric light or gas, and if we do that the chances are that we shall be able to persuade many of those 97,000 factories employing 25 persons or less, to go out into the villages, where the populations would be sufficiently large to make a village institute or a women's institute a live entity and of real value in the social life of the country.

I was rather interested to hear the suggestion of the hon. Member for Mid-Bedfordshire when he appealed to the Minister to hand on some sort of recommendation to the Import Duties Advisory Committee for the increase of the duty upon baskets. I was equally interested to hear the hon. Member for Hereford who replied to the hon. Member for Mid-Bedfordshire. It happens that those two hon. Members represent two different phases of agriculture, and that a heavy duty upon imported baskets, or upon the raw material, would obviously suit the hon. Member for Mid-Bedfordshire, while it would not suit the hon. Member for Hereford. What is one man's meat is the other fellow's poison. I suggest to the hon. Gentlemen that they argue the matter outside the Chamber, and that they give the Minister the benefit of their conclusions after a very healthy debate. If they rely, as the hon. Member for Hereford suggested, wholly and solely upon Protection, I am sure that they will not get even the support of the Minister. Protection is not a policy; it is a means of escape from producing a policy.

To re-establish a happy, vigorous, contented village life we have to do something much more than merely provide protection for agriculture. The hon. Gentleman who introduced this Motion suggested that the landowners' associations of this country, who were now doing great things in the production of timber and were organising themselves efficiently for the purpose of selling that timber, wanted protection and assistance from the Import Duties Advisory Committee. I hope that the right hon. Gentleman and the Committee will remember that there are many other industries in this country that are not very prosperous, and that to impose a duty upon timber—such as, for instance, upon pit-props—would hit very heavily such already sorely depressed industries as the mining industry.

We welcome the Motion. We think that the intention and the purpose of it, apart from the protective suggestions that have been made, have been of real value. We are glad to note the development in the education of hon. and right hon. Gentlemen opposite. We are pleased to note that in 1933 they recognise that the lop-sidedness of things has become a positive danger to the State. If this Debate finds its way into the minds of those responsible at the Ministry of Agriculture and in other Government Departments, and they will set themselves the duty of trying to re-arrange our economic life, giving the countryside a much better chance than it has had in the past without imposing a heavy burden upon the rest of the community, I, and I believe my party, will think that this Debate has been useful.

10.45 p.m.

Mr. GLOSSOP: I intervene for a few moments because I think that the subject of this Motion is bound up entirely with the Government's policy as regards the restoration of prosperity to agriculture. For years this House and the people of this country, if not directly, have indirectly sneered at those who have to make their living out of the land. There has been among the masses of the people of this country during the last century an atmosphere that the people who live on the land are inferior, that they are not of such great intelligence as those who live in the towns. In view of the Government's policy with regard to agriculture at the present time, it is essential to let the country people know that at least we realise that those who live in these rural areas of our great country are the backbone, and will largely be the salvation, of the country in the future.

I was delighted to hear the Minister remark on the value of the wireless. It has done and is doing a great deal towards developing the rural mind and making the rural people conscious of their own position and importance in the make-up of the country. There has been in the past a feeling among country people that, because they speak with a certain type of dialect, they were uneducated, but I think that the British Broadcasting Corporation, in broadcasting, as they have from time to time, plays in the dialect of different parts of the country, have made those people realise that there is something real and vital behind their dialect and customs in their own local villages.

[Mr. Glossop.]

The Minister referred to the village smith and the saddler. I think that my right hon. Friend has only come to the rescue just in time, because we have seen during the last 10 years almost the extinction of the real village smith and the real country saddler. Those of us who have farms of our own know the difficulty that there is now in getting good saddlery work done, because so many of the saddlers have gone out of business. That has not been because the saddler or the blacksmith did not make excellent articles, but because, owing to the depression which has pervaded the agricultural industry, farmers and others have been compelled to buy agricultural implements and saddlery made in the factory, which are not nearly as good as those made by the local smith or the local saddler. Only on Monday, on my own farm, I had an illustration of the superior work of the village smith as compared with the work of a large manufacturing foundry. I was following a pair of harrows which had not had their teeth reset since 1926, and yet to-day those teeth are almost as sharp as they were some seven years ago. That particular set of harrows was made by the village blacksmith, at a larger cost, I admit, than that at which I could have bought them from a foundry, but the harrows made in the local smithy were of a much more durable quality than those which could be bought elsewhere. While the Minister has recognised the importance of the village smith and the village saddler, his bold lead with regard to the development of agriculture has only just come in time, if in time, to save those two important factors in rural life.

I want to refer to another rural industry which I think is a very important one, namely, the bee-keeping industry. Hon. Members may know that bees are good for rheumatism. Bees kept on a farm or market garden are of the utmost importance, not only for bringing in a small revenue from the sale of honey, but for the fertilisation of flowers and fruit. The bee industry, capable as it is of very large development, has been very much neglected in the past. There has been little or no encouragement to the man who desires to keep his apiary free from disease. He often finds that although he fumigates his hives and keeps his stock in a really healthy condition, he finds perhaps that his neighbour half-a-mile away who is losing bees as a result of Isle of Wight disease, has never taken even the trouble to fumigate his hives or close the shutters in front of the hives. Small in the aggregate as is the importance of the bee industry, it is one which is capable of considerable expansion. One factor which is playing an important part in developing the minds of the rural workers and people who live in the villages is the libraries introduced by the county councils, and which enable the people of the villages to read really good books and novels. I cannot think of any better way of making the rural people appreciate their position and their importance in the country and realise what an enormous tradition there is behind the agricultural people of this country than that they should perhaps take from the shelves of these libraries a book called "Roots," dealing with a Yorkshire agricultural family, a book which, even in these difficult times, should stimulate every person engaged on the soil.

In conclusion, I want to deal with one point touched upon by the hon. and gallant Member for Newbury (Brigadier-General Clifton Brown) and susequent speakers, the question of education in our rural schools. I do think we might do something to try to interest the children at our rural schools in some of the farm machinery which we hope they will be able to utilise and work alongside when they leave school. I am not one who is opposed to the money which this country is spending on education. I am concerned that we should spend it to the best possible advantage of the individual and the country as a whole. I cannot help thinking, however, that Morris dances and painting are of little use to the potential farm labourer and that it would improve his mind very much better if he was taught the parts of a plough and of various other agricultural implements I do think the county councils and education committees should encourage those school masters and school mistresses who desire to instruct their pupils in regard to practical agriculture during the years when they are at school. At the present time there is an enormous difficulty for the enterprising schoolmaster to get permission from the education authority to take his pupils, perhaps, over some neighbouring farm with a good deal of up-to-date machinery. I do hope the Minister will communicate with his right hon. Friend the Minister of Education to see if it is not possible for some encouragement to be given to schools to provide facilities to schools to go round farms in their neighbourhood.

I cannot help thinking that we are bound from an economic point of view to increase settlement on the land in this country. I believe that in the next year or two, when the policy of the Minister with regard to agriculture has had time to fructify, it will be possible for many more people to be occupied on the land. I believe that the increased settlement that we hope to see will be largely the small man, the smallholder, and I believe these persons must be adaptable to their jobs. However hard they work, however profitable the Minister can succeed in making their industry, it will be impossible for them to employ highly skilled workmen in the same way that the large farmer does. The smallholder, to make a success, must be able to do carpentry and repairs to farm machinery himself. If he has to start by getting outside labour, often at trade union rates, it will be impossible for him to carry on. For that reason, I stress that, when the Government are making everything possible for a large resettlement of people on the land, we should at the same time educate the rising generation in such a way that they will be able to make the fullest use of the opportunities that will be provided for them. I welcome the statement of the Minister and the importance that he attaches to the Motion.

Question put, and agreed to.

Resolved,

"That this House is of opinion that the encouragement of rural industries and the maintenance of a thriving and contented village life, together with a prosperous agriculture, are vital to this country, and urges His Majesty's Government to take every possible step in this direction."

COMPANIES ACT, 1929.

Sir ARTHUR MICHAEL SAMUEL: I beg to move,

"That this House, having been made aware of the losses sustained in recent years by private persons who have invested their savings in concerns organised under limited liability, requests the Government to set up a departmental committee to examine the provisions of the Companies Act, 1929, with a view to amending that Act so that in future the public may be protected against unscrupulous persons."

As the House is aware, the whole country has been shocked, at the wholesale collapse of companies a year or two ago. I move this Motion in order that the President of the Board of Trade may think fit, not to try to find reasons why he should not act but to find reasons why he should act. I do not know why there should be any opposition to the proposal that we should have a Departmental Committee to look into the matter. I have here a copy of the recognised organ of the chartered accountants which says:

"The accounting profession is strongly in favour of reforming company law on the ground that existing legislation has proved itself to be inadequate."

If we look forward to recovery in trade, it is necessary, as so many undertakings will be working under limited liability, that there shall be no more opportunity for unscrupulous persons to defraud the public as in the past. If the Board of Trade does not take some action, the public will hold it gravely to blame. I have heard dozens of questions put pointing out the very defects which we ask to have amended.

Mr. ALBERY: I beg to second the Motion.

It being Eleven of the Clock, the Debate stood adjourned.

The Orders of the Day were read, and postponed.

ADJOURNMENT.

Resolved, "That this House do now adjourn."—[Sir F. Thomson.]

Adjourned accordingly at One Minute after Eleven o'Clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Thursday, 16th March, 1933.

The House met at a Quarter before Three of the Clock, Mr. SPEAKER in the Chair.

ORAL ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS.

FLAX AND HEMP TRADE (WAGES).

1. Colonel GOODMAN asked the Minister of Labour whether he will give the House information as to the decisions arrived at by the flax and hemp trade board, Great Britain, with regard to the proposal to revise the rates of wages in the flax and hemp industry; what are the new rates decided upon; and by what sums will the new hourly and piece-work rates differ from those previously in operation for the various classes of workers?

The MINISTER of LABOUR (Sir Henry Betterton): My hon. Friend will find full information as to the proposed new minimum rates of wages in the flax and hemp trade in the statutory notice of their proposals issued by the trade board, of which I am sending him a copy.

UNEMPLOYMENT.

GOVERNMENT POLICY (WAGE SUBSIDY).

2. Captain FULLER asked the Minister of Labour if, in view of the successful efforts of the town council of Guildford in providing work for wages schemes, with a consequent saving to the Exchequer, he will state the difficulties which prevent the use of transitional payments to assist such schemes; and if his Department is considering how they can be overcome?

Sir H. BETTERTON: I would refer my hon. and gallant Friend to the reply which I gave on 13th March to the hon. Member for Deritend (Mr. Crooke) with regard to the proposals, of which a number have been suggested to me, for using unemployment pay as a subsidy to wages.

Captain FULLER: May I ask the right hon. Gentleman if this question is actually under earnest consideration?

Sir H. BETTERTON: It is not only under active, but under daily consideration.

TRANSITIONAL PAYMENTS.

3. Mr. BATEY asked the Minister of Labour if he is aware that the commissioners in the county of Durham are extending their operations where miners are living in colliery houses and reducing supplementary benefit on the grounds that they are not paying rent; and what action he proposes to take?

Sir H. BETTERTON: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to a similar question on 23rd February.

Mr. BATEY: Has the Minister not given any re-consideration to the matter since then?

Sir H. BETTERTON: I think that that supplementary question is one which has been asked and answered before, and that the statement was made that it was a matter within the discretion of the commissioners, who are, no doubt, prepared to take all the circumstances into account.

4. Mr. BATEY asked the Minister of Labour the number of cases where supplementary benefit has been reduced and the number abolished up to the latest available date in the county of Durham; and the total amount of money saved and the total cost of the commissioners and their staff since the 1st December, 1932?

Sir H. BETTERTON: The latest available figures of determinations as to need given by the commissioners in Durham County for the period since their appointment were given in reply to a similar question by the hon. Member on 23rd February. It is estimated that the expenditure on transitional payments during the period from the beginning of December, 1932, up to 4th February, 1933, was about £50,000 less than if all the determinations current during the period had been given by the public assistance committee in accordance with their practice prior to December. The total cost of the commissioners and their staff from 1st December, 1932, to 31st January, 1933, was about £9,350 in addition to non-recurrent charges amounting to £2,085.

Mr. BATEY: Does the Minister remember that the former figures were only up to 7th February, and that it is now 16th March; and surely it is possible to give another month's figures?

Sir H. BETTERTON: I have made inquiries on that point. I am told that these figures are taken out every month, but we have not yet got later figures than those which I have given. I am expecting them every day, and the moment I get them I shall be willing to inform the hon. Member of them.

Mr. BATEY: I will put down the question next week.

5. Mr. BATEY asked the Minister of Labour whether, in view of recent cases where the county of Durham Commissioners have reduced transitional payments to the extent of the whole of the applicant's War pension (instead of the 50 per cent. allowed by the Act) or by a large proportion of widow's pensions that come into the home, he will state what action he proposes to take?

Sir H. BETTERTON: As regards disability pensions, I am assured that the Commissioners are complying fully with the requirements of the Determination of Need Act. As regards widows' pensions, these are not subject to special statutory provisions and must therefore be taken into account, but I have no reason to believe that in dealing with cases where such income is present the Commissioners do not pay full regard to all the circumstances of the case.

Mr. BATEY: If I supply the Minister with the name and address of a man, with four years' War service, whose benefit has been reduced by the whole amount of the War pension, will he look into that case?

Sir H. BETTERTON: If the hon. Member has any such case, perhaps he will send it to me.

6. Sir PERCY HARRIS asked the Minister of Labour whether he is aware that public assistance committees, in the administration of the means test, are refusing to make allowances for the payment of premiums on endowment policies; whether this has been recommended by the Ministry of Labour; and, if not, whether he proposes to take any action in the matter?

Sir H. BETTERTON: This is not a matter upon which it would be competent for me to make any recommendation. It is for the authority concerned to decide in any particular case how far they are justified when determining the needs of a household in treating as necessary outgoings expenses outside the ordinary requirements of maintenance.

Sir P. HARRIS: From the information which is available, can the Minister say whether this practice is general throughout the country?

Sir H. BETTERTON: No, I cannot, but I think that the information required by the hon. Member is information for which he ought to ask the Ministry of Health. I have not got it.

Mr. T. WILLIAMS: If these determinations are based upon an absolute destitution test, can the right hon. Gentleman state how the persons referred to could afford any such thing as endowment insurance premiums?

Sir H. BETTERTON: Of course I do not accept that phrase "destitution test," but, again, if hon. Members ask me for information of that kind, the only answer that I can give is that it is not within my province, and I have not got it.

Mr. WILLIAMS: But if such cases do exist, would the right hon. Gentleman intervene, to see that these people are not deprived of the payment?

Sir H. BETTERTON: There, again, I have no power to intervene in any case. This is a matter, I understand, within the purview and authority of the public assistance committee.

10. Mr. SMEDLEY CROOKE asked the Minister of Labour the number of disabled men that were receiving transitional payment at the last convenient date; and, of that number, how many were in receipt of a disability pension of 70 per cent. or under?

Sir H. BETTERTON: There are no separate statistics showing the number of disabled men drawing transitional payments. The figures only show the total number of men and women, respectively, with applications for transitional payments.

16. Mr. T. WILLIAMS asked the Minister of Labour whether further inquiries have been made into the administration of transitional payments by the West Riding, Yorks, public assistance committee with regard to gross and nett earnings; and if he will state the nature of the reply?

Sir H. BETTERTON: This is a matter for decision by the public assistance authority, who I am informed, have their basis of assessment under review at the present time.

Mr. WILLIAMS: Is the Minister aware that for three months the West Riding Public Assistance Committee have been applying a scale based upon gross earnings, which, in mining areas, means actually more than double the amounts received by mine-workers?

Sir H. BETTERTON: I was not aware of that, but, if the hon. Member states it as a question of fact, of course I accept it. My answer is that the authority have their basis of assessment under review at the moment.

28. Mr. T. WILLIAMS asked the Minister of Labour the number of claims for transitional payment considered, and the number refused, during the last two months of 1932 and the first two months of this year in the Don Valley and Rother Valley areas, respectively?

Sir H. BETTERTON: It is not the practice to compile these figures except for authority areas, but I will see whether I can obtain the figures for the separate Committee areas for which the hon. Member asks, and will communicate with him.

25 and 26. Mr. COVE (for Mr. ANEURIN BEVAN) asked the Minister of Labour (1), how many of the unemployed persons of the ages 18 to 20 have had their transitional payment reduced on account of family income;

(2), how many heads of families in receipt of transitional payment have had the payment reduced on account of wages earned by children of the family?

Sir H. BETTERTON: I regret that statistics giving the information desired are not available.

27. Mr. PRICE asked the Minister of Labour how many of the 248,408 unemployed persons of the ages 18 to 20 have exhausted their right to unemployment benefit and are in receipt of transitional payment?

Sir H. BETTERTON: Of th 248,408 unemployed persons aged 18 to 20 on the registers of Employment Exchanges in Great Britain at 20th February, 1933, 55,556 had applications authorised for transitional payments.

SUBSISTENCE STANDARD (ESTIMATES).

7. Mr. MANDER asked the Minister of Labour whether any recent scientific investigation has taken place into the weekly sum of money required for the maintenance of life on a reasonable standard of subsistence; and, if so, what relation this bears to the allowances at present being made under the means test?

Sir H. BETTERTON: Certain unofficial estimates of the sum necessary to provide for hypothetical standards of living have, I believe, been made from time to time but I am unable to express an opinion as to how far the various standards adopted would meet with acceptance as being reasonable.

Mr. MANDER: Does not my right hon. Friend think that information of this kind would be extremely valuable to the House in view of impending legislation?

Sir NICHOLAS GRATTAN-DOYLE: May I ask whether it is not perfectly futile to put down a question of this kind?

Sir H. BETTERTON: The answer which I was about to give to the first supplementary question, though in different language, would have been on somewhat the same lines as the second supplementary question.

Mr. MANDER: But is it not a fact that it might not be equally futile to put such a question to another type of Government?

STATE-ASSISTED SCHEMES.

13. Mr. COVE asked the Minister of Labour the number of individuals directly employed since October, 1931, on schemes of employment initiated by the Government?

15. Mr. A. BEVAN asked the Minister of Labour the number of persons at present directly engaged on employment schemes sanctioned by the Government and the cost involved?

Sir H. BETTERTON: The average number of persons directly employed on the main classes of State-assisted schemes for the relief of unemployment over the period October, 1931, to January, 1933, was about 72,000. The number directly employed at the end of January, 1933, was 39,113. The total value of the schemes in operation at the latter date is not readily available, but in any case the hon. Member will appreciate that there would be no direct connection between this figure and the number of men employed at a particular date.

Sir P. HARRIS: Do these figures indicate that the Government policy has resulted in about 30,000 fewer being employed?

Sir H. BETTERTON: No, Sir, I do not for a moment admit that; and it may well be that, if the former policy were still being continued, further men would be thrown out of work.

18. Dr. JOHN WILLIAMS asked the Minister of Labour the amount expended on works receiving Government grants in the Wales division for each of the last five years; and the number of people who have been given direct employment on these operations?

Sir H. BETTERTON: I am making inquiries and will communicate with the hon. Member as early as possible.

TRAINEES.

14. Mr. COVE asked the Minister of Labour the number of unemployed persons who have received training in residential centres from the Aberavon division during the past 12 months; and the number who have secured jobs for which they were trained?

Sir H. BETTERTON: I am looking into the points raised by the hon. Member and will let him have a reply as soon as possible.

17. Mr. DAVID GRENFELL asked the Minister of Labour the cost of maintaining trainees in centres such as that at Presteign; and whether he can give figures to show what proportion of the trainees were found employment on leaving the centre?

Sir H. BETTERTON: The cost of training at an instructional centre is approximately 14s. 6d. per trainee per week excluding travelling expenses, capital charges and the amount of any insurance benefit or transitional payments to which the trainee is entitled. Until about a year ago, it was the policy to limit the accommodation at these centres to the number for whom subsequent employment could reasonably be guaranteed and the percentage of placing was 80 per cent. or more. The present policy is to regard the primary object of these centres as that of counteracting the effects of long-continued unemployment, and the percentage of placing has materially fallen and is now round about 20 per cent. The hon. Member will appreciate that a maintenance of the former policy would have made it necessary to reduce drastically the numbers admitted to the centres.

IRON, STEEL AND TINPLATE INDUSTRIES.

19. Dr. J. WILLIAMS asked the Minister of Labour the number of insured female workers in the iron, steel and tin plate industries and the percentage of unemployed among female workers in these industries as compared with that obtaining in other industries in the United Kingdom?

Sir H. BETTERTON: The estimated numbers of insured female workers in the iron and steel and tinplate industries and in each of 100 other industry groups at July, 1932, and the percentages unemployed at 23rd January, 1933, will be found on pages 62 and 63 of the Ministry of Labour Gazette for February, 1933. Corresponding percentage figures for 20th February, 1933, will be given in the March issue of the Gazette to be published on 18th instant.

Mr. D. GRENFELL: Will they show the geographical distribution of unemployment? Will they show, for example, that there is more unemployment in South Wales as compared with the Midlands?

Sir H. BETTERTON: That is always done.

JUVENILES.

20. Dr. J. WILLIAMS asked the Minister of Labour the number of young persons under 21 years of age who are unemployed in the Wales division, the percentage of unemployment of young people of both sexes, and the number of young persons who have become eligible for transitional payment?

[Dr. Williams.]

Sir H. BETTERTON: As the reply includes a table of figures I will, if I may, circulate a statement in the OFFICIAL REPORT.

Following is the statement:

Insured persons under 21 years of age recorded as unemployed in Wales Division at 20th February, 1933.

—	Aged 16 and under 18.*		Aged 18 and under 21.
	Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.
Number unemployed	3,052	1,393	13,684	3,705
Precentage unemployed	9·6	14·2	28·0	24·8
Number with applications authorised for transitional payments.	—	—	6,020	564

* Persons under 18 years of age are not eligible for transitional payments

24. Mr. COVE asked the Minister of Labour if he can state how many of the unemployed juveniles of 16 and 17 years of age have never had employment since reaching insurable age?

Sir H. BETTERTON: I regret that statistics giving the information desired are not available.

Mr. COVE: Will the right hon. Gentleman take action in order to secure them?

Sir H. BETTERTON: These figures have never at any time, by any Government, been tabulated in the way asked for, and I am told that to give them would involve very laborious inquiries, but the next time we have a special inquiry on any matter, I will see whether I cannot have a sample case which would give the hon. Gentleman some indication in the direction desired.

Mr. COVE: Is the right hon. Gentleman not aware that in a number of areas there is an impression that a large number of these boys have no work at all, and therefore that they are providing a serious social problem?

Sir H. BETTERTON: It is a serious problem, and I have no doubt that what the hon. Member says is true.

Mr. LUNN: Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that 450,000 boys and girls leave school in every school year, according to an answer given to me the other day, and are the Government taking any steps to see that either their education is continued or something is done to find them employment?

Sir H. BETTERTON: With regard to the first question, the figures are substantially accurate. In fact, I gave them myself the other day. The whole question of what we can do and should do with regard to juveniles is at present under active consideration.

Mr. COVE: Does the right hon. Gentleman not agree that it would be far better to raise the school-leaving age than to have the children permanently and totally unemployed?

Sir H. BETTERTON: The hon. Gentleman should not address questions with regard to the school-leaving age to me.

Mr. COVE: But the right hon. Gentleman is a Member of the Government.

Seamen.

21. Mr. LOGAN asked the Minister of Labour how many British seamen, including all sea-going persons other than fishermen, are unemployed at the present time or at the latest convenient date, and the number in June, 1932?

Sir H. BETTERTON: The number of unemployed seamen, aged 18 and over, on the registers of Employment Exchanges in Great Britain was 42,587 at 23rd January, 1933, and 37,882 at 25th July, 1932. Separate statistics in respect of seamen of British nationality are not available.

Mr. LOGAN: Is the right hon. Gentleman acting in collaboration with the Board of Trade in respect of this unemployment?

Sir H. BETTERTON: I am constantly in touch with my colleagues on this and other matters.

Mr. LOGAN: Has there been any deliberation with regard to unemployment in the British Mercantile Marine, in view of the fact that foreigners are employed while British seamen are unemployed?

Sir H. BETTERTON: That matter and similar matters are constantly under review between the Departments of the Government.

Mr. HERBERT WILLIAMS: Can my right hon. Friend say to what extent unemployment among seamen is due to the fact that they sign the register between the conclusion of one voyage and the commencement of the next, even though they know definitely that they are going on the same ship on its next voyage?

Mr. LOGAN: Will the right hon. Gentleman also state how it affects the city of Liverpool as regards tariffs?

TRAINING CAMPS (WALES).

29. Mr. D. GRENFELL asked the Minister of Labour whether he will consider the possibility of establishing training camps in Wales under conditions similar to those proposed for the Kielder estate in Northumberland?

Sir H. BETTERTON: I have this under consideration.

LOCAL AUTHORITIES' SCHEMES.

41, 42 and 43. Mr. ROBINSON asked the Minister of Health (1) whether any cases have been brought to his notice in which grants have been sanctioned for local authorities' schemes where British materials have been specified and where the specification has been altered after the sanctioning of grants so as to substitute foreign material for British;

(2) what steps he has taken to ensure that British materials are used in schemes sanctioned by the Ministry of Health since the issue of Circular 1060 of December, 1929;

(3) whether he is satisfied that local authorities are loyally observing the condition as to the use of British materials laid down in Circular 1060 of December, 1929?

The MINISTER of HEALTH (Sir Hilton Young): I have no reason to think that local authorities are not generally acting in accordance with this circular or that any further circular is called for. Where a local authority applies for my sanction to a loan and I become aware that they propose to use foreign materials, I satisfy myself as to the circumstances and conditions of proposal before the loan is sanctioned. Consent to alterations in a specification has been given in a few cases where Government grant has been sanctioned, and good cause was shown for the use of foreign materials in place of British.

Mr. ROBINSON: Will the right hon. Gentleman consider withdrawing the Ministry's grant in cases where Circular 1060 is not observed?

Sir H. YOUNG: I do not think that any general action of that sort would be justified, because all cases have to be considered on the merits of their conditions in relation to the two considerations.

Mr. LUNN: Can the right hon. Gentleman say what grants are being made to local authorities to provide employment involving either the use of foreign materials or British materials?

49. Mr. LEVY asked the Minister of Health if he will consider sending a circular to the local authorities stating that schemes of work of a revenue-producing character are favourably regarded by the Government and inviting them to prepare such schemes?

Sir H. YOUNG: I do not think any further communication to local authorities is required having regard to the full statement which I made in the House on the 15th ultimo.

Mr. LEVY: Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that the impression among local authorities is that expenditure of all kinds is not encouraged, and does he not think that it is important and necessary that he should correct that impression?

Sir H. YOUNG: I do not think that, as a matter of fact, that is now the case. I think that the actual state of affairs is now well known to the local authorities owing to the recent pronouncements on the subject.

Sir FRANCIS FREMANTLE: Will the right hon. Gentleman consider whether he cannot in regard to such schemes as this point the attention of county councils to the fact that in some cases they can do work which has been considered hitherto the work of the district councils?

WORK SCHEMES.

46. Mr. LIDDALL asked the Prime Minister if he can state what scheme for an extension of electric lighting facilities or national water and sewage schemes have been considered by the committee of business men set up to advise the Government in these matters?

The LORD PRESIDENT of the COUNCIL (Mr. Baldwin): Particular proposals relating to these services are dealt with by the appropriate Government Departments. No point has arisen in connection with matters of this kind on which it has been necessary to consult the business men referred to.

Sir P. HARRIS: Can the right hon. Gentleman say who are the business men referred to?

Mr. BALDWIN: I should require a separate question on that point.

HEALTH INSURANCE BENEFITS.

48. Mr. BANFIELD asked the Minister of Health whether he is aware that in June next many unemployed persons will be in arrears as members of their approved societies under the National Health Insurance Acts; that sums up to 18s. will have to be paid to clear these arrears; that in many cases payment of these arrears will not entitle the persons concerned to health benefits on account of not having been employed for a considerable time in an insurable occupation; and that, owing to the complexity of the law, many of them are ignorant of their position; and whether he will take steps to avoid the hardship which will follow?

Sir H. YOUNG: The cases to which the hon. Member refers arise under the provisions of the National Health Insurance Act, 1932. These were fully explained when the Bill was before the House and all insured persons were informed of the changes by a leaflet issued at the end of last year. All possible steps are being taken to ease the position for the insured persons affected, and arrangements have been made under which arrears due to unemployment may be redeemed by instalments at any time from now to the end of November next.

Mr. BANFIELD: Does not the right hon. Gentleman realise that many of these people believe that by paying these arrears they will be entitled to benefits, and that many of them are ignorant of the fact that it would not so entitle them?

Sir H. YOUNG: That is not so in the common case.

ALLOTMENTS AND SEED SUPPLIES.

63. Mr. GRAHAM WHITE asked the Minister of Agriculture if it is now his intention to withdraw the restrictions under which local authorities cannot avail themselves of Sections 14 and 16 of the Agricultural Land (Utilisation) Act, 1931, authorising him to defray losses incurred thereunder by local authorities in providing allotment gardens for unemployed persons and in making grants for assisting in the provision of seeds, fertilisers, and equipment for unemployed persons?

The MINISTER of AGRICULTURE (Major Elliot): The Government decided on grounds of economy that no funds could be provided for the purpose of operating the Sections referred to, and I fear that that decision must still be maintained. I would, however, remind the hon. Member that a grant is being made from the Development Fund to the Society of Friends to supplement funds obtained by that society for the purpose of aiding the supply of seeds, fertilisers and implements to unemployed and partly employed persons cultivating allotments.

Mr. T. WILLIAMS: Seeing that we now have approximately 350,000 more persons unemployed than 18 months ago, cannot the right hon. Gentleman reconsider this question?

OCCUPATIONAL CENTRES (WIRELESS SETS).

78. Captain SPENCER asked the Postmaster-General if he is aware that charitable organisations and individuals are providing free wireless sets for use in unemployed occupational centres; and if he is prepared to remit the licence duty in such cases?

The ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL (Sir Ernest Bennett): The Broadcasting Committee, 1925, considered the question of the grant of free wireless licences, and recommended that this concession be made to blind persons only. Effect was given to the committee's recommendation by the Wireless Telegraphy (Blind Persons Facilities) Act, 1926. My right hon. Friend regrets that he would not feel justified in asking Parliament to extend the concession to other classes of the community.

ROYAL COMMISSION (RECOMMENDATIONS).

8. Mr. BATEY (for Mr. LAWSON) asked the Minister of Labour if he is yet in a position to state when the new Unemployment Insurance Bill will be introduced, or if he can give any indication as to the present position in respect to this matter?

Sir H. BETTERTON: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given on Tuesday by the Lord President of the Council to the hon. Member for Durham (Mr. McKeag).

GOVERNMENT POLICY.

9. Mr. BATEY (for Mr. LAWSON) asked the Minister of Labour whether he is now in a position to state the Government's plans for engaging the unemployed on schemes of work?

Sir H. BETTERTON: I would refer the hon. Member to the statement of Government policy made in the course of the Debate on 16th February.

PRISONERS (SECOND DIVISION).

30 and 31. Brigadier-General SPEARS asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether the rules governing the treatment of prisoners in the second division are exhibited in the cells of second division prisoners in Wormwood Scrubs Prison and any other prisons receiving second division prisoners; and, if not, whether he will take steps to ensure that this is done;

(2) what provision is made at Wormwood Scrubs Prison for the separation of second division prisoners from prisoners sentenced to hard labour or simple imprisonment and not in the second division?

The SECRETARY of STATE for the HOME DEPARTMENT (Sir John Gilmour): The second division is intended to provide for the separation of prisoners of previously good character from those of depraved or criminal habits. No prisoners of the latter class are sent to Wormwood Scrubs, which is specially set apart for men of previously good character. Separation of second division prisoners from others who have not been placed in that division by the court is therefore unnecessary at that prison, and the treatment of all prisoners there is more favourable than it is possible to provide for second division prisoners elsewhere. The usual cell card of rules relating to the second division is therefore superfluous at Wormwood Scrubs and has been replaced by a special card based on the system in force at that prison.

TRANSPORT.

MOTOR DRIVERS' HOURS.

33. Mr. LLEWELLYN-JONES asked the Home Secretary the number of prosecutions and convictions, respectively, for the years 1931 and 1932 in England and Wales for offences against Section 19 of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, which provides for a limitation of time for which drivers of certain vehicles may remain continuously on duty?

Sir J. GILMOUR: No figures are available for the country as a whole, as the annual returns made by the police do not deal separately with this class of offence. In the Metropolitan Police District there were no prosecutions in the nine months of 1931 during which Section 19 was in force. In 1932, prosecutions were instituted and convictions obtained against one limited company and six individuals.

Mr. LLEWELLYN-JONES: Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that a large number of very serious accidents, including fatal accidents, are due to the contravention of this Section of the Act of 1930, and will he take steps with a view to seeing whether the Act is complied with?

Sir J. GILMOUR: Yes; I am sure that that is kept in mind by the authorities.

70 and 71. Mr. LESLIE BOYCE asked the Minister of Transport (1) whether he is aware of the fatal accident which occurred recently at Kilndown, Kent, in which the driver of a lorry which fell down a bank was killed; whether he is aware that the man had been at work for 54 out of 98 hours; and what measures he proposes to introduce to render more effective the provisions of Section 19 of the Road Traffic Act, 1930;

(2) whether his attention has been called to an accident at Eastriggs on 17th February, when a lorry crashed through a railway fence and was run into by a train; and whether, as the driver of the lorry had been at work continuously for a number of hours in excess of the legal maximum and in view of other such accidents, he will take steps to bring about a more strict observance of the law relating to the hours worked by motor drivers?

The PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY to the MINISTRY of TRANSPORT (Lieut.-Colonel Headlam): The two accidents to which he refers have been brought to my notice and have been the subject of special inquiries by the police. I am in communication with my right hon. Friend, the Home Secretary, in regard to these cases. As regards the provisions of Section 19 of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, relating to the hours of employment of drivers of heavy vehicles, a statement has already been made by the Government that the question of providing more effective means for the enforcement of this and other requirements of the Act is under consideration in connection with the Bill which will shortly be introduced for the better regulation and control of the transport of goods by road.

73. Mr. PARKINSON asked the Minister of Transport whether, in view of the present lack of observance of Section 19 of the Road Traffic Act by the owners and drivers of commercial motor vehicles, he will amend this Section of the Act in the proposed legislation for the better regulation and control of goods transport by road; and if he will consult with the representatives of the employers and the employés on the whole question of the conditions under which Section 19 of the Road Traffic Act is now operating?

Lieut.-Colonel HEADLAM: I agree that Section 19 of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, is difficult of enforcement, and that its provisions, as well as certain other requirements of the Act, are frequently disregarded by the less scrupulous type of operator, particularly on the goods side of the road transport industry. As I have already stated, this aspect of the problem is under consideration in connection with the Bill which the Government propose to introduce in the near future. I am ready at any time to receive joint representations on the part of employers and employed with regard to the operation of the Section, and I understand that a conference has in fact already been arranged with certain representatives of the passenger side of the industry.

Mr. PARKINSON: Will the hon. and gallant Gentleman in the meantime exercise stricter supervision under Section 19, in view of the fact that we find that flagrant breaches of that Section are taking place?

Lieut.-Colonel HEADLAM: I can assure the hon. Member that that supervision is being exercised at the present time.

ROAD TRAFFIC REGULATIONS.

75. Mr. LLEWELLYN-JONES asked the Minister of Transport if he will give the names of the representative organisations which he has consulted before making regulations under the Road Traffic Act, 1930, in pursuance of Section 111 (2) of the Act; what meetings or conferences of representatives of such organisations have been called by him; and what the total cost of such meetings or conferences has been up to the 31st December, 1932?

Lieut.-Colonel HEADLAM: Every effort is made by my Department to give full effect to Section 111 (2) of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, by consultation before regulations are made with all representative organisations whose interests are likely to be affected. This consultation takes place either by correspondence or by conferences whichever may be more convenient. It forms part of the ordinary duties of my Department and does not entail any special expenditure. The preparation of a list of all the numerous organisations consulted and of the occasions on which consultation has taken place would involve a good deal of labour, but if the hon. Member has in mind any case where he considers that adequate consultation has not taken place and will give me particulars, I will look into the matter.

Mr. LLEWELLYN-JONES: Is it not in the interests of this House, and the public generally, that they should be aware as to what organisations are consulted by the Minister of Transport before these regulations are made, and will he not take steps to furnish a report or memorandum giving a list of the organisations which have been consulted?

Lieut.-Colonel HEADLAM: I do not think that any such list would be of much use to the House. I can tell my hon. Friend that there are a very large number of these bodies, and they are the most obvious bodies that should be consulted in the mater. To give him examples, the Association of Motor Manufacturers and Traders, the Commercial Motor Users Association, and the Cyclists Touring Club have been consulted, among others.

Mr. LLEWELLYN-JONES: Can the hon. and gallant Gentleman say how far organisations connected with the general public, apart from trading organisations, have been consulted?

EDUCATION (CONTINUATION SCHOOLS).

36. Mr. LLEWELLYN-JONES asked the Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Education how many local education authorities in England and Wales have taken steps to establish continuation schools for young persons in accordance with the provisions of Section 75 of the Education Act, 1921?

The PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY to the BOARD of EDUCATION (Mr. Ramsbotham): After the passing of the Education Act, 1918, a few local education authorities established compulsory day continuation schools for young persons in accordance with the provisions of the Act, but subsequently discontinued the provision of such schools. At the present time there is only one local education authority in England and Wales which conducts such a school.

Mr. LLEWELLYN-JONES: Will the hon. Gentleman kindly inform me which authority that is?

Mr. RAMSBOTHAM: The name of the authority is Rugby.

Mr. LLEWELLYN-JONES: Is it not appreciated that the setting-up of these continuation schools is largely imperative at the present time, having regard to the large amount of unemployment among young people in the country?

Mr. RAMSBOTHAM: The Section of the Act authorises continuation schools for all young persons, whether employed or unemployed. It is not confined to the training and education of the unemployed only. If it were a mater of legislation, it would be a matter primarily concerning my right hon. Friend the Minister of Labour.

Sir P. HARRIS: Can the hon. Gentleman say why places like Plymouth have abandoned their continuation school scheme? Was it due to pressure from the Board?

Mr. RAMSBOTHAM: As far as I know, it was abandoned mainly because of the expense involved.

Mr. COVE: Do I understand that this is entirely a matter for the Minister of Labour? Would the hon. Gentleman not agree that it is a matter for co-operative consideration between the two Departments?

Mr. RAMSBOTHAM: I said "primarily."

Mr. LUNN: Is the Department of the hon. Gentleman considering the question of extending these schemes to the children of the unemployed?

Mr. RAMSBOTHAM: A certain amount is being done, as the hon. Gentleman knows, in connection with the training and education of young persons, but as things are, if compulsory day continuation schools were to be applied under the Act, they would have to be applied to all young persons leaving elementary schools.

NATIONAL HEALTH INSURANCE.

40. Mr. D. GRENFELL asked the Minister of Health whether, in connection with any forthcoming extension of voluntary contributions to National Health Insurance and in view of the large numbers of previous contributors who have been forced to leave insurable occupations, he will consider giving to them an opportunity to regain membership by payment of voluntary contributions, as was provided in the Act of 1925, for the provision of widows' and orphans' old age pension benefit to insured contributors?

[Mr. Grenfell.]

Sir H. YOUNG: No extension of the scope of voluntary insurance under the National Health Insurance Acts is in prospect, and therefore the remainder of the question does not arise. The persons to whom the hon. Member refers have for the most part already had an opportunity of becoming voluntary contributors under existing legislation.

Mr. GRENFELL: In view of the passage of time since that date, is the right hon. Gentleman aware of the widespread sense of injustice that prevails and of the ground for that feeling, and will he not move it forward five or six years?

Sir H. YOUNG: I do not quite follow the grievance to which the hon. Gentleman refers, but perhaps he will be good enough to communicate with me, and I will give it my most careful consideration.

HOUSING (RURAL WORKERS).

44. Mr. LENNOX-BOYD asked the Minister of Health whether he has further explored and, if so, with what result the recommendation in the Report of the Committee on Local Expenditure that the administration of the Housing (Rural Workers) Acts, 1926 and 1931, should be placed in the hands of rural district councils?

Sir H. YOUNG: As I explained on the Second Reading of the Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill now before Parliament, I propose to give sympathetic consideration to any application by a rural district council for authority to administer this Act, if it appears that this course will lead to a greater use of the powers of the Act.

47. Sir PERCY HURD asked the Minister of Health whether the contribution of £1 per house payable by a county council under Section 34 (2) of the Housing Act, 1930, towards the provision of a house for a member of the agricultural population in a rural district applies to the case of re-housing under a clearance or improvement scheme; what in that event is the total weekly rent equivalent of the assistance obtainable under the Act for slum clearance; and whether means will be taken to make this position more widely known among county and district authorities?

Sir H. YOUNG: The reply to the first and third parts of the question is in the affirmative. For each three-bedroomed house provided under the Act the total of the contributions under the Act is approximately equivalent to a weekly sum of 5s. If the house is in an agricultural parish the weekly equivalent is 5s. 6d.

Sir P. HURD: Will the right hon. Gentleman reply to the last paragraph of my question?

Sir H. YOUNG: All possible means are taken to call the attention of local authorities to these powers, but, as a matter of fact, I contemplate special measures to that end in the near future.

WORLD ECONOMIC CONFERENCE.

45. Mr. LEVY asked the Prime Minister, if he can now make a statement on the forthcoming Economic Conference?

Mr. BALDWIN: I would refer my hon. Friend to the statements made by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade yesterday in the course of the Debate on the Motion introduced by the hon. Member for East Birkenhead (Mr. White).

ROYAL SEAMEN'S PENSION FUND.

50. Colonel ROPNER asked the Minister of Health the total amount credited to the Royal Seamen's Pension Fund during the year 1932 out of contributions paid under the National Health and Unemployment Insurance Acts, showing in particular the amount paid by owners of fishing vessels, either exactly or as an approximate percentage of the whole sum?

Sir H. YOUNG: During the year 1932 the amount of £75,700 was credited to the Royal Seamen's Pension Fund out of contributions paid under the National Health and Unemployment Insurance Acts. I regret that no information is available as to what portion of this amount was paid by owners of fishing vessels.

51. Colonel ROPNER asked the Minister of Health the number of pensions granted each year by the Royal Seamen's Pension Fund from the date upon which the National Health Insurance Act, 1928, came into operation, distinguishing between seamen and fishermen?

Sir H. YOUNG: I am informed by the Governing Body of the Royal Seamen's Pension Fund that the number of pensions awarded out of the fund in 1929 was 1,995, of which 932 were granted to fishermen. In 1930, 1,233 pensions were awarded, 403 being granted to fishermen, while in 1931, 1,468 pensions were awarded, 415 being to fishermen. In 1932, out of a total of 800 awards, the number granted to fishermen was 221.

Sir MURDOCH McKENZIE WOOD: Does not the right hon. Gentleman think that it is misleading to give figures for the last five years instead of for the whole period during which this scheme has been in operation?

Sir H. YOUNG: These are the figures for which I was asked. I am quite prepared to give any further figures which the hon. Member desires.

52. Colonel ROPNER asked the Minister of Health whether he is aware that the National Health Insurance Act, 1924, specially empowers the governing body of the Royal Seamen's Pension Fund to give preference in the award of pensions to masters and seamen having long sea-service in foreign-going ships; and what steps are taken by his Department to ensure that these objects are fulfilled?

Sir H. YOUNG: The reply to the first part of the question is in the affirmative. With regard to the second part of the question, under the scheme for the administration of benefits out of the Royal Seamen's Pension Fund, which has been approved by the Board of Trade, the Ministry of Labour and the National Health Insurance Joint Committee, special provision is made to give preference to masters and seamen who have served in foreign-going ships over those who have served in other ships.

SEWER GAS.

53. Mr. HUTCHISON asked the Minister of Health whether local authorities are required to keep gas masks to be worn by employés descending into sewers where there is reasonable ground to expect the presence of gas; and, if not, whether he will suggest to all of them that these gas masks should be provided and used?

Sir H. YOUNG: The answer to the first part of the question is in the negative. I am advised that gas masks would not be effective in all cases of danger and that it is the practice to make tests before men descend into sewers. Having regard to the fatality recently reported in the Press, I propose to make further inquiry into the matter.

Mr. T. WILLIAMS: Will the right hon. Gentleman state what kind of test is made, and whether it is by an automatic gas detector or some other implement?

Sir H. YOUNG: Perhaps the hon. Member will give me notice of that question in order that I may deal with it in a satisfactory manner.

Mr. MANDER: Will the right hon. Gentleman bear in mind that the whole population of London will before long be requiring gas masks if the Disarmament Conference breaks down?

Sir N. GRATTAN-DOYLE: Will the right hon. Gentleman take steps to supply hon. Members with gas masks to protect them against the hon. Gentleman?

NATIONAL FINANCE.

BEER DUTY.

54. Brigadier-General Sir HENRY CROFT asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer the net revenue received from Customs Duties on beer for the 11 months ended February 1932, and for the 11 months ended February 1933; and the net receipts from excise duties on beer for the same period?

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER (Mr. Chamberlain): As the answer involves a table of figures, I will with my hon. and gallant Friend's permission, circulate it in the OFFICIAL REPORT.

[Mr. Chamberlain.]

Following is the answer:

The net amount of revenue received from the Customs and Excise Duties respectively on beer during the 11 months ended February in each of the years 1932 and 1933 was as follows:

——	11 months to February, 1932.	11 months to February, 1933.
	£	£
Customs ...	5,903,000	6,073,000*
Excise ...	64,006,000	63,388,000*
Total ...	69,909,000	69,461,000*

* Provisional figures.

55. Sir H. CROFT asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he is aware that the profits of the brewing industry have fallen in the last calendar year by from 26 per cent. to 30 per cent. and that profits have still further declined as disclosed by interim dividends; and whether he will take steps to relieve the industry of the burden imposed by recent taxation?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN: I am aware that declared profits in the brewing industry have fallen, but I must not be taken as necessarily accepting the figures quoted by my hon. and gallant Friend. As regards the second part of the question, my hon. and gallant Friend will not expect me to anticipate the Budget statement.

Sir H. CROFT: May I ask my right hon. Friend if the lower figure is the correct one, how long it will take before all profits disappear under the existing taxation?

INCOME TAX.

59. Mr. LEVY asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated cost of reducing the rate of Income Tax by sixpence and a shilling in the pound, respectively?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN: I would refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to the hon. Member for Colchester (Mr. Lewis) on the 14th March last in reply to similar questions relating to certain Customs duties.

Mr. LEVY: Will the right hon. Gentleman give careful consideration, when framing his Budget, to the importance of the stimulating effect which a reduction of the tariff would have on trade and industry, and alternatively the very depressing effect of not making any reduction?

On a point of Order. By a slip of the tongue I understand that I mentioned the word "tariff." I intended to say "tax."

REVENUE (IMPORT DUTIES).

61. Mr. WHITE asked the Financial Secretary to the Treasury whether he will state the figures of revenue, to the last available date, in respect of foodstuffs, raw materials, partially manufactured and wholly manufactured articles?

The FINANCIAL SECRETARY to the TREASURY (Mr. Hore - Belisha): Separate figures are not available under all of these heads, but I will circulate in the OFFICIAL REPORT such information as it is possible to give. The hon. Member will appreciate that calculations, such as he requires, will take time to compile.

BEET-SUGAR SUBSIDY (COMMITTEE).

56. Sir HERBERT SAMUEL asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Government propose to proceed with the appointment of the committee to inquire into the conditions of the United Kingdom sugar industry which was announced in his Budget speech in April, 1932; and whether this inquiry will be held and completed before any proposals are considered for a continuance of the beet-sugar subsidy when its statutory term expires in 1934?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN: As I informed my hon. Friend the Member for the Henley Division (Sir G. Fox) on the 7th February, the beet-sugar and sugar-refining industries have been conferring with the object of submitting agreed proposals for the consideration of the Government. These proposals have now been received and are being examined. In the meantime I have thought it desirable to defer the appointment of the committee to which the right hon. Member refers.

Sir H. SAMUEL: Do I understand from what my right hon. Friend has said that he will not come to any conclusion on these matters until there has been an inquiry into the working of the present beet-sugar subsidy?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN: I do not say that.

Sir H. SAMUEL: May I ask whether there will be an inquiry into the working of the beet-sugar subsidy, which is involving the expenditure of public moneys to the amount of over £30,000,000, before any decision is reached as to its continuance?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN: I do not think I can give that undertaking, but, as the matter is still under consideration, I think my right hon. Friend need not be afraid that any hasty conclusion will be arrived at.

Sir H. CROFT: Can the right hon. Gentleman not satisfy the right hon. Member for Darwen (Sir H. Samuel) by giving an undertaking that there will be a reasonable duty and get rid of the subsidy?

LOANED WORKS OF ART (CUSTOMS DUTY).

60. Sir WLLLIAM DAVISON asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he is aware that five packages containing examples of modern Chinese art, which were loaned for exhibition at the Whitechapel Art Gallery by Professor Chytil, of Prague, have been stopped by the Customs authorities, who claim duty amounting to £450; and whether, as these works of art are not for sale, but merely for exhibition at the gallery, which opens its exhibitions free to the public, steps will be taken to release them for exhibition without payment of duty?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN: I am having inquiry made into the matter, and I will let my hon. Friend know the result as soon as possible.

TRADE AND COMMERCE.

Linoleum Exports (Drawback).

62. Mr. G. WHITE asked the Financial Secretary to the Treasury if arrangements have now been made for a drawback of duty in respect of the linseed-oil content of linoleum when exported?

Mr. HORE-BELISHA: No, Sir.

Sir P. HARRIS: Did not the Chancellor of the Exchequer make a promise that there would be a drawback arrangement, so that this industry should not suffer?

Mr. HORE-BELISHA: I must direct my hon. Friend's attention to the question I have been answering.

Japanese Competition (Dominions).

77. Mr. HAMMERSLEY asked the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs whether he is in negotiation with any of the Dominions with regard to their withdrawal from the Anglo-Japanese trading agreement without prejudice to the validity of the agreement as between this country and Japan?

The SECRETARY of STATE for DOMINION AFFAIRS (Mr. J. H. Thomas): No, Sir.

Mr. HAMMERSLEY: Is the right hon. Gentleman aware of the acute anxiety that exists in many of the Dominions in respect to this abnormal Japanese competition, and will he undertake, in the event of their requesting him to take the action indicated in the question, not to raise any overriding objection?

Mr. THOMAS: The only Dominions affected are Canada, with very strong reservations, the Irish Free State, and Newfoundland. If I get any communications from them, I will very seriously consider them.

Coupon Trading.

80. Mr. STOREY asked the President of the Board of Trade whether the terms of reference of the proposed departmental committee on coupon trading will include the investigation of free insurance of readers by newspapers?

The PRESIDENT of the BOARD of TRADE (Mr. Runciman): The composition and terms of reference of the proposed departmental committee are still under consideration.

Mr. STOREY: Will the right hon. Gentleman bear in mind the fact that free insurance by newspapers is one of the most pernicious forms of gift trading, in that it increases the cost of advertising without any corresponding advantage to the advertiser?

[Mr. Storey.]

Mr. RUNCIMAN: I am not going into the merits of that subject, but I may inform my hon. Friend that that is one of the topics under consideration.

Duchess of ATHOLL: May I ask whether another form will be inquired into, namely, the practice of writing open letters to prominent people, conveying the suggestion that they wish to commend a particular commodity?

Mr. BUCHANAN: Will not the right hon. Gentleman just allow us to get a little of our own way in these matters without constantly interfering with us?

INDIA (RAILWAY ORDERS).

83. Sir H. CROFT asked the Secretary of State for India whether his attention has been called to the contracts placed with Continental firms by Indian railways for locomotive boilers, fittings and cylinders; whether he is aware that the difference in price between the British quotations and those of the Hungarian State Railway workshops is small; and whether, in the interests of British industry, he will take the matter up with the Indian railways on behalf of British manufacturers in order that they may not be undersold by foreign State workshops?

The UNDER-SECRETARY of STATE for INDIA (Mr. Butler): My hon. and gallant Friend is presumably referring to contracts placed by the authorities in India under the rupee tender system. I have no information as to the details and would refer my hon. and gallant Friend to the reply I gave on 27th February to the question of my hon. Friend the Member for South Kensington (Sir W. Davison), who, I think, was referring to the same orders.

Sir H. CROFT: If it is a fact that these contracts for State railways are being placed on the Continent at a very low wage level, will the hon. Gentleman not urge the railways in India to give contracts to Great Britain, where most of the capital has been raised for the promotion of those railways?

Mr. CHURCHILL: Are we not to have an answer to that question?

Mr. BUTLER: The usual practice under the rupee tender system has been followed in this case.

Sir W. DAVISON: Is it not time that the usual practice was altered to a new practice more in accordance with the feelings of this House and the country?

Sir NAIRNE STEWART SANDEMAN: Would it not be better to give a subsidy to the manufacturers in this country, and keep the business here?

MANCHUKUO (JAPANESE FRUIT).

86. Mr. MANDER asked the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether any information has been received in regard to the modification by the Manchukuo Government of the tariff in favour of Japanese oranges and apples in December last, contrary to international treaties; and what action he proposes to take?

Mr. BALDWIN: No, Sir. In November last the Manchukuo authorities announced that the specific duties hitherto levied on imported oranges and apples had been replaced by ad valorem duties of 15 per cent. and 25 per cent. respectively; but I have no information of discriminatory action on their part in favour of the Japanese fruit.

Mr. MANDER: Will the right hon. Gentleman be good enough to make inquiries in view of the danger that this may be applied to the textile exports from this country?

Mr. BALDWIN: I am advised that there is no discrimination.

AGRICULTURE.

MEAT IMPORTS.

64. Mr. H. WILLIAMS asked the Minister of Agriculture what further steps he proposes to take to assist the livestock industry, in view of the fact that the imports of beef and mutton in February, 1933, were greater than in January, 1933, and than in February, 1932, and that the daily average during February, 1933 was practically the same as for the daily average of the whole of 1932?

Major ELLIOT: Imports of chilled and frozen beef were less in February, 1933, than in either January, 1933, or Feb ruary, 1932. Imports of mutton and lamb, on the other hand, were greater, the difference being attributable to increased imports from the Dominions. I would remind my hon. Friend that the undertaking given by Australia and New Zealand at Ottawa to limit their shipments related to the year 1933 as a whole and it will, therefore, be appreciated that a comparison of one particular month with another has no special significance.

Mr. WILLIAMS: May I ask whether it is not the case that the emergency arrangements the right hon. Gentleman announced last December applied to the imports during the early months of this year, and why it is in those circumstances that imports of mutton were so abnormally high during February?

Major ELLIOT: I shall be happy to discuss the matter with my hon. Friend afterwards. I think it is very difficult to deal with these complicated matters by question and answer.

Mr. COVE: Can the right hon. Gentleman tell us whether prices increased during this period?

CONDENSED SKIMMED MILK (IMPORTS).

66. Mr. LENNOX-BOYD asked the Minister of Agriculture the reasons governing the avoidance of any effective restrictions on the increasing importation of condensed skimmed milk and similar products, particularly in view of their small food value and their competition with cheap pure milk?

Major ELLIOT: The position of the market for dairy produce is at present receiving the Government's careful and unremitting consideration, and all milk products will be brought under review, including those to which my hon. friend refers.

PRODUCTION (STATISTICS).

67. Mr. LEWIS asked the Minister of Agriculture if he will state for the last complete year for which figures are available the value, respectively, of the production in this country of eggs and poultry on the one hand and wheat, barley, and oats on the other hand?

Major ELLIOT: The value of the output from holdings over 1 acre in England and Wales in 1931-32 may be estimated provisionally at about £19,500,000 in the case of poultry and eggs, and £11,000,000 for wheat, barley and oats. The latter figure does not include the proportion of the crops retained on farms for seed or feed.

MILK (MARKETING SCHEME).

68. Sir P. HURD asked the Minister of Agriculture whether, seeing that milk producers have presented a scheme under the Marketing Act as recommended by the Reorganisation Commission for Milk, the Government now propose to establish a statutory dairymen's board and a joint milk council which the Commission consider essential to the satisfactory operation of their plan?

Major ELLIOT: I have not yet received the scheme referred to, but I understand that I may expect it at any moment. Immediate steps will be taken by the Ministry on receipt of the scheme to publish notice of submission with a view to pressing forward with the statutory procedure laid down in connection with submission and approval of marketing schemes. Meanwhile, the proposals of the Commission to which my hon. Friend refers are receiving careful consideration. They raise important questions of policy on which I am not yet in a position to make a statement.

WHEAT DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS (OXFORDSHIRE).

69. Sir GIFFORD FOX asked the Minister of Agriculture the amount of deficiency payments paid out under the Wheat Quota Act up to date, specifying the sum paid to farmers in Oxfordshire?

Major ELLIOT: The Wheat Commission have paid advances totalling £1,283,535 to registered growers in the United Kingdom on account of deficiency payments to which they will become entitled under the Wheat Act, 1932. The sum paid to farmers in Oxfordshire is £26,125. These payments are in respect of wheat certificates lodged with the commission up to 30th November last. A further advance in respect of certificates received between 1st December and 28th February will be made on or about 25th March.

MARKETING (FOREIGN TRADE NEGOTIATIONS).

81. Sir JOSEPH LAMB asked the President of the Board of Trade whether his attention has been called to the statement broadcast by the Danish Finance Minister in respect to recent commercial negotiations between Denmark and this country; whether he is aware of the anxiety entertained by British farmers as to the effect of such negotiations upon the operation of schemes under the Agricultural Marketing Act; and whether he can give any assurance that no commitments will be entered into with foreign countries which will prevent the expansion of home production of food products regulated by schemes under the Agricultural Marketing Act?

[Sir J. Lamb.]

Mr. RUNCIMAN: My attention has been drawn to the statement to which my hon. Friend refers. I can assure him that in the trade negotiations with foreign countries I am in constant touch with my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries.

Sir J. LAMB: Is the President of the Board of Trade not aware that there is a great deal of apprehension among agriculturists generally with regard to this matter?

Mr. RUNCIMAN: I hope that agriculturists generally know my right hon. Friend so well that they can entrust their interests to him.

COAL INDUSTRY (WEMYSS COAL COMPANY).

76. Lieut.-Colonel KERR asked the Secretary for Mines whether he is now in a position to announce the finding of the Scottish Commission of Investigation on the complaint made by the Hawick Co-operative Society against the standard tonnage allotted to the Wemyss Coal Company?

The SECRETARY for MINES (Mr. Ernest Brown): The finding of the Scottish Committee of Investigation in this case is as follows:—

"The committee, having considered the complaint submitted by the Hawick Co-operative Society, Limited, unanimously resolve:

1. That in the opinion of the committee the complaint was reasonably brought by the complainers inasmuch as the reason given the complainers for some difficulty they experienced in obtaining coal was contained in a document headed 'An Apology to our Customers' issued by the Wemyss Coal Company Limited, alleging that shortage was due to the operation of the Coal Mines Act, 1930.

2. That the complaint as to the inadequacy of the standard tonnage allotted by the Executive Board to the Wemyss Coal Company, Limited, has not been substantiated and that the statements contained in the apology are in the opinion of the committee misleading. The evidence submitted to the committee suggests that the Wemyss Coal Company, Limited, have benefitted by the Act rather than otherwise."

Mr. GUY: Could the Secretary for Mines tell the House who are the members of this Committee?

Mr. BROWN: The members of the Committee of Investigation were as follow:

Name.	Representing.
Sheriff G. Morton, K.C., M.A., LL.B., Chairman.	—
W. Elger, Esq., J.P. ...	Consumers.
Donald A. Matheson, Esq., M.V.O., J.P.	"
R. W. Brown, Esq. ...	Owners of coal mines in the district.
A. B. Clarke, Esq., J.P. ...	Workers employed in or about such coal mines.

HOUSE OF COMMONS (REFRESHMENT DEPARTMENT).

79. Lieut.-Colonel GAULT asked the hon. Member for Ipswich, as Chairman of the Kitchen Committee, whether he can state the amount of cider which was consumed in the refreshment departments of the House of Commons during the past calendar year; and what proportion of this amount was genuine Somerset cider?

Sir JOHN GANZONI: Sir, 204 gallons of draught, 84 dozen reputed pints and 98 dozen smaller bottles of cider were consumed last year. They were all Hereford, Devonshire or Norfolk brands.

Lieut.-Colonel GAULT: Is my hon. Friend aware that, in the opinion of experts and connoisseurs, the best cider comes from Somerset, and will he provide adequate facilities for hon. Members to enjoy this refreshing beverage for the future?

Sir H. CROFT: Is it not a fact that the alcoholic content of Somerset cider is somewhat in excess of that of the ordinary working man's beer, and will he give warning to hon. Members accordingly?

Sir J. GANZONI: I am always open to receive any helpful advice.

GERMANY.

87. Mr. MANDER asked the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether his attention has been called to the recent breaches of the Treaty of Versailles by Germany; and what action it is proposed to take in the matter?

Mr. BALDWIN: The hon. Member is no doubt referring to the alleged inconsistency with the Treaty of Versailles and subsequent agreements of the enrolment of auxiliary police and their presence in the demilitarised zone. These matters are under consideration.

Mr. CHURCHILL: May I ask whether there is any prospect of a Debate which would raise the question of the promotion of peace on the Continent of Europe taking place at an early date?

Mr. BALDWIN: If I thought that such a Debate would attain that object, I should be glad to consider it.

Mr. CHURCHILL: Am I to understand that there is no prospect of a Debate upon the European situation in the near future?

Mr. BALDWIN: My right hon. Friend must recognise that that is a question which it is impossible to answer without notice.

Mr. CHURCHILL: Then my right hon. Friend will consider this point if notice is given?

Mr. BALDWIN: If there is a general desire, of course one is bound to consider it, but that does not in any way pledge us to find time.

Mr. MAXTON: If one of the parties requested that such a Debate should take place on the Consolidated Fund Bill, would the Government be prepared to arrange for it?

Mr. BALDWIN: The subject for discussion on that Bill is always within the choice of the Opposition, and they can put down any subject.

EMPLOYMENT (STATISTICS).

11. Mr. BANFIELD (for Mr. THORNE) asked the Minister of Labour the total number of workpeople employed in all trades and callings in Great Britain and Northern Ireland for the years 1920 and 1930, respectively?

Sir H. BETTERTON: I have prepared a detailed reply to this question, which I propose, with the hon. Member's permission, to circulate in the OFFICIAL REPORT.

Following is the reply:

I regret that the statistics desired in respect of 1920 are not available. The estimated number of persons aged 16 years and upwards insured under the Unemployment Insurance Acts in Great Britain and Northern Ireland at July, 1921, was 11,337,650, including probably between 320,000 and 340,000 persons aged 65 years and over. At July, 1930, the number of insured persons aged 16 to 64 inclusive was 12,405,700. At the Population Census of 1921 the total number of persons aged 12 years and upwards returned as gainfully occupied in Great Britain, exclusive of employers and persons working on their own account, was 17,414,718. A Census of Population was not taken in Northern Ireland in 1921. Corresponding figures from the 1931 Population Census are not yet available. The figures given above include unemployed persons as well as those at work.

TRADE UNIONS.

12. Mr. BANFIELD (for Mr. THORNE) asked the Minister of Labour the number of registered and unregistered trade unions in Great Britain and Northern Ireland for the years 1920 and 1930 respectively; and the membership of registered and unregistered trade unions for the same periods?

Sir H. BETTERTON: The numbers of registered and unregistered trade unions of employés in Great Britain and Northern Ireland at the end of 1920 and at the end of 1930 were 1,368 and 1,098 respectively. The memberships were 8,339,000 in 1920 (of whom about 7 millions were in registered unions), and 4,824,000 in 1930 (of whom about 3¾ millions were in registered unions).

ALIENS (BEET-SUGAR FACTORIES).

22. Sir ALAN McLEAN asked the Minister of Labour how many aliens are now employed in beet-sugar factories in Great Britain under permits issued by the Home Office on the recommendation of his Department; and how many have been so employed for six years and upwards?

[Sir A. McLean.]

Sir H. BETTERTON: The number of aliens now employed in beet-sugar factories in Great Britain under permit conditions is 12. Two of these are leaving the country at the end of this month; of the remaining 10, 5 have been employed here for more than six years.

23. Sir A. McLEAN asked the Minister of Labour whether it is still a condition of the permit issued by the Home Office, on the recommendation of his Department, for the employment of aliens in beet-sugar factories in Great Britain that British subjects are trained by the aliens?

Sir H. BETTERTON: Yes, Sir. I should point out, however, that in certain cases where the foreigner has been in this country for a number of years, it may be decided to remove any restrictions upon his further stay, and in such cases the conditions would naturally no longer apply. I may add that no permits for the admission of foreigners for the beet-sugar industry have been issued since July, 1929.

BORSTAL INSTITUTION, FELTHAM (PROMOTIONS).

32. Mr. McENTEE asked the Home Secretary how many officers at His Majesty's Borstal Institution, Feltham, during the past 12 months, to the nearest date, have been passed over for promotion; and how far the seniority and experience of the officers is taken into consideration in making selections for promotion?

Sir J. GILMOUR: During the last 12 months, 25 officers at Feltham Borstal Institution have been passed over for promotion. As regards the second part of the question, I would refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to his question on the 9th instant.

DARTMOOR PRISON (FARM BAILIFF).

34. Mr. McENTEE asked the Home Secretary whether he is aware that the Prison Commissioners are advertising for a farm bailiff for Dartmoor Prison at a salary of approximately £1 per week more than the present bailiff receives, and that during the tenure of office of nearly three years of the present bailiff many first, second, and third class prizes have been won for cattle at local and district shows; what is the reason for the pending change; and whether the present holder of the office has been informed that he was not giving satisfaction?

Sir J. GILMOUR: The post of farm bailiff at this prison has not been filled for some years. On the death of the last bailiff it was decided, owing to uncertainty as to the future of the prison and of the farm, not to fill the post, and, as a temporary expedient, two officers of the prison have been employed in succession on the work and given a special allowance. As it has now been decided to maintain and to make more extensive use of the farm property, it has become necessary to appoint a qualified bailiff, and the Prison Commissioners have advertised for candidates accordingly.

Mr. McENTEE: Are we to understand that the bailiff who has been carrying out that work is not qualified? Has any complaint been made to the right hon. Gentleman to that effect?

Sir J. GILMOUR: This was a temporary arrangement with one of the ordinary officials of the prison, who is not fully qualified as a farm bailiff.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE (BUDGET DATE).

Mr. LANSBURY: May I ask the Lord President of the Council what will be the business for next week; and also, as there have been some statements in the Press as to the date of the Budget, is it possible for the right hon. Gentleman to tell us the date on which the Budget will be opened?

Mr. BALDWIN: Yes, Sir; my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer will open his Budget on Tuesday, the 25th April. The business for next week will be as follows:

Monday: Conclusion of the Second Reading Debate on the Agricultural Marketing Bill, and Committee stage of the necessary Financial Resolution; consideration of Motions to approve the Additional Import Duties (No. 1) Order, 1933, and the Scottish Raspberries Marketing Scheme. The House will recollect that Monday's business was the subject of agreement through the usual channels. It is hoped to take the Division on the Second Reading of the Agricultural Marketing Bill at about ten o'clock, in order to get through the remaining business without sitting unduly late.

Tuesday: Third Allotted Supply Day—Report stage of the Army, Air and Navy Estimates.

With regard to Wednesday, the House will realise that Government business can now be taken on Wednesdays, yesterday having been the last day appropriated to private Members' Motions. Next Wednesday, the Second Reading of the Consolidated Fund Bill will be taken, and the question of unemployment will be debated.

Thursday: Remaining stages of the Consolidated Fund Bill. It has not yet been decided what subject will be debated.

Friday: Private Members' Bills.

On any day, if there is time, other Orders will be taken.

Mr. LANSBURY: We have given the Patronage Secretary notice that on Thursday, if possible, we hope that the Foreign Secretary or the Prime Minister will make a full statement on the international situation, with special reference to all the questions which they have been discussing at Geneva and elsewhere, and I take it, also, in connection with the Sino-Japanese dispute.

Mr. BALDWIN: I am quite as anxious as the right hon. Gentleman, or my right hon. Friend the Member for Epping (Mr. Churchill), that there should be such a Debate at the earliest moment. I cannot yet say whether those Ministers will be back, but I purpose communicating immediately with them, if possible, to see if they can return in time for Thursday's Debate.

Motion made, and Question put,

"That the Proceedings on Government Business be exempted, at this day's Sitting, from the provisions of the Standing Order (Sittings of the House)."—[Mr. Baldwin.]

The House divided: Ayes, 284; Noes, 31.

Division No. 84.] AYES. [3.49 p.m.

Adams, Samuel Vyvyan T. (Leeds, W.)
Agnew, Lieut.-Com. P. G.
Albery, Irving James
Allen, William (Stoke-on-Trent)
Applin, Lieut.-Col. Reginald V. K.
Aske, Sir Robert William
Atholl, Duchess of
Baillie, Sir Adrian W. M.
Baldwin, Rt. Hon. Stanley
Balniel, Lord
Banks, Sir Reginald Mitchell
Beauchamp, Sir Brograve Campbell
Beaumont, Hon. R.E.B. (Portsm'th,C.)
Beit, Sir Alfred L.
Benn, Sir Arthur Shirley
Bennett, Capt. Sir Ernest Nathaniel
Bernays, Robert
Betterton, Rt. Hon. Sir Henry B.
Borodale, Viscount
Bossom, A. C.
Boulton, W. W.
Bower, Lieut.-Com. Robert Tatton
Bowyer, Capt. Sir George E. W.
Boyce, H. Leslie
Boyd-Carpenter, Sir Archibald
Briscoe, Capt. Richard George
Broadbent, Colonel John
Brocklebank, C. E. R.
Brown, Ernest (Leith)
Brown, Brig.-Gen. H.C. (Berks., Newb'y)
Buchan-Hepburn, P. G. T.
Burgin. Dr. Edward Leslie
Burnett, John George
Butler, Richard Austen
Cadogan, Hon. Edward
Caine, G. R. Hall-
Campbell, Edward Taswell (Bromley)
Campbell, Vice-Admiral G. (Burnley)
Campbell-Johnston, Malcolm
Caporn, Arthur Cecil
Carver, Major William H.
Castlereagh, Viscount
Cautley, Sir Henry S.
Cazalet, Thelma (Islington, E.)
Chamberlain, Rt. Hon. N. (Edgbaston)
Chapman, Sir Samuel (Edinburgh, S.)
Christie, James Archibald
Churchill, Rt. Hon. Winston Spencer
Clarke, Frank
Colfox, Major William Philip
Colman, N. C. D.
Colville, Lieut.-Colonel J.
Conant, R. J. E.
Cook, Thomas A.
Cooke, Douglas
Cooper, A. Duff
Copeland, Ida
Craddock, Sir Reginald Henry
Croft, Brigadier-General Sir H.
Crooke, J. Smedley
Crookshank, Col. C. de Windt (Bootle)
Crookshank, Capt. H. C. (Gainsb'ro)
Cross, R. H.
Cruddas, Lieut.-Colonel Bernard
Culverwell, Cyril Tom
Davies, Maj. Geo. F. (Somerset, Yeovil)
Davison, Sir William Henry
Denman, Hon. R. D.
Dickie, John P.
Donner, P. W.
Dugdale, Captain Thomas Lionel
Duggan, Hubert John
Duncan, James A. L. (Kensington, N.)
Dunglass, Lord
Eady, George H.
Edmondson, Major A. J.
Elliot, Major Rt. Hon. Walter E.
Elmley, Viscount
Emmott, Charles E. G. C.
Emrys-Evans, P. V.
Erskine, Lord (Weston-super-Mare)
Essenhigh, Reginald Clare
Everard, W. Lindsay
Falle Sir Bertram G.
Fermoy, Lord
Fleming, Edward Lascelles
Flint, Abraham John
Fox, Sir Gifford
Fremantle, Sir Francis
Fuller, Captain A. G.
Ganzoni, Sir John
Gault, Lieut.-Col. A. Hamilton
Gilmour, Lt.-Col. Rt. Hon. Sir John
Glossop, C. W. H.
Gluckstein, Louis Halle
Goff, Sir Park
Goldie, Noel B.
Goodman, Colonel Albert W.
Graham, Sir F. Fergus (C'mb'rl'd, N.)
Granville, Edgar
Grattan-Doyle, Sir Nicholas
Gretton, Colonel Rt. Hon. John
Grimston, R. V.
Guinness, Thomas L. E. B.
Guy, J. C. Morrison
Hacking, Rt. Hon. Douglas H.
Hall, Capt. W. D'Arcy (Brecon)
Hamilton, Sir George (Ilford)
Hamilton, Sir R. W. (Orkney & Zetl'nd)
Hammersley, Samuel S.
Hanbury, Cecil
Hanley, Dennis A.
Harbord, Arthur
Harris, Sir Percy

Hartland, George A.
Harvey, Major S. E. (Devon, Totnes)
Haslam, Henry (Horncastle)
Headlam, Lieut.-Col. Cuthbert M.
Heilgers, Captain F. F. A.
Henderson, Sir Vivian L. (Chelmsford)
Heneage, Lieut.-Colonel Arthur P.
Herbert, Capt. S. (Abbey Division)
Hore-Belisha, Leslie
Hornby, Frank
Horne, Rt. Hon. Sir Robert S.
Horsbrugh, Florence
Howard, Tom Forrest
Howitt, Dr. Alfred B.
Hudson, Capt. A. U. M. (Hackney, N.)
Hume, Sir George Hopwood
Hunter, Dr. Joseph (Dumfries)
Hunter, Capt. M. J. (Brigg)
Hurd, Sir Percy
Hurst, Sir Gerald B.
James, Wing-Com. A. W. H.
Jamieson, Douglas
Janner, Barnett
Johnstone, Harcourt (S. Shields)
Jones, Lewis (Swansea, West)
Ker, J. Campbell
Kerr, Lieut.-Col. Charles (Montrose)
Kerr, Hamilton W.
Kirkpatrick, William M.
Knight, Holford
Knox, Sir Alfred
Lamb, Sir Joseph Quinton
Lambert, Rt. Hon. George
Latham, Sir Herbert Paul
Law, Sir Alfred
Law, Richard K. (Hull, S.W.)
Lees-Jones, John
Leighton, Major B. E. P.
Lennox-Boyd, A. T.
Levy, Thomas
Lewis, Oswald
Liddall, Walter S.
Lindsay, Noel Ker
Lister, Rt. Hon. Sir Philip Cunliffe-
Llewellyn-Jones, Frederick
Lloyd, Geoffrey
Locker-Lampson, Rt. Hn. G. (Wd.Gr'n)
Lovat-Fraser, James Alexander
Lumley, Captain Lawrence R.
MacAndrew, Lieut.-Col. C. G.(Partick)
MacAndrew, Capt. J. O. (Ayr)
Macdonald, Capt. P. D. (I. of W.)
McEwen, Captain J. H. F.
McKie, John Hamilton
Maclay, Hon. Joseph Paton
McLean, Major Sir Alan
McLean, Dr. W. H. (Tradeston)
Macpherson, Rt. Hon. Sir Ian
Maitland, Adam
Mander, Geoffrey le M.
Margesson, Capt. Rt. Hon. H. D. R.
Marsden, Commander Arthur
Martin, Thomas B.
Mayhew, Lieut.-Colonel John
Mills, Sir Frederick (Leyton, E.)
Mitchell, Harold P.(Br'tf'd & Chisw'k)
Molson, A. Hugh Elsdale
Monsell, Rt. Hon. Sir B. Eyres
Muirhead, Major A. J.
Nation, Brigadier-General J. J. H.
Nicholson, Godfrey (Morpeth)
Nicholson, Rt. Hn. W. G. (Peters'fld)
Normand, Wilfrid Guild
North, Captain Edward T.
Nunn, William
O'Connor, Terence James
Oman, Sir Charles William C.
Ormsby-Gore, Rt. Hon. William G. A.
Palmer, Francis Noel
Patrick, Colin M.
Peake, Captain Osbert
Pearson, William G.
Perkins, Walter R. D.
Peters, Dr. Sidney John
Petherick, M.
Peto, Geoffrey K. (W'verh'pt'n, Bilst'n)
Pownall, Sir Assheton
Raikes, Henry V. A. M.
Ramsay, Capt. A. H. M. (Midlothian)
Ramsay, T. B. W. (Western Isles)
Ramsbotham, Herwald
Ramsden, Sir Eugene
Ray, Sir William
Rea, Walter Russell
Reed, Arthur C. (Exeter)
Reid, Capt. A. Cunningham-
Rhys, Hon. Charles Arthur U.
Robinson, John Roland
Ropner, Colonel L.
Ross, Ronald D.
Ross Taylor, Walter (Woodbridge)
Runciman, Rt. Hon. Walter
Runge, Norah Cecil
Russell, Alexander West (Tynemouth)
Russell, Richard John (Eddisbury)
Rutherford, Sir John Hugo (Liverp'l)
Salmon, Sir Isidore
Salt, Edward W.
Samuel, Sir Arthur Michael (F'nham)
Samuel, Rt. Hon. Sir H. (Darwen)
Sandeman, Sir A. N. Stewart
Sassoon, Rt. Hon. Sir Philip A. G. D.
Savery, Samuel Servington
Selley, Harry R.
Shakespeare, Geoffrey H.
Shaw, Helen B. (Lanark, Bothwell)
Shute, Colonel J. J.
Smiles, Lieut.-Col. Sir Walter D.
Smith, Bracewell (Dulwich)
Smith, Sir Jonah W. (Barrow-in-F.)
Smith-Carington, Neville W.
Smithers, Waldron
Somerville, Annesley A. (Windsor)
Sotheron-Estcourt, Captain T. E.
Southby, Commander Archibald R. J.
Spencer, Captain Richard A.
Spender-Clay, Rt. Hon. Herbert H.
Stanley, Lord (Lancaster, Fylde)
Stanley Hon. O. F. G. (Westmorland)
Stewart, J. H. (Fife, E.)
Stones, James
Storey, Samuel
Strauss, Edward A.
Strickland, Captain W. F.
Sueter, Rear-Admiral Murray F.
Sutcliffe, Harold
Tate, Mavis Constance
Thomas, Rt. Hon. J. H. (Derby)
Thomas, James P. L. (Hereford)
Thompson, Luke
Titchfield, Major the Marquess of
Todd, Capt. A. J. K. (B'wick-on-T.)
Todd, A. L. S. (Kingswinford)
Touche, Gordon Cosmo
Tryon, Rt. Hon. George Clement
Turton, Robert Hugh
Vaughan-Morgan, Sir Kenyon
Wallace, Captain D. E. (Hornsey)
Wallace, John (Dunfermline)
Ward, Lt.-Col. Sir A. L. (Hull)
Ward, Irene Mary Bewick (Wallsend)
Ward, Sarah Adelaide (Cannock)
Warrender, Sir Victor A. G.
Waterhouse, Captain Charles
Watt, Captain George Steven H.
Wayland, Sir William A.
Wedderburn, Henry James Scrymgeour-
Wells, Sydney Richard
Weymouth, Viscount
White, Henry Graham
Whiteside, Borras Noel H.
Williams, Herbert G. (Croydon, S.)
Wills, Wilfrid D.
Wilson, Clyde T. (West Toxteth)
Windsor-Clive, Lieut.-Colonel George
Winterton, Rt. Hon. Earl
Womersley, Walter James
Wood, Rt. Hon. Sir H. Kingsley
Wood, Sir Murdoch McKenzie (Banff)
Young, Rt. Hon. Sir Hilton (S'v'oaks)

TELLERS FOR THE AYES.—Sir Frederick Thomson and Sir George Penny.

NOES.

Adams, D. M. (Poplar, South)
Attlee, Clement Richard
Banfield, John William
Batey, Joseph
Brown, C. W. E. (Notts., Mansfield)
Buchanan, George
Cocks, Frederick Seymour
Cove, William G.
Daggar, George
Davies, David L. (Pontypridd)
Dobbie, William
Edwards, Charles
Grenfell, David Rees (Glamorgan)
Grundy, Thomas W.
Hall, F. (York, W.R., Normanton)
Hall, George H. (Merthyr Tydvil)
Hirst, George Henry
Lansbury, Rt. Hon. George
Logan, David Gilbert
Lunn, William
Macdonald, Gordon (Ince)
McEntee, Valentine L.
Maclean, Neil (Glasgow, Govan)
Maxton, James
Parkinson, John Allen
Price, Gabriel
Tinker, John Joseph
Williams, David (Swansea, East)
Williams, Edward John (Ogmore)
Williams, Dr. John H. (Llanelly)
Williams, Thomas (York, Don Valley)

TELLERS FOR THE NOES.—Mr. John and Mr. Groves.

STANDING ORDERS.

Resolution reported from the Select Committee;

"That in the case of the Salford Corporation Bill [Lords], Petition for additional Provision, the Standing Orders ought to be dispensed with:—That the parties be permitted to insert their additional Provision if the Committee on the Bill think fit."

Resolution agreed to.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE (SCOTLAND) BILL,

"to amend the law of Scotland relating to the Court of Session and procedure therein, to the appointment of officers in the said court and the High Court of Justiciary, to criminal jury trials and to the sheriffs and procedure in the sheriff court, and with regard to law agents' fees; and for purposes connected therewith," presented by the Lord Advocate; supported by Sir Godfrey Collins, the Solicitor-General for Scotland, and Mr. Skelton; to be read a Second time upon Tuesday next, and to be printed. [Bill 71.]

SELECTION (STANDING COMMITTEES).

Standing Committee A.

Mr. William Nicholson reported from the Committee of Selection; That they had discharged the following Member from Standing Committee A: Sir Mervyn Manningham-Buller; and had appointed in substitution: Sir Alfred Law.

Report to lie upon the Table.

WRITTEN ANSWERS.

EDUCATION.

Teachers (Unemployment).

Mr. E. EVANS asked the Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Education how many men and women teachers, respectively, left the training colleges and university training departments in 1932; and how many if these men and women, respectively, had failed to obtain employment as teachers by 28th February, 1933?

Mr. RAMSBOTHAM: Of the 2,637 men and 5,613 women who left training colleges and university training departments in 1932, those reported by the authorities as having failed to obtain employment as teachers by 31st December last numbered, respectively, 358 and 742. No later figures are yet available.

Establishments of Teachers.

Colonel CHAPMAN asked the Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Education what is the approved establishment of teachers for each Part III authority for the year 1933-34 under Article 11 of the Code; and what is the number of children in average attendance per teacher for each authority based upon the average attendance for the year ended 31st March, 1932?

Mr. RAMSBOTHAM: The establishments of teachers proposed by local education authorities for the year 1933-34, under Article 11 of the Code, are still under consideration by the Board. My Noble Friend regrets that he is therefore not at present in a position to furnish the information asked for in the question.

TRADE AND COMMERCE.

Bacon and Hams (Imports).

Sir J. HASLAM asked the Minister of Agriculture if, seeing that while Denmark carried out her agreement under the bacon import quota system during the month of January last by reducing her exports to this country by about 150,000 cwts., the combined quota was exceeded by 63,302 cwts., he will give the House a list of the countries which infringed the quota agreement during the month of January last, stating the individual amount by which each country exceeded its quota; and what steps he proposes to take to prevent a recurrence of such infringements in the future?

Major ELLIOT: I would remind my hon. Friend that the arrangements under which the chief bacon exporting countries have reduced their exports of bacon and hams to this country since 23rd November last are purely voluntary. Moreover, it was agreed that the countries concerned should be free to make minor adjustments in shipments as between one month and another. The arrangements are continuing, but a statement is attached explaining the position and showing anticipated shipments and actual imports during the full initial period of three months from 23rd November. I am satisfied that the countries concerned have endeavoured to limit their shipments to the quantities arranged in the course of the negotiations, and I should like to take this opportunity of publicly expressing, on behalf of His Majesty's Government, our appreciation of their helpful co-operation.

Following is the statement:

Imports of bacon and ham in the month of January from those countries which are parties to the voluntary agreement to restrict their imports, amounted to 873,387 cwt. They thus exceeded the total monthly figure of 817,680 cwt. agreed upon by 55,707 cwt. It should be borne in mind, however, that the periods to which the agreed maximum monthly import figures apply run from the 23rd of one month to the 22nd of the next and that there is no undertaking to spread deliveries evenly over the period. Imports may be below the agreed rate in one week and above it in others, provided the maximum is not exceeded over the whole period. This actually occurred in the period 23rd December to 22nd January. Imports in the week ending 27th December were very low and in the following week—part of which fell in January—were exceptionally high. The calendar month of January thus received a higher import figure than it otherwise would. On the other hand, during the five weeks ended 24th January, which broadly correspond with the second month of the restriction agreement, imports from the countries concerned were 932,360 cwt., or about 11,000 cwt. less than the maximum, on the basis of the voluntary agreement, which, allowing for the extra four days, would be 943,475 cwt. Moreover, in the first three months of the agreement (the 13 weeks ended 21st February) imports from the countries concerned were 2,391,411 cwt. This is 61,629 cwt. (or 2½ per cent.) less than the maximum agreed upon.

Anticipated and actual imports during these three months from each of the countries concerned have been as follow:

Country.	Anticipated shipments during period 23rd November, 1932, to 22nd February, 1933.	Actual gross imports during 13 weeks ended 21st February, 1933.†	Excess or deficit of gross imports compared with anticipated shipments.
	cwt.	cwt.	cwt.
Argentine*	18,240	23,355	+ 5,115
Denmark	1,518,000	1,484,722	—33,278
Estonia	21,600	19,951	— 1,649
Finland	13,200	9,917	— 3,283
Latvia	12,000	11,273	— 727
Lithuania	135,000	134,151	— 849
Netherlands	247,200	267,985	+20,785
Poland	240,000	247,305	+ 7,305
Sweden	115,800	67,346	—48,454
U.S.A.	120,000	116,380	— 3,620
U.S.S.R.	12,000	9,026	— 2,974
Total	2,453,040	2,391,411

* It was understood that special circumstanes would prevent the Argentine from limiting shipments to the negotiated quantity during the initial period

† The figures in this column make no allowance for small quantities of bacon re-exported.

Irish Free State Dairy Produce (Import).

Mr. McGOVERN asked the President of the Board of Trade the total value of dairy produce imported into this country from the Irish Free State from the passing of the Import Duties Act to 1st March, 1933, and for a similar period in the previous year?

Mr. RUNCIMAN: I am having a statement prepared which I will circulate in the OFFICIAL REPORT as soon as possible.

BUTTER MARKING ORDER (CONTRAVENTION).

Mr. PERKINS asked the President of the Board of Trade what inquiries he has made with regard to complaints of the mixing of Russian butter with Empire butter by wholesale butter merchants and of this mixture being sold as Empire butter; and what steps he proposes to take?

Major ELLIOT: I have been asked to reply. The sale of mixtures or blends of foreign and Empire butter as "Empire" is a contravention of the Butter Marking Order made under the Merchandise Marks Act, 1926, the power to enforce which rests with local authorities. I am sending a copy of the Order to my hon. Friend, and if he will let me have any definite information as to contraventions of the Order referred to, I will see that it is passed to the local authority concerned.

HOUSING.

Town Planning (Chingford).

Mr. HICKS asked the Minister of Health in view of the request made to him by the local authority to vary the Chingford town planning scheme by allocating land to be used for private dwellings for a factory extension what steps he intends to take to protect the residents from the diversion of neighbouring land to uses other than those originally specified?

Mr. McENTEE asked the Minister of Health whether he is aware that the Chingford Council has permitted land scheduled for residential purposes to be used for the extension of a laundry; that there is resentment on the part of local residents against the council's infringement of its scheme; and what action he proposes to take?

Sir H. YOUNG: The question of the extension of the laundry referred to arose on an objection by the owner to the Chingford town planning scheme when deposited as proposed to be approved, and after careful review of the objection and the representations of neighbouring owners I came to the conclusion that the extension of the laundry (which was in existence before the commencement of the scheme) could not fairly be prevented.

Schemes (Direct Labour).

Mr. MUNRO asked the Minister of Health how many applications he has received from local authorities for sanction to the erection by direct labour of housing schemes since 1st January, 1932; and how many such applications have been approved?

Sir H. YOUNG: I regret that figures in the form desired by my hon. Friend are not available. Since the date in question 46 local authorities in England and Wales have commenced house building operations by direct labour.

ENTERTAINMENTS DUTY.

Mr. KIRKWOOD asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer the amount collected for Entertainments Duty for the year ended 7th November, 1931, and for the year ended 5th November, 1932; and what proportion of the amount collected for the year ended 5th November, 1932, was from admission prices, including tax, of 7d. and under?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN: The net amount of Entertainments Duty collected during the years ended 31st October, 1931, and 31st October, 1932 (the nearest dates for which figures are available), was £6,808,000 and £9,335,000, respectively. I am afraid that the information desired in the second part of the question cannot be given, as detailed statistics of Entertainments Duty at the various prices of admission are not available.

Mr. KIRKWOOD asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will have inquiry made into the falling off in attendances at the cinemas throughout the country as a result of the reimposition of Entertainments Duty as at November, 1931, on prices of admission of 6d. and under, and the resulting loss of revenue?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN: I am afraid that I have no means of obtaining the information desired by the hon. Member.

GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS (EX-SERVICE MEN).

Captain McEWEN asked the Financial Secretary to the Treasury what is the number of P-class and S-class men promoted to the clerical classes in each Department from 1st April, 1932, to 28th February, 1933?

Mr. HORE-BELISHA: I would refer my hon. and gallant Friend to the answer given on 13th March to the hon. Member for Westhoughton (Mr. Rhys Davies) in which it was explained that, in the interests of economy, statistics of this character are now compiled in respect of 12 months ending on 31st March of each year. As soon as figures are available, I will forward my hon. Friend information as to the number of promotions authorised during the 12 months ending 31st March, 1933.

GERMANY (BRITISH SUBJECTS).

Colonel WEDGWOOD asked the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs what steps the Government are taking to protect our nationals in Germany, especially Indians and Jews; and whether he has any further news as to Mr. Nambiar and Mrs. Naidu's son?

Mr. BALDWIN: As regards the safety of British subjects in Germany, I would refer the right hon. Gentleman to the answers given by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in reply to the question put by the hon. Member for East Aberdeen (Mr. Boothby) and to supplementary questions on 1st March. As regards Mr. Naidu, the hon. Member for Limehouse (Mr. Attlee) was informed on 9th March that he had been released. As regards Mr. Nambiar, who is still under arrest, His Majesty's Ambassador at Berlin continues to communicate with the competent German authorities; but he has been informed by them that a large quantity of Communist subversive propagandist literature has been found among Mr. Nambiar's papers.

INDIA.

SIKH PRISONERS.

Mr. McGOVERN asked the Secretary of State for India if he is aware of the fact that 54 Sikh organisations have submitted resolutions to the Punjab Government urging the immediate release of Baba Chuhar Singh, a prisoner of the 1914-15 conspiracy case, who was on hunger strike lately in the old Multan central gaol; and what steps have the Government taken in the matter?

Sir S. HOARE: I am aware that there has recently been a certain amount of agitation for the release of Sikh prisoners sentenced to transportation for life by special tribunals in 1914 and 1915. So far as I am aware, no action has been taken by Government in the matter.

DR. MOHAMAD ALAM (PASSPORT).

Mr. McGOVERN asked the Secretary of State for India if he is aware that Dr. Mohamad Alam, vice-chairman of the Lahore Bar Association, ex-president of the Punjab National Congress, and a civil disobedience prisoner lately released from gaol, now the president-elect of the Indian Congress in East Africa, is refused a passport for Kenya by the Punjab Government on the grounds of his conviction; and, as civil disobedience is a political offence and involves no moral turpitude, is he prepared to direct the granting of a passport?

Sir S. HOARE: I have received no information regarding any refusal of a passport to Dr. Mohamad Alam. The matter is one for the discretion of the authorities in India and I am content to leave it in their hands. I may add that the grant or refusal of passports in India does not depend on considerations of moral turpitude.

OFFICERS TRAINING CORPS.

Mr. L. SMITH asked the Financial Secretary to the War Office the strength of the Officers Training Corps at the present time, and in particular at the universities, as compared with 1932, 1931, and 1930?

Mr. COOPER: The strength of the Officers Training Corps (excluding permanent staff) on 1st October, 1932, which is the latest date for which figures are available, was:—Senior Division, 163 officers, 4,481 cadets; Junior Division, 618 officers, 27,163 cadets. The corresponding figures for the preceding three years were:

—	Senior Division.		Junior Division.
	Officers.	Cadets.	Officers.	Cadets.
1931 ...	184	4,484	657	32,963
1930 ...	184	4,461	677	34,624
1929 ...	165	4,452	680	34,581

PRISON SERVICE.

Mr. G. NICHOLSON asked the Home Secretary the number of applications received by the Department from prison officers in the London prisons for transfers to provincial prisons during the year ending 31st December, 1932, and the alleged reasons for these applications?

Sir J. GILMOUR: There were 19 such applications during this period. Five were on grounds of health, five to be nearer to relatives, three to take up work in Borstal institutions, two to take up work in convict prisons, two on account of failure to secure suitable accommodation in London, and two from officers who had failed to qualify for promotion and desired a change of prison.

ROAD PASSENGER VEHICLES, DURHAM (FARES).

Mr. LAWSON asked the Minister of Transport whether the Northern Commissioner had access to the books of the companies operating in Durham; and whether he used such opportunity before he allowed the recent increases of fares?

Mr. STANLEY: In regard to the information which is required to be furnished in support of an application made to the commissioners in any particular case, discretion rests with the commissioners and I have no jurisdiction except in the event of an appeal against their decision being made to me under the provisions of the Road Traffic Act, 1930.

UNEMPLOYMENT (NEATH AND PONTARDAWE).

Sir W. JENKINS asked the Minister of Labour the number wholly unemployed, the number temporarily stopped, and in casual work for the Neath Employment Exchange area and the Pontardawe Employment Exchange area for 1929, 1930, 1931, 1932, and up to the last available date?

Sir H. BETTERTON: The following table gives the information desired:

Unemployed persons on the registers of the Neath and Pontardawe Employment Exchanges.

Date.	Wholly Unemployed.	Temporarily Stopped.	Normally in Casual employment.	Total.
	Neath.
25th February, 1929	2,768	1,641	—	4,409
24th ,, 1930	2,346	1,547	30	3,923
23rd ,, 1931	3,511	3,929	15	7,455
22nd ,, 1932	3,001	2,586	4	5,591
20th ,, 1933	3,405	1,895	4	5,304
	Pontardawe.
25th February, 1929	280	351	—	631
24th ,, 1930	154	623	—	777
23rd ,, 1931	628	831	—	1,459
22nd ,, 1932	379	699	—	1,078
20th ,, 1933	610	509	—	1,119

SEVERN BARRAGE SCHEME.

Mr. CLARRY asked the Minister of Transport if he has given consideration to the committee's report on the Severn barrage scheme; and what steps he now contemplates in connection therewith?

Mr. STANLEY: I would refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on Tuesday last to a similar question by my hon. Friend the Member for the Hallam Division of Sheffield (Mr. L. Smith).

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

SUPPLY.

NAVY ESTIMATES, 1933.

SIR BOLTON EYRES MONSELL'S STATEMENT.

Order for Committee read.

3.59 p.m.

The FIRST LORD of the ADMIRALTY (Sir Bolton Eyres Monsell): I beg to move, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair."

The announcement that the Navy Estimates this year are increased by £3,093,700 has aroused both hopes and fears, hopes in those who, believing in a strong Navy, believe that the deficiencies in the Navy are immediately to be made good, fears in others of some departure from our Treaty limitations. There is no justification for those hopes or fears. As the House of Commons well knows, we are building to a rigid programme, of which this is the fourth instalment, and the increase of a little over £3,000,000 is almost entirely automatic, and, except for new construction, does not fully meet all the potential needs of the Navy. Of this total of £3,093,700, no less a sum than £2,355,360 is required in order to make normal progress—and normal progress only—with new construction. Last year, 1932, we saved temporarily about £2,000,000 by adopting the expedient of postponing the 1931 programme for nearly six months. A similar postponement this year of the 1932 Programme would be quite impossible, and, as the House of Commons will see from that fact alone, the increase this year is bound to be £2,000,000. But that is not all. By postponing the 1931 Programme last year, we pushed the highest point of the curve in the expenditure on the Programme into this year, and so we have, in addition to the £2,000,000, an extra expenditure of £500,000 which has been pushed into this year's Estimate. Those two sums make up the automatic increase for new construction.

If we take that amount for new construction from the total increase in this year's Estimates, I have left to account for a sum of £738,340, and it is very easy to account for that. Votes 13 and 14—what we call the Non-Effective Votes, which deal with pensions of both officers and men—are on the up-grade. They have been increasing for some time, and they will go on increasing for some time. Unfortunately, they have increased this year by the sum of £285,367 gross. Then, on the other side of our balance sheet, Appropriations-in-Aid—things that help us—are down. They were down last year considerably, and they are still more down this year by a sum of £346,566. It is quite easy to explain the reduction this year. It is due generally to the prevalent state of trade. We cannot get charters for our oil tankers; and old ships and scrap in general are fetching a very small sum. But the House will see that these two large increases in the Estimates — in Appropriations-in-Aid and Non-Effective Votes—about which I have just spoken, are entirely beyond the control of the Admiralty.

There is only one other increase, and that is in the Fleet Air Arm. As in 1932, we are taking no new flight in the Fleet Air Arm, but two of the existing flights are in such a bad state that it is quite imperative to re-engine them with air-cooled engines. If we did not do that, it would not be safe to let pilots fly in them. The increase in the Estimate for the Fleet Air Arm of £64,000 is more than accounted for by these engines. Apart from these increases, £42,407 is all that I have got left to account for, and that sum appears under the general head of Maintenance. I pointed out last year that certain economies which we had taken in the Fleet and in Naval establishments could not be repeated without making serious inroads into the efficiency and, indeed, even the strength of the Fleet itself, and this year, so far as the small balance permits, I have made the best provision possible for such things as training reserves, which we had temporarily to abandon altogether last year, and an increase of expenditure in certain stores, more especially oil fuel for the Fleet, which is most important, as the Fleet was being crippled for want of action. We have also taken more money to make up arrears in certain works of paramount importance.

I should like the House to understand that if it had not been for certain automatic reductions which we have had, such as the decrease in the price of stores and the real co-operation of the whole Navy, both afloat and in shore establishments, in helping us to economise, the Estimates would have had to be considerably greater than those I am presenting to-day. Since these Estimates were presented, we have heard a certain amount of criticism about the increase. No doubt we shall hear a great deal more, but I should like to point out to the House—no doubt it knows full well already—that the people who always deny us the right to an adequate national defence are precisely the same people who internationally are always clamouring for sanctions, for blockades, for wars to end war. They always profess to be worshipping the Goddess of Peace, but, to my mind, their real deity is an ancient heathen god of Wrath and Vengeance. But if these bloodthirsty pacifists, as I might call them, ever get their way, which God forbid, let the country realise what part the British Navy would be called upon to play in any form of castigation they wished to inflict. The First Lord of the Admiralty of the day, standing at this Box, would not be asking for an increase of £3,000,000, but for a sum of money that would well-nigh break the heart of the British taxpayer. Do not think I am not sorry for the British taxpayer, but I should like the British taxpayer to take some comfort from the fact that nearly the whole of the increased sum for new construction this year is going in wages. It is going in wages to people in this country. It is going in wages to those craftsmen whose combined skill produces ships. They have had a very hard time lately. They are people we cannot possibly do without, because their skill and the skill of their forbears has been largely responsible for the growth and development of our maritime Empire.

The 1933 programme is, as I have said, a normal replacement programme, the fourth of its series. I have given some account of it in my printed Statement to the Navy Estimates, and all that I will add to it now, for the information of the House, is where these ships are to be built, which is always interesting to Members of dockyard towns and those who have private shipyards in their constituencies. Of the four new cruisers, Portsmouth will have one, Devonport will have a cruiser and a sloop, Chatham will have one sloop and one submarine, and the rest will go to private contract. One of the cruisers will be in replacement of His Majesty's Australian ship "Brisbane," and the question of the replacement of the "Brisbane" is under discussion with the Commonwealth of Australia at the present time. Before I leave the subject of the programme, it may interest the House to be told the names of some of the ships of the 1932 programme, orders for which have all been placed. The principles to which I referred last year have been adhered to. The two larger cruisers will be named the "Apollo" and "Phaeton," and the smaller cruiser the "Galatea." The flotilla leader will be called the "Faulknor." The destroyers will have the names of "Forester," "Fury," "Fearless," "Foresight," "Foxhound," "Fortune," "Fame" and "Firedrake." The submarines will be called the "Clyde," the "Grampus" and the "Salmon," and the sloops will be named the "Lowestoft," the "Wellington," the "Harrier" and the "Hussar."

I now turn to administration, which, I confess, is of more interest to me at the moment than the programme, because it is not yet restricted by any international obligation, and I wish to tell the House of some economies in the naval service which we have been able to effect, and I hope that those economies will not be without general interest in themselves. The first economy we have made, I am sure many hon. Members will be pleased to hear, is in the Admiralty itself—the staff. It is what we call the "merger." During last year we carried out a reorganisation of the staff which combines efficiency with a considerable saving in salaries, and I am sure the House will agree with me that this is a dual achievement which is as rare as it is welcome in any administration.

Until 100 years ago the civil administration of the Admiralty was in the hands of independent authorities. One of those authorities was the famous old Navy Office. All those authorities were located in Somerset House, and were entirely independent of the Board of Admiralty. Many people saw the disadvantages of this state of affairs, but it was left to a man called Sir James Graham, who became First Lord of the Admiralty in 1830, to take what was no doubt then very drastic action. He brought all these civil departments under the authority at Whitehall of the Board of Admiralty, and so there grew up five departments directly under the authority of the Board of Admiralty. The only link which the Navy now retains with Somerset House is the Naval emblem on that building which hon. Members can see as they pass by. One of these Departments, that of the Accountant-General, maintained an honourable, and, in some ways, separate existence for nearly 100 years, for it was only last year that we merged the Accountant-General's Department with that of the Department of the Secretary of the Admiralty, who was made Chief Financial Officer and Accounting Officer for Navy purposes in 1921. The effect has been to simplify and improve the organisation a great deal. But it has done more than that. It has effected a substantial saving in staff and salaries, and I hope that we shall save in a full year by this means £10,000. This has been done by avoiding some overlapping, which was taking place between the Secretary's Department and that of the Accountant-General. One of the most illustrious officials of the old Navy Office was the first man to call attention to such overlapping. On 5th April, 1668, which happened to be Lord's Day, Mr. Pepys made the following entry in his diary:

[Sir B. Eyres Monsell.]

"Dined at home, with W. Hewer with me; and after dinner he and I a great deal of good talk touching this office"— that is, the Navy Office—

"how it is spoiled by having so many persons in it, and so much work that is not made the work of any one man, but of all, and so is never done."

I commend that to hon. Gentlemen who like looking at the Admiralty Vote.

"And that the best way to have it well done, were to have the whole trust in one, as myself, to set whom I pleased to work in the several businesses of the office, and me to be accountable for the whole . . . .; but this is not to be compassed."

Perhaps Mr. Pepys was right; and it never could be entirely "compassed," but I cannot help thinking that if Mr. Pepys could have made an entry in his diary to-night he would have said that he was "mighty content" with what we have done.

The next thing I wish to speak about is Dartmouth. Some months ago reports appeared in the Press that Dartmouth College was to be abolished. We immediately took steps to contradict the rumour, because I for one am convinced that we should never get a sufficient number of cadets of the right calibre in any other way. The only criticism aimed against Dartmouth which I thought had some force in it was the one directed against the cost of Dartmouth, so I set to work to reduce the cost and undermine that argument as best I could. I have succeeded so far that we have reduced the cost of Dartmouth by 20 per cent., a very considerable achievement. I hope and believe that it is being done without any loss of efficiency. I should be very sorry if Dartmouth lost any of its efficiency. It is one of the very best educational establishments in this country. The chief reason for the high cost is the necessity of a dual staff—a naval staff and an instructional staff. We have made our principal economies in cutting down both. The first six terms at Dartmouth have been combined for instructional purposes. This means that we can have bigger classes and fewer instructors, and I am informed that the larger classes will by no means cause loss of efficiency.

Mr. COVE: What size are they?

Sir B. EYRES MONSELL: About 25. I am told that the benefit you get in larger classes from mass-thought and competition balances the loss you may have from the lack of individual instruction. I have been told that fact on very high authority. Another cause of the high expenditure at Dartmouth is that Dartmouth was constructed to take a far larger number of cadets than the Navy at present wants, so that the overhead charges are much too big. By increasing the number of cadets, of course, we could reduce the overhead charges, but at the moment we do not want to increase the number of cadets. We are considering whether it would not be desirable to open Dartmouth College, at a suitable fee, to a limited number of boys who do not intend to make the Navy a career. There is much to be said for and against this proposal, to which I am in no way committed. I should like the House to realise one or two points. I have heard a good many parents say that they would like their sons to get the really unique advantage of the education at Dartmouth so long as it was not necessary for them to make the Navy a career. I do not think that the small number taken could possibly upset the public schools. The fees to be charged would make no difference to the public schools, because they would not be lower than the fees charged by the highest class of public school. We have not the slightest intention of competing with the public schools or of offering to accept boys at such low fees as could only be possible in a Government establishment. There is no question of subsidies. Indeed, the main object, if we do this, will be to lessen the cost of Dartmouth to the public by spreading the overhead charges over a larger number.

Mr. LAMBERT: What number of boys?

Sir B. EYRES MONSELL: I have given the information to the House, and I should like it to be discussed and thoroughly thrashed out. I am in no way committed. This brings me to another matter which is extremely interesting, not only to the Navy, but to all parents who may consider putting their boys into the Navy. It is the policy in regard to the number of cadets entered every year in relation to their ultimate prospects of promotion—prospects which, I think, can and should be very greatly improved, compared with what they are at the present moment. Every great war creates a surplus of officers during the periods of reduction which are bound to follow, and for the last 14 years we have had, most regretfully, to retire a very large number of officers by special retirement schemes, always the worst part of the administration at the Admiralty. I want to draw the attention of the House to the new problem which has been created since the War, not ephemeral, but, on the contrary, one which will get worse if it is not tackled and tackled very soon. I refer to the serious change which has taken place in the proportion of junior to senior officers compared with what that proportion was only about 20 years ago. This is due, I think, almost entirely to the increased complexity of modern mechanism, and it has been thought necessary to have in ships almost double the number of lieutenant-commanders and lieutenants than was thought necessary 20 years ago solely in order to supervise important and often isolated stations in the ship in action. All this time there has been no proportional increase in the number of senior officers.

The alteration in the balance between junior and senior officers has had at least two very bad effects upon the Navy. The first is that midshipmen and sub-lieutenants, especially in the big ships, never get a chance of taking charge at all. To have so many lieutenants and lieutenant-commanders for certain action stations is all right, but for the multifarious duties of the ship there are far too many officers, and the consequence is that the senior officers take charge and the junior officers do not get a chance. Another consideration is that petty officers are far too much supervised in their work and never get a chance of showing any initiative. The second bad effect of the proportion between junior and senior officers is that the promotion prospects of junior officers have been seriously diminished lately. As a matter of fact, at the moment it is very good, but I want to make it a good deal better. Many deserving officers fail to get over the first big fence of promotion to commander. What does this mean? It means the man being put ashore at an age when he cannot possibly give up work but at an age when it is almost impossible to get another job. I am sure that this fact must have deterred a good many parents from sending their sons to the Navy. So we intend to restore a more reasonable balance between junior and senior officers.

We have already reduced the numbers of Lieut.-Commanders in the large ships, but we do not intend to carry this policy to such an extent that the livelihood of existing officers will be jeopardised. There is only one way of doing it, and that is, to start from the bottom and control the number of boys entering the Navy from Dartmouth, and making that number such that every Lieut.-Commander who approaches the top of his list and is fit for the rank of Commander shall stand a reasonable chance of promotion. This policy will have two great advantages. The Navy will provide a much better career for the individual, and greater efficiency will be obtained afloat by giving to the junior officers and petty officers their fair share of executive control.

Last year when I presented the Navy Estimates I pointed out certain defects under which, in the best opinion of the Navy, the Service was suffering. The three principal problems which I then put before the House were: First, the training of the individual—officer, petty officer and seaman—with the idea of instilling responsibility and leadership and developing talent; secondly, the question of promotion, especially the promotion of the junior officer; and thirdly, the changes that occur in the personnel of ships during the commission. These changes occur far too frequently, with the consequence that a ship never gets a chance of properly settling down, officers and men never get a chance of properly knowing each other, and we cannot get that thing that we envy so much in the Army—the "regimental feeling." So this was the diagnosis that I made last year of what might be called the defects of the Navy, and, after a year's experience, I see no reason to alter that diagnosis.

[Sir B. Eyres Monsell.]

I want to tell the House to-night some of the remedies that we have taken in the course of last year to try to cure these defects. I will first take the changes in personnel. This is no new question, this frequent change of men in ships. I discovered that I was bringing this question forward in very good company when I came across a letter written by Nelson, in which he said:

> "The disgust of the seamen to the Navy is all owing to the infernal plan of turning them over from ship to ship, so that men cannot be attached to their officers, or the officers care twopence about them."

I do not pretend that we have cured this evil in the course of the year. We have hardly touched the fringe of it, and I never expected that we should be able to cure it. I told the House last year that I thought that one of the chief troubles was that we were working on too narrow a margin of men; I mean, of men over and above those required to man ships. We are bound to have men on leave, men who are sick, men who are doing training, and men who are actually relieving crews out in China and all over the world. I warned the House last year that we should have to increase Vote A, and I said that it was a very serious affair. I have been somewhat taken to task by certain papers because Vote A is apparently to be reduced once more, and I must say that a look at the Navy Estimates would give you that idea. But it is not true. I think that everybody here who has served in the Navy knows that Vote A represents the highest number of men borne at any time in the year. The highest number last year was at the beginning of the year; the highest number this year will be at the end of the year. As a matter of fact, almost to-day we are at the lowest point of the curve to which Vote A has fallen since 1895. But almost from to-day it will start going up, and by the end of the year it will be increased by about 1,000 men. I could not do anything more than I have done. I could not do anything to touch Vote A until these Estimates came along, and in these Estimates we are entering the largest number of boys that our training establishments can hold; 2,500 boys as against an average of about 1,300 in the last four years. In addition to them we are entering 900 short-service seamen, as against an average of about 100 in the last four years. There is a special Motion dealing with this question of changes of personnel, which will be answered by my Noble Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, so I shall leave any more details of this question to that special Debate. But I wanted to take the first opportunity of correcting any wrong impression that Vote A was going downward, and to make the House realise that it is now on the upward grade.

I now come to promotions. Last year I had to give the House a very gloomy picture of the prospects of promotion for everybody in the Navy, owing to the great block at the top of the flag-list. The captains who were being promoted to rear-admiral were getting too old; the age was getting up too high. I am sure that the House will realise the importance of getting young and active admirals promoted to the flag-list. Further than that, however, the captains' list was getting so swollen that we actually had to foresee a time when it might be impossible for a year or half a year to promote any commanders to captain. If we had had to do that, it would have been a perfectly heartbreaking situation for junior officers in His Majesty's Navy. So I am glad to say to-day, a year afterwards, that the situation has changed entirely for the good. It is very surprising that the situation could have changed so quickly in a year's time. The improvement is almost entirely due to the voluntary retirements of six admirals, who gave up willingly their hopes and chances when they saw what a very bad state things were in with respect to promotion. They gave up these hopes and chances in order to facilitate the flow of promotion of junior officers. I hope that they will reap their reward for their unselfish, public-spirited and high-minded action when they see the result that they have been successful in bringing about. The first result is that captains are now, only a year afterwards, promoted to rear-admiral with 14 months' less seniority than they had. But, far more important than that, instead of foregoing a half-yearly batch of promotions from commander to captain, we have increased the number of promotions by approximately 25 per cent., and I have every hope and belief that that increase will continue. Of course, this is a great encouragement to junior officers.

The last thing about which I wish to speak is the question of the training of the individual. Last year I referred at considerable length to the training of the personnel of the Navy, and particularly to the idea of getting powers of leadership and command. To instil those qualities the younger you start the better. I am glad to be able to say that I have been down and seen one of the largest establishments for training boys, and there they are putting a very considerable proportion of their time into seamanship, boat-work and work of that sort. I was very surprised to see these youngsters, without any instructors, entirely on their own, taking charge of boats under sail and under oars in a most remarkably proficient way. In the large ships—and indeed in all ships in the Fleet—great attention is being given to seamanship training, to see that this work that boys get in their training establishments is carried on. It is more important to do it in the big ships, because the big ships are so insulated from the elements that the term "perils of the deep" means very much less to them than it does to the crews of destroyers or submarines, or to those who have to fly. A greater opportunity is being given to petty officers and leading seamen to take charge of their men, and I know one big ship where the officers are fallen out altogether and petty officers and leading seamen take entire charge of quite complicated evolutions.

We have made a big alteration in the examinations for petty officers. Formerly these examinations for leading seaman to petty officer were carried out in the candidate's own ship and the candidates were examined by their own officers. Now a squadron board is formed; it is called by the admiral in charge and is composed of officers from all over the squadron or Fleet. This gives a good deal more importance to the examination, but it also ensures absolutely fair treatment to all the candidates, because they are all examined under precisely the same conditions. I want the House to understand that this examination is a real test of the practical ability of a man to carry out the duties of a petty officer, and is much more than a mere test of his educational attainments.

I had hoped very much to ask leave of the House to build a ship—a sailing ship—for training purposes when I presented these Estimates. I am not doing so, because, apart from the question of finance, I found that a large number of senior officers in the Navy were opposed to this form of training. They advanced many practical objections, to which I can only oppose the arguments of a visionary. But the real question is this: the reintroduction of sail training into the Navy would be a radical change. If it is to be a success, it must not merely have acquiescence; it must be adopted with enthusiasm, and if it is not going to be adopted with enthusiasm I will not have it at all. What I said last year has, I know, raised great hopes among many officers in the Navy, and I know a great number who have given up their leave to go as hands in foreign sailing ships—because they cannot get into a British sailing ship—simply out of keenness and in order to train themselves for what they thought was coming. I do not apologise for having unduly raised their hopes, because I am quite sure that they will never regret the experience they have gained. Personally, I reaffirm my belief in sail training—not merely because it will teach a man to sail a ship, but because it will teach him seamanship; it will make him a seaman, and all that that implies. I wanted a sailing ship, above all, as a symbol of the fact that increased mechanisation must not blind us to the need of individual training. Even now, when my sailing ship has turned out to be a phantom and only the plans remain, I hope the Navy will never forget that every country can turn out mechanics but few can turn out sailors, and that it is owing to this fact that for a good many centuries we have borne the proud title of "Mistress of the Sea."

[Sir B. Eyres Monsell.]

4.46 p.m.

Mr. GEORGE HALL: The very pleasant manner in which the First Lord has introduced the Navy Estimates to-day—it is only a repetition of the manner in which he introduced the Estimates last year—makes it very difficult for the bloodthirsty pacifists on this side of the House to find fault with the bloodthirsty warmongers on the other side of the House. We have listened to a lucid, informative and interesting statement. The present Government are fortunate in having the right hon. Gentleman as First Lord and the Navy also is fortunate in having him in that position. He is able to bring not only the practical experience of a naval officer but also the experience of many years as an administrator to his task. He made his statement very interesting by his references to Mr. Pepys and Lord Nelson, and I wondered whether he was going to give us a few more secrets from the archives of the Admiralty.

We agree largely with what he has said regarding the training of men. I am pleased that he has taken up that matter. In regard to personnel the right hon. Gentleman warned the House last year as to his views regarding the shortage. May I ask him whether he is now satisfied with the numbers included under Vote A between now and the end of the year. I was expecting, as a result of the statement he made last November, that there was a possibility of a very substantial increase in the Estimates. We also agree with him in regard to the question of promotion; but this is a mixed blessing. It means retiring men who are quite capable of continuing their work, transferring them from the active list to the Non-Effective Vote. In the present Estimate there is no less than one-sixth of the amount of the Estimate included in the Non-Effective Vote, and, therefore, one can see what the retirement of these officers, at what may be regarded as an early age, is likely to cost the nation.

The First Lord said that the increase asked for has aroused hopes and fears. I feel that it has aroused fears; and also hopes. We are now discussing the third Estimate for the fighting services; and in my opinion the most important one. It is the most important not only because they are the Estimates of the Senior Service but also because they are almost as large as those for the Army and the Air Force put together. The increase in the Navy Vote this year is large as compared with the increase in the Army and Air Force Vote. The hopes we had were that now that the Admiralty and the other fighting services have returned, as indicated by the Estimates, to what may be regarded as their normal expenditure that the financial difficulty with which the country was confronted a year or so ago has now passed away.

Sir B. EYRES MONSELL indicated dissent.

Mr. HALL: The First Lord of the Admiralty shakes his head. I have before me a Memorandum on the measures proposed by His Majesty's Government to secure a reduction in national expenditure, and in order to deal with what we were told was a grave financial crisis I find that the reductions in the three Fighting Services, provided for in this Memorandum, amounted to a sum of not less than £8,600,000. These expectations have not been fulfilled. Cuts were imposed on the social services and were largely carried out; but that cannot be said for the three Fighting Services. As a matter of fact, instead of a reduction of £8,600,000 being carried out the amount of the reductions actually imposed were less than £3,000,000; and this year the increases in the Estimates for the three Fighting Services amount to no less than £4,581,000. The First Lord rightly said that there were fears. We look upon these Estimates with considerable fears. I have heard no criticisms from economists on the other side of the House. The attitude of back bench supporters of the Government can best be described in the words of a leading article which appeared in one of the London newspapers when these Estimates were presented. It said:

> "The publication of the Navy Estimates to-day reveals the fact that, as we anticipated, here again the economists have been disappointed. They come to £3,093,700 more than the Estimates of 1932. That causes us no pain. Of all the foolish directions in which economy can be applied this is perhaps the most foolish."

We do not share that view. We say that the Fighting Services, in common with all other Services, should submit to the reductions which were imposed. There is an increase of £4,581,000 in the Estimates of the three Services. Compare that with the position in 1931. In 1931 the expenditure, estimated for and carried out before the so-called financial crisis arose, upon the three Services amounted to £107,329,000. The Estimates which the House is asked to pass this year amount to £108,946,000. Therefore, within a very short time of the so-called financial difficulty, we find that the expenditure on the three Fighting Services has increased by £1,600,000, very little below the expenditure of 1930. The First Lord prefaced the statement on the Navy Estimates last year by saying that the amount asked for had been fixed with a strict reference to the needs of the financial situation and must not be regarded as an adequate provision for the needs of the Navy.

He has said almost exactly the same thing this afternoon. He said that the Navy Estimates have been restricted by the exigencies of the financial situation and do not provide for all the potential needs of the Navy. I am rather inclined to ask him whether he believes that. I have in mind not only the statement of the right hon. Gentleman this afternoon but also the statement made by Mr. Bridgeman when he was First Lord in 1929. The Estimates of that year amounted to £55,000,000, a reduction of £1,435,000 on the Estimates for 1928 and the right hon. Gentleman in his explanatory statement said:

> "This considerable reduction is being made although no diminution in the strengths of the Fleet and Fleet air arm has taken place. On the contrary, modern developments have shown the necessity for two additional flights of the latter.

These Estimates satisfied the then Conservative Government and the then First Lord of the Admiralty. The Estimates this afternoon amount to £2,417,000 more than the amount asked for in 1929, and when you examine Vote I and Vote II you find that the savings under these two heads amounts to more than the difference, the increase, in these Estimates as compared with the Estimates of 1929. I know that construction is engaging the attention of the First Lord, as it has engaged the attention of his predecessors for many years. If one examines Votes 8 and 9, the Votes which deal with construction, you will find that in 1929 the amounts under these two Votes compare very favourably with the amounts this year. If we take the two Votes for 1929, Vote 8 (Three Sections) and Vote 9, we find that the amount was £22,698,000. The amount of the two Votes in the present Estimate is £22,433,000, a reduction of £268,000. But that reduction is accounted for almost entirely by the reduction in wages paid to men who are now employed in the various dockyards.

I do not think that the First Lord can express any apprehension regarding the personnel for which he is providing in these Estimates or in regard to new construction. It cannot be said that the Navy, or in fact any of the fighting services, has suffered in any way whatever as a result of the so-called financial difficulty of last year. The First Lord and the Board of Admiralty are, after all, building almost entirely to what is provided for in the London Agreement, especially with regard to cruisers, though perhaps not with regard to destroyers and submarines. Is it necessary to lay down or to make provision for the laying down of the four cruisers provided for in these Estimates? My right hon. Friend, of course, will argue that we are to carry out the term of the London Agreement. I would ask whether the other signatories to that Agreement are carrying it out by building up to the limit. Taking into consideration the difficulties with which the nations are faced to-day, and having regard to the fact that the Disarmament Conference is still meeting in Geneva, would it not be a gesture to that Conference to have some relaxation regarding the laying down of these cruisers?

I expected that the First Lord would have given us some indication of the statement which has been made by the Prime Minister at Geneva to-day. We would like to know whether the attitude of the Government has changed in connection with this question. We must remember that we are now in the second year of the Disarmament Conference, a conference which was looked forward to with very high hopes for some years. At present the conference is just struggling on. The thought of that alone can have no other effect than as a shock to the minds of every representative of the 60-odd nations and the 1,700,000,000 people they represent. Here we are in a period of unparalleled misery, with millions of people in our own country and tens of millions throughout the world suffering from a want of the bare necessities of life. With the world passing through financial difficulties, here are the so-called civilised nations spending more on armaments than in any former time in history.

[Mr. Hall.]

For more than 12 months the Disarmament Conference has been sitting and has failed to produce any practical results. Far be it from me to suggest that the Government of this country are alone responsible for the situation, but I am of opinion that no great Power can repudiate some measure of responsibility for the deplorable disappointment of the high hopes with which the conference started. The Prime Minister and the Foreign Secretary are making an attempt to save the conference. I do not know whether their hands are strengthened as a result of the increase in the Estimates of the three fighting services in this country. I doubt whether that can be so. We fear that the nations of the world are falling back to their old war mentality. The old fears, the old superstitions regarding security, are returning, and the same kind of argument which was familiar before 1914 has returned and is used quite unashamedly in 1933.

If the position could be approached as a question of international agreement was approached at the time of the Washington Conference, which was after all the first disarmament conference, what a wonderful result could be obtained. The Washington Conference resulted in 70 battleships being scrapped, some of them old, some of them in the course of construction and some on which 90 per cent. of the work had been completed. The total tonnage to be scrapped was 1,770,000, which saved the nations no less than £400,000,000. When the Disarmament Conference last year was in danger of breaking down some proposals were submitted by the then President of the United States. In our opinion His Majesty's Government have not yet given an effective reply to those proposals of ex-President Hoover. In the course of his speech in November of last year the First Lord of the Admiralty did refer to those proposals, but he simply reiterated what was then the attitude of the Government—that there could be no reduction in the number of capital ships and no reduction in the number of cruisers.

Sir B. EYRES MONSELL: In the size.

Mr. HALL: There was a proposal to reduce the size, but that was when we came to the replacements. Nothing could be done regarding the number of capital ships which we had, or the number of cruisers which we were entitled to build under the London Agreement. Has the attitude of the Government regarding capital ships changed since the London Conference was held in 1930? During that conference the Prime Minister and the Government dealt in a memorandum with the question of capital ships. The Government said that in view of its tremendous size and cost the battleship was of doubtful utility, and that the Government would wish to see an agreement by which the battleship would in due time disappear altogether from the fleets of the world. That was the view of the Board of Admiralty and the Government at that time. Why should that expression of opinion not be carried out?

In the Hoover proposals did not the opportunity come to make some contribution to that end? Those proposals were made, as I have indicated, when it was thought that the conference could be saved, for had an agreement been reached it would have meant the scrapping of some of the larger ships. The 15 which were allowed to Great Britain would have been reduced to 10; the same thing applied to the United States; and the Japanese nine would have been reduced to six. The British Government have never explained why we should refuse to reduce the number of battleships by agreement with the United States and Japan, which alone is suggested. None of the other Powers, not even France or Italy, possessed post-Jutland battleships. The Government still insist upon the 15. The right hon. Gentleman has reminded me that he was prepared to reduce the size from 35,000 tons to 22,000 tons. I ask whether the figure of 15 is sacred and irreducible, and is the tonnage of 22,000 the lowest which the Admiralty can suggest?

The tonnage of battleships has a very striking history. A revolution has taken place not only in the growth of the tonnage of battleships and the calibre of guns, but since the War in a reduction of tonnage and the calibre of guns. In 1906 the then Sir John Fisher, afterwards Lord Fisher, introduced the "Dreadnought," with its 18,000 tons and 12-inch guns, and we thought that the limit had been reached; but increases gradually took place, and in 1920 we saw the battle cruiser "Hood," of 42,100 tons, which cost £6,000,000. By this time all the great Admiralties were hard at work designing the ideal ship in which the lessons of Jutland and other battles could be embodied. The right hon. Member for Sparkbrook (Mr. Amery), who during the earlier post-War years was at the Admiralty, said that a few hours of actual fighting were sufficient to revolutionise ideas as to the armament and design of battleships. The ships which were proposed about that time were those which, in the opinion of naval experts, were of such a size that they alone could provide security for the country.

Of what kind were those ships? The race had then begun. Japan proposed to build by 1928 two battleships of 33,000 tons, two of 40,600 tons, four of 45,000 tons, and two battle cruisers of 40,000 tons. The United States planned for the completion by 1925 of 12 ships of over 42,000 tons, whereas we in the autumn of 1921 proposed to lay down four battle cruisers of over 47,000 tons. Then the Washington Conference was held and limited the size of battleships to 35,000 tons. A strange thing happened. The lessons of the War, the few hours of actual fighting which would revolutionise ideas as to the armament and design of battleships, were found to be compatible with the idea of smaller and still smaller battleships. The 22,000 tons battleship now proposed by the Admiralty is, we think, an admirable proposal. But if 22,000 tons is the right size what are we to think of the "Nelson" and "Rodney," which are of 33,500 tons and cost about £7,000,000 each. Why should we not believe that the 22,000 ton battleship is the right size and not excessive?

The Conference of 1922 limited the capital ship to 35,000 tons. At the Geneva Conference in 1927 the British Government proposed that the maximum should be 30,000 tons, which meant a saving of 5,000 tons and of £1,000,000 of money. In 1930 the British Government were aiming at a maximum of 25,000 tons with an expression in favour of complete abolition. This year at Geneva 22,000 tons has become an acceptable figure. The latter part of the record is creditable to the British Admiralty since, with ratios fixed, it is showing an attempt to reduce the size and cost of future battleships. At the same time it can be argued that the waste of competitive battleships is discreditable to the Admiralties concerned if they cannot be limited to 22,000 tons, or as we trust a smaller figure. We stand where the Prime Minister said he was in 1930, just before the opening of the London Conference, in favour of getting rid of battleships.

Again, may I ask why the Government are adhering so rigidly to the number of battleships and other ships. I am not going into the difficulty which has arisen at the Disarmament Conference. We know the attitude of France, dependent as she is upon her submarines as a set-off against battleships. Italy has said that if the British Government scrap their capital ships, Italy is prepared to scrap her submarines and thus we see the battle going on. What we ask is that the British Government, through the Prime Minister and the Foreign Secretary, should make some gesture which would bring about results and save the Disarmament Conference. We on this side would be prepared to leave it to the Prime Minister and the Foreign Secretary if they would only carry out the principles to which the Prime Minister gave almost a lifetime of service until he joined the present Government. Not only the Prime Minister but the Foreign Secretary strongly advocated disarmament. We remember what the Foreign Secretary's opinion was regarding disarmament before he assumed that office. I recently read an article written by the right hon. Gentleman in which he said:

> "There has never been a time in the history of mankind when so many people were, in their hearts, convinced that military preparation leads only to war. They may think that armaments are inevitable but they know that they are futile. The ghastly fallacy that if you wish for peace you must prepare for war, has very few defenders to-day. The world has been taught better. What is the good of having guns to play with if they are never to be let off? What is the use of drilling soldiers if they never fight? "

[Mr. Hall.]

He then quoted some poetry:

> " How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds, > Makes ill deeds done! "

He went to to say:

> " We watch this piling up of the means of destruction but we know that instead of building a sure bulwark for peace, it is really assembling fuel for a conflagration even more terrible than the last."

If we felt that the Foreign Secretary and the Prime Minister had those words before them at Geneva this afternoon we would be quite content. To turn to the details of the Estimates, we are pleased to see that the First Lord in his Memorandum refers to the fact that a contract has been placed for a quantity of oil fuel produced from British coal. We think that this has come at an opportune time. For years among the warships of every kind controlled by the Admiralty only the two cruisers of the Australian Navy, the " Adelaide " and the " Brisbane," have been fitted to burn oil or coal. All the others are fitted as oil burners. In that respect this country stands alone. All the battleships of Japan, new or old, are fitted to burn either oil or coal and the same can be said of French and Italian battleships. In the Japanese Navy all cruisers completed before 1928, with the exception of three, were fitted to use either coal or oil, while some of the older cruisers are fitted to burn coal only. The same can be said of France and Italy. In the case of France some of the newer cruisers completed as late as 1930 are fitted to use oil or coal.

This year the Estimate for oil fuel is £1,012,000 or £67,000 more than a year ago, while the amount for steam vessel coal is £208,000 or £27,000 less than a year ago. Thus we see the gradual increase in the amount of oil fuel and the gradual decline of the coal which is being use for naval purposes. These figures will be painful reading to those interested in the coal-mining industry, especially miners who are unemployed. Unfortunately, so far from the Admiralty reconsidering the question of using coal, all other nations are following the example set by this country. From replies given by the First Lord regarding the quality of the oil, it appears to be indicated that this oil to which I have referred is doing its work quite satisfactorily. May I ask whether it is being tried alone or whether it is mixed in the proportion of 50-50 or of 25-75 or of 75-25 with naturally produced oil? May I also ask whether it is the intention of the Admiralty so to encourage production that we can look forward to a large development of this venture? I trust that it will be possible to obtain a substantial proportion of the oil required for naval purposes in this way even if a fixed price has to be given for a fixed period, so as to encourage a number of the other producing companies to send their oil along to the Admiralty. If that guarantee were given, it would be of considerable advantage to the coal-mining industry, the Navy would be less dependent on foreign oil, and it would not be to the loss of the nation.

In dealing with my next point I may be regarded as a little inconsistent but I wish to ask the Admiralty, seeing that there is no intention of reverting to coal, whether sufficient attention is being given to the use of internal combustion or Diesel engines. Reports from Germany indicate that the Germans are now placing these Diesel engines in all their new construction and that the installation of these engines means a reduction in personnel, that they give a very long range of action and tend to a general increase in efficiency. I should like whoever replies on the Estimates to deal with that point. The First Lord and the Board of Admiralty can regard themselves as very fortunate in that we see here a gradual reduction in Vote 10. Indeed, comparing Vote 10 in 1933 with Vote 10 in 1923, we find a reduction of almost one-third or nearly £1,000,000. In the Estimate for this year, out of the amount provided, no less than £588,000 is to be spent on Singapore. That, in itself, is £104,000 less than last year. Again, I say that my right hon. Friend and the Admiralty are fortunate in that this year we see the falling-in of the annuities which were being paid and which represented the amount borrowed under the old Naval Acts from 1905 onwards. It is interesting to know that all submarines are now equipped with the Davis submerged escape apparatus. May I ask whether all officers and ratings told off for submarines are being trained in the use of that apparatus?

Sir B. EYRES MONSELL indicated assent.

Mr. HALL: If so it is serving a very useful purpose. The First Lord in his statement referred to the fact that there was a large increase in the number of ships which it is proposed to put out to contract in private yards. We on this side do not regard that fact with very great happiness. During 1930-31 a number of destroyers were built in the yards. I understand from the statement of the First Lord that in the allocation of the new tonnage no destroyers are to be built in the Royal Dockyards but all are to be placed out under contract. It would be interesting to know the result of the experiment, if I may so describe it, which took place in 1930-1931 in the building of the destroyers in the yards. It would be interesting to have a comparison as regards cost. Is that why the First Lord or the Board have been so prompt to place all this new construction of destroyers in the private yards? Those who sit on these benches representing as we do a great movement in this country would welcome any agreement which could be brought about at the Disarmament Conference leading to a substantial reduction in armaments. We hope, nay we pray, that the efforts of the Prime Minister and the Foreign Secretary will be successful, for we are of opinion that only a world-wide movement for peace can provide a tolerable basis for the lives of men and women to-day and that the achievement of peace will prove to be one of the stepping stones to the salvation of mankind.

5.30 p.m.

Mr. LAMBERT: My hon. Friend the Member for Aberdare (Mr. G. Hall) concluded a very eloquent peroration with the expression of a desire for world peace. We all desire that peace shall reign in the world and that the Disarmament Conference shall succeed, but I am certain that my hon. Friend is much too fair a controversialist even to hint that the present Prime Minister is not thoroughly sincere in endeavouring to bring that Conference to success. The present Prime Minister, to his great honour, visited Washington on a somewhat similar mission some years ago, and I am sure that my hon. Friend is convinced in his own mind that the Prime Minister is really sincere in his efforts at Geneva to bring this Disarmament Conference to a success, as is the Foreign Minister also. I noticed that my hon. Friend, in dealing with this subject, had no constructive suggestions to put forward. I think that if there are two men capable of representing Britain at the Disarmament Conference, they could not be found more capable than the present Prime Minister and Foreign Secretary, and I am sure their heart is in their job. It is really a sad commentary on human folly that we are still talking of wars and preparations for wars, but the dangers which we escaped only a few years ago are very much too recent in our memories to permit us to risk failure to provide an adequate naval defence for our own country.

I regret, with the hon. Member, that there is to be an increase in the Navy Estimates, but the defence of this country is really the paramount question. I can see, as an old member of the Board of Admiralty, that there will be a considerable increase. My right hon. Friend has brought in additional new construction—I do not blame him—and additional personnel, and that is bound to be reflected in next year's Estimates. In dealing with my hon. Friend's arguments, I omitted to congratulate my right hon. Friend the First Lord, who is, as we all know, a fine, typical specimen of a splendid Service, on his opening speech. He talked about the heart of the British taxpayer being broken, but what we want in these matters is to be quite certain that the British taxpayer is getting value for his money, defensive value, for I do not think that under any Government the British Navy will be used as an offensive force, except when we are attacked; and I think the British public are willing to pay for that defence, providing they get their money's worth.

My right hon. Friend talked about the reduction in the Admiralty staff. If I might go back to the time when I was at the Admiralty, in July, 1914, when we were preparing for Armageddon, the naval personnel then, officers and men, was 146,000; the other day, in February, my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary told me the figure was 89,984. But the staff is very much greater, and I do not understand why. The Admiralty staff in July, 1914, when there were 146,000 officers and men of the Royal Navy, was 1,920; in February of this year it was 2,680. Why is there this increase of staff at the Admiralty? I have never been able to understand it. I have asked questions, but I have never got an explanation. If the proportions were the same as in 1914, of Admiralty staff to naval personnel, the staff, instead of being 2,680, would be 1,150. My hon. Friend gave me some figures about the out-port establishments, dockyards, and so on. In 1914 they were 69,284; now they are 64,122, although there has been this great decrease in the number of men afloat. Again I do not understand it. If the proportion was the same as in 1914, the dockyards and out-port establishments, instead of being 64,000, would be about 45,000.

[Mr. Lambert.]

Therefore, it seems to me that the Admiralty is keeping something like 20,000 men on the pay-rolls ashore. Is that giving us value for our money? Will these gentlemen in comfortable berths ashore add anything to the naval strength of the country? I can quite understand that my right hon. Friend has great difficulty in this matter. The Admiralty may be tender-hearted and may not care to exercise the pruning knife ruthlessly, but I would suggest that there might be a division in the Naval Estimates, that they should divide the humanitarian side from the defensive side, because it is unfair to put on the Naval Estimates money voted, say, to help the Unemployment Fund.

Having said that, I want to deal with another topic, and I will do so very generally, because all the time that I was at the Admiralty I knew nothing about the technical side of it, and never attempted to do so. There were far too many very able officers there who knew their job, but I am going to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty, Is there now co-operation between the forces, more especially between the Air Force and the Admiralty? That is, I think, extremely important. In the late war the Navy was supposed to have kept the ring. I remember that that phrase excited the late Lord Fisher tremendously; he was very angry about it. I want to ask, What are the co-ordinating links between the Air Ministry and the Admiralty? This new force is very formidable. Its development, of course, is only in its infancy, and we have seen what has happened in the last few years. The cruisers, destroyers, and submarines which my right hon. Friend is laying down are very much the same as they were a year or two ago, but the Air Force has made a tremendous advance, and I want to ask, What are the relations between the Admiralty and the Air Force? Do they meet? Is the Air Force consulted by the Admiralty?

Undoubtedly, in any future war—and one hates to talk about it or to think about it—the air must play a big part. I was much interested the other day to read of the mutiny that was quelled on a Dutch battleship by the dropping on it of one bomb. That is an enormous force. I quite understand that the right hon. Gentleman is thinking that that bomb was dropped and that the aeroplane was not fired at. That is true enough, but the very fact that the bomb was dropped on that ship, and that it brought the mutineers to book, is a very interesting commentary on the efficacy of aircraft. With regard to the Fleet Air Arm—and I am putting these questions in no spirit of hostility; I want to help—who designed the machines that belong to the Fleet Air Arm? Was it the Air Ministry or the Admiralty?

Sir B. EYRES MONSELL: The Air Ministry.

Mr. LAMBERT: I am glad to have that information, because that fact cannot be satisfactory. You have a double or a divided responsibility, which is absolutely disastrous. We know what it was in the great Battle of Jutland, when there was considerable recrimination between two admirals. I do not want to go into it, but they were both in one Service, and naval discipline controlled both, but in this matter of the Admiralty and the Fleet Air Arm, that the machines should be designed by the Air Force is wholly wrong. It cannot be right. I do not know anything of the relations between the two, and it would be out of order to make the suggestion, which I made some years ago, that the Air Force and the Admiralty should be amalgamated, but I do say that there should be the closest co-operation between the two. As I understand it, the connecting link is the Committee of Imperial Defence, but the Prime Minister is much too busy to co-ordinate the two. I notice that my right hon. Friend the Lord President of the Council has come in, and I do not know whether he undertakes that as his duty, but that it is important from the point of view of the country getting the best defensive value for its money, I am certain. Let us take the question of the protection of commerce, which has always been the responsibility of the Navy. In the future it is certain that aircraft will be very formidable as against merchant ships, and I want here again the closest co-operation to exist between the two Services.

May I ask a few questions about our naval bases? We have naval bases at both Chatham and Sheerness, and they are on the South Coast, and therefore within easy reach of aircraft from the Continent—within easier reach than other ports. Have the Admiralty considered this point? Have they asked the opinion, say, of the Air Ministry as to whether Chatham and Sheerness can be damaged almost irretrievably in time of difficulty? I am asking these questions because I want to know. These bases at Chatham and Sheerness are costing a great deal. Is it giving the nation fighting value for its money to keep two naval bases on the Southern coast, like Chatham and Sheerness, as close to the Continent as they can be, and has that been considered by the Admiralty and the Air Force? I can quite understand that the Admiralty would not care to shut up either Chatham or Sheerness. These towns have grown up round the Admiralty; I understand that perfectly. But there are greater considerations than that. There is the consideration of the safety of the country. Suppose our ships in time of difficulty—and I hate to think of this time of difficulty—are based upon Chatham and that is bombed, disorganised and possibly destroyed. Then it becomes a consideration for the safety of the country. Portsmouth may be open to bombing by aircraft, and I would ask if Portsmouth Dockyard, which is the principal dockyard, is defended by the Admiralty, the Army or the Air Force? I am simply asking these questions for information, because I am not a naval expert, but there are certain common sense principles that everyone can accept and I think that these questions require enlargement.

My hon. Friend opposite referred to the Singapore Base. In its inception I opposed it. It was commenced in 1921 and has had many vicissitudes, but the Board of Admiralty, backed by the Government of the day, have decided to build that base. What is to happen there? It is a very big base. In the Estimates this year there is a sum of £6,917,000 for the naval base itself. Then there is machinery £810,000 and furniture £23,000. That is a total Admiralty expenditure of £7,750,000. There has already been spent there on the oil fuel contract something like £1,000,000. I understand that the Jackson contract for the completion of the base is to be finished by 1935. That amounts to £5,100,000, and I do not know whether it includes the floating dock, £971,000. What are the plans of the Admiralty with regard to the future of Singapore? With regard to the Estimate of £810,000 for machinery, it is obvious that a base 8,000 miles away is valueless without machinery and without houses for the mechanics, and for the hundred and one things necessary for docking a battleship. Is it intended to erect this machinery and the other facilities for docking a battleship? Otherwise, this money will be wasted.

I was informed the other day that the Air Force had spent £521,000 at Singapore and the War Office £600,000. That brings us into commitments of capital expenditure of something like £10,000,000. Of course, that is not much in these days, but in my younger days it was a great deal. I do not want to press my right hon. Friend the First Lord if he cannot given an answer now, but I think that the country has a right to ask as to the future of Singapore which has had this enormous amount of money spent upon it. What protection is there against aircraft attacks at Singapore? At Chatham and Sheerness we have the other forces near, but Singapore is 8,000 miles away and if it were attacked I do not know what would happen. I put these questions in no spirit of hostility to the Admiralty, but I am trying to help and to see as far as I can that the country shall get value for its money.

5.50 p.m.

Sir HERBERT SAMUEL: I propose to ask for the attention of the House for a very few minutes and to limit myself mainly to addressing certain questions to the representatives of the Government. We are now moving Mr. Speaker out of the Chair, and there will be other opportunities for discussing specific points later in the Session. The whole House was pleased with the presentation of the Estimates by the First Lord. He knows well from long experience how to manage the House of Commons, and now that he has exchanged the whip for the trident his old experience is still valuable to him. The substance of the statement which he had to make to the House was very grave for he was inviting Parliament to vote this year an additional £3,000,000 from the taxes for the purpose of armaments, and this at a time when in all men's minds is the urgent necessity for the most resolute economy that can possibly be achieved. This Government and this House are pledged to an energetic enforcement of the rules of economy, and yet we find it necessary to consider increased Estimates, in addition to certain increases in the Army Estimates, of no less than £3,000,000 for the Navy.

[Sir H. Samuel.]

My right hon. Friend the Member for South Molton (Mr. Lambert), who has made many speeches in the House as the stern, uncompromising, ruthless advocate of economy, finds himself to-day, like most other Members when it is a matter in which they are specially interested, ready and willing to make an exception of this one instance because he himself, as a former member of the Board of Admiralty, is deeply interested in naval matters. I observed in the speech of the First Lord one omission. I listened to it with attention, but from beginning to end there was not one reference to the International Disarmament Conference. No one in the House and hardly anyone else advocates one-sided disarmament. No responsible person would run the risk of leaving this country disarmed entirely in an armed world. The future is too uncertain.

> "Let observation with extensive view, > Survey mankind from China to Peru."

In both those countries we see that the advocates of force have by no means disappeared, and the preservation of peace is by no means assured, not only in China and Peru, but in a good many countries in between. So we must pin our hopes upon joint and simultaneous action, and it is for that purpose that the Disarmament Conference has been labouring for so long at Geneva. Last July it arrived at a unanimous resolution which pledged all the States to favour a simultaneous reduction in all three arms—land, sea and air. With regard to the Navy, the conference at Geneva requested that the great naval Powers should enter into consultations with a view to effecting great reductions. That was last July. We are now in March, and so far as I am aware, we have had no account of what has been happening in those consultations. Now that we are asked to vote an additional £3,000,000 on the Naval Estimates, the House of Commons should be told what has occurred in those consultations, whether they have been proceeding, whether they have achieved any measure of agreement or any approach to it, and, if not, on whom lies the blame for the failure. The Prime Minister to-day in Geneva has been making a statement urgently appealing at this eleventh hour for a measure of agreement at the Disarmament Conference in order to save it from failure, and, while he is making that appeal in Geneva, the British House of Commons on the same afternoon is considering an increase of £3,000,000 in the British Navy Estimates. We should have some explanation of that apparent inconsistency and some indication of how these Estimates of the Government are related to the policy of the same Government as expounded at Geneva.

At an early stage of the Disarmament Conference in November, 1931, the Assembly requested the Council to urge the Governments convened to that conference "to give proof of their earnest desire for a successful issue to ensure an organised peace, and without prejudging the recisions of the conference"—which had not yet met but was about to meet—"on the programmes or proposals submitted to it by each Government, to refrain from any measure which involved an increase in their armaments." That was acceded to by all the Governments participating in the conference, and for a year up to November, 1932, that truce was maintained, so far as I know, loyally and honourably throughout the world. In November, 1932, when it expired, it was renewed for four months at the request of the Disarmament Conference. That four months has just expired, and I want to ask the Government whether in any degree these Estimates indicate a departure from that truce. I imagine that the answer will be in the negative. I should like to be assured that these Estimates do not involve an increase in armaments but a replacement, and are merely carrying out the Navy Estimates of the Labour Government, the execution of which has been postponed, and that the ships now to be built were provided for by hon. Members opposite when they were in power.

Mr. THORNE: When they were in office.

Sir H. SAMUEL: Yes, when they were in office, but I do not know that there was any division of opinion on that point in the House of Commons at that time. I only wish to have the assurance, so that any uneasiness in the public mind can be allayed, that these Estimates do not involve any departure from the armaments truce agreed to at Geneva and that they are not justified by the technicality that that truce has in fact run out a few weeks ago. The great danger is that the world may think that we are starting a fresh competition in naval expenditure. The truce having lasted for this length of time, and these Estimates being now introduced, there may be a feeling in this country and elsewhere that Britain is now taking the lead, the initiative, in an increase in armaments' expenditure. I would like the Government to give us some reassurance on that point.

We have in recent years been reducing our naval expenditure. In 1929 it was £56,000,000, in 1930 £52,000,000, in 1931 £51,000,000, and in 1932 £50,000,000, and now it has gone up to £53,000,000. There have been considerable savings on pay and in other matters, and I would like the right hon. Gentleman to tell us how much the expenditure of the Navy has been reduced by the cuts in naval pay, because if the Estimates are going up although expenditure on pay has gone down, what may be called the military expenditure of the Navy will have increased even more than is apparent on this figure. Further, the cost of many supplies has been falling with great rapidity in recent years, and there ought to have been a large saving on foodstuffs and materials of many kinds. Under these two heads, pay and supplies, there ought to have been a considerable saving which should be available for the benefit of the Exchequer, and therefore of the taxpayer, or else for increasing the efficiency and strength of the Navy. Can the right hon. and gallant Gentleman give us any indication of what has been the real increase on the naval side during the last few years, taking into account these savings in expenditure?

I noted what the right hon. and gallant Gentleman said about the increase of recruiting which is to take place at the end of the present financial year. He said the number of boys to be taken in would be doubled, and the number of short service seamen recruited would be increased, as I understood him, from 100 to 900. Does that involve a large demand for further increases in expenditure next year, and if so what is likely to be the amount? If the House agrees now, without comment, to this increase in personnel it may find itself next year faced by the First Lord of the Admiralty, whoever he may be, with a statement that this is an automatic increase already sanctioned by the House and told that a further increase, possibly of a considerable figure, in next year's Estimates is unavoidable and must be accepted by the House. These are the questions which I venture to address to His Majesty's Government. As I have said, there may be occasions later in the course of the passage of these Estimates through the House when we may have other observations to make with regard to the proposed increase in the amount to be expended.

6.5 p.m.

Vice-Admiral G. CAMPBELL: I wish to offer my humble congratulations to the First Lord of the Admiralty upon the introduction of the Naval Estimates and upon his explanation of them. I do not think he need have any fear that the House will hesitate to vote money for anything which is required for the naval defence of this country providing hon. Members are assured that full economies have been made in every possible direction. I am going to take the liberty of suggesting one or two ways in which I consider that further economies might be effected. Like many speakers who addressed the House during the consideration of the Army Estimates, I am looking forward to the time when the Estimates for the three Services may be presented as one Estimate, and, further, looking forward to the time when we shall have a Ministry of Defence and one Minister responsible to this House for the defence of the country. In that way, and in that way only, shall we get the maximum of efficiency with the maximum of economy. Co-operation in itself may be a fine thing, and is often well carried out, but it is not perfect.

[Vice-Admiral Campbell.]

I am sorry that the First Lord did not say a little more about what has taken place between the Air Force and the Admiralty, more especially in connection with the development of the flying boats. I cannot help thinking that the flying boat must have a future. There must be many duties which during the last War were performed by our cruisers and small craft which can now be undertaken by flying boats at a much cheaper cost. I cannot believe that the large number of cruisers which had to be employed during the last War in hunting down such vessels as the "Emden" would be required at the present time to deal with enemy raiders, because squadrons of flying boats stationed at focal points would put the enemy raiders at a great disadvantage compared with the position in the last War.

The number of cruisers which, according to the Admiralty, will be required for the defence of our trade routes is estimated to be somewhere in the vicinity of 50 at the end of 1936. I am surprised, on looking at the Estimates, to see that the cost of a present-day small cruiser is somewhere in the neighbourhood of £1,500,000. That appears to be a very excessive sum when we remember that similar ships were built at a quarter of the cost in pre-war days. It does not appear to be very clear where the extra money goes. I hope the First Lord, surrounded as he is by high technical officers, will not allow himself to be led into building our cruisers as miniature battleships, fitted with every gadget under the sun. I do not think it is necessary in the case of a light cruiser, whose chief duty is the defence of the trade routes. Gun controls and things of that kind do not need to be of an elaborate nature, because electric control arrangements can very easily be put out of action by a single well placed shell.

Another point I would like to mention with regard to the cruisers is that out of the number of 50 which the Admiralty forecasts for 1936 10 or 20 will be obsolete, or, I should say, over age, and to allow that state of affairs I regard as false economy, because if we are to have a small Navy it is more essential than ever that it should be efficient and up to date. I hope that steps will be taken to see that all our cruisers whatever the number we decide upon, are most efficient and up to date, because it is not fair to send men to sea in ships which are not equal to those of a possible enemy. On the other hand, I do not in any way advocate that large sums of money should be spent on our present battleships. I am surprised to see from the Estimates that £1,500,000 is being spent on the old battleship "Barham," which is nearly half as much as it cost to build her in 1914.

I hope that after the International Conference we shall see the battleship abolished altogether, because it is an unnecessary expense and I doubt its usefulness at the present time. If the Admiralty are to find the money for maintaining our strength in cruisers, and replacing the old ones, undoubtedly economies will be required in some directions. The First Lord rather cheered us when, in introducing his Estimates, he started on economy at the Admiralty, and I was hoping that some wonderful result would be forthcoming. I think he got as far as the fact that the Accountant-General's Department and the Secretary's Department had been amalgamated, and that he was looking in due course to save about £30,000. I do not call that a very great economy at the Admiralty. Figures which we were given in the House yesterday showed that the number of naval officers employed at the Admiralty is twice what it was in 1914, although the personnel of the Navy has been reduced by nearly half.

The First Lord stated that this increase in naval officers was chiefly due to the fact that nowadays we have a large naval staff, such as did not exist in 1914. That is perfectly true, but in my view the naval staff has gone from one extreme to the other; I believe that we are far too heavily staffed at the present time. I feel that this increase of naval staff, not only at the Admiralty, but at our home ports, and in our flagships, has done more to stop the initiative, the independence and the power of command of junior officers of the Navy than anything else which has happened since the War. One of the most remarkably successful events in the last War was the mobilisation of our Fleet in August, 1914, and its movement to its war stations, and that very fine accomplishment was performed, presumably, without a staff at the Admiralty. With all the staff now at the Admiralty I do not believe that that evolution could have been performed better.

The point about the Admiralty is as to whether the staff should be naval officers or civilian officers. One seldom meets a naval officer who does not say that there are too many civilians at the Admiralty. I think that is a very open question, not to be settled in a few words. I think that the number of civilians at the Admiralty is far too great, but, on the other hand, I think the proper place for a naval officer on the active list is at sea, and that the administration of the Navy should as far as possible be performed by competent civilians. I go further, and say that if about one-third of the Admiralty were removed to-morrow by a stroke of the pen the efficiency of the Fleet would not suffer one iota, in fact, I am not at all sure that it would not increase, and undoubtedly there would be economy. I remember some few years ago, when there was trouble in Shanghai, meeting in Whitehall a naval staff officer from the Admiralty. He was bubbling over with excitement about the situation in Shanghai and I asked him how things were going. He said, "Isn't it splendid? We get in touch with the commander-in-chief in Shanghai in the matter of a few minutes now by wireless." All I replied was, "God help the commander-in-chief."

The First Lord has gathered round him a Board of Admiralty which holds the respect and the confidence of the whole Navy. I think Nelson would have referred to the Board as a fine band of brothers. They are one of the finest Boards of Admiralty I have known since I joined the Navy; but I think we are asking a lot of them when we ask them to cut down the Admiralty. I do suggest, however, that they would add to their prestige if they asked the First Lord or, through him, the Prime Minister to appoint some such Committee as there was at the War Office and in other Government Departments to go into the question of the organisation of the Navy, to see whether reductions and economies can be made and exactly what staff is required and what is not. The Committee might report that all the people at the Admiralty were a lot of archangels, who could not possibly be replaced, but they might also ascertain that they could be replaced. A report from such a Committee would increase the confidence of the country, and we should know when we are asked to spend money on the Navy that it was not being wasted on the administration at the Admiralty.

Any ordinary person who compares the size of the Navy with what it was in 1914, is bound to have great doubts which I do not think that anything short of a committee would remove. Before leaving the subject of the Admiralty, I would like to ask the First Lord whether he does not think that the time has now arrived for the Board of Admiralty to be strengthened by the Engineer-in-Chief of the Fleet becoming a member of the Board? The days of sail are gone, and the majority of the Fleet is now mechanical in one way or another. There is a higher technique, and the personnel of the Navy contains a large number of engineers. The Engineer-in-Chief and Engineering Branch during the whole of the Great War, never let the Navy down, and it is time that the engineering department was represented by a seat on the Board of Admiralty, for the sake of efficiency and justice.

I cannot agree with the views of the First Lord on the subject of Dartmouth College. I was very much surprised to hear that he has made economies there and has increased the size of the classes of instruction. I am not for cutting down the education at Dartmouth College, because the education of the officers and students generally is of very great importance. The educational side of the Navy is very nearly the last on which reductions should be made. We now have officers entering through Dartmouth College, or, alternatively, through the special entry. If one is better than the other, why have two? If Dartmouth College is better than the special entry, presumably those who go into the special entry must know that their chances of promotion in the years to come are less than in the case of those who go through Dartmouth College.

[Vice-Admiral Campbell.]

There are great sentimental feelings attached to Dartmouth which cannot be ignored, even though in these days of extreme necessity of economy we may have to put them rather on one side. My own experience, having commanded both Dartmouth cadets and public school cadets, leaves me no hesitation in saying that public school cadets make better officers than Dartmouth cadets. The initial training is far superior. Dartmouth is run, and must be run, under dual control. There are a captain and a headmaster. Co-operation in control in certain circumstances, and in certain conditions, undoubtedly works well; you have only to look at the National Government to see that. At Dartmouth the headmaster is there for a considerable number of years, while the captain is changed every two or three years. I do not think that that is an efficient way of running a training establishment, nor do I know any other training school or public school which is run on dual control.

Another advantage of taking cadets only through the special entry is that the Admiralty would not have to look so far ahead in regard to the number of officers that will be required. The Dartmouth entry is four years earlier than the special entry, which means that the Admiralty has to look four years further ahead in the matter of lieutenants and commanders than it does with the special entry. I have heard it said that the public schools do not encourage boys to go into the Navy. There is a certain amount of truth in that, but that could be overcome. If schools knew that the special entry was the only form of entry into the Navy, and if the ages were adjusted, it would be more simple, and would suit the schools better. Naturally, at our best schools, it is not liked that the best boys who are good in Rugby and cricket should be taken away just when they were getting into the first eleven. I quite understand that, but that is only a matter of about six months' adjustment. A boy in the special entry is older, and he knows his mind better as to whether he wants to go into the Navy or not. I am sure that if the chances of a career of a boy in the Navy were dealt with on the lines I am suggesting, the First Lord might never want for boys in the Navy.

The only objection that I have heard against closing Dartmouth College is that if Dartmouth were abolished the Admiralty would get too many boys from the secondary schools coming into the Navy through the special entry. I see no objection to that. I am not going to say that every boy from a secondary school or that every boy from a public school will make a successful naval officer, or every young student who distinguishes himself at the University in various ways. What I say is that men of character, such as are required for officers in the Royal Navy, can be found in all parts of the community in this country, and that it is up to the Admiralty to find them, which they could do by suitable examination and by taking into their confidence the headmasters of our public schools and other schools, and telling them exactly what they require. I hope that these two matters of the economies at the Admiralty and Dartmouth College will receive the First Lord's attention. I think that the expense of a Dartmouth cadet is far greater than that of the special entry cadet. If there would be any advantage, I should favour the closing of Dartmouth College as an educational establishment straight away.

I should have liked to say a few words about the personnel of the Navy——[HON. MEMBERS: "Go on."] Time is going on, and also there is a special Amendment on this subject. One has to remember that, however good a ship may be, it is no good unless you have a well-disciplined and contented crew aboard it. I have been rather inclined, ever since the War, to think that the Admiralty have been paying too much attention to material, and not sufficient attention to personnel. I am glad to hear from the First Lord that this matter is receiving his personal and first-hand attention, and I hope that that will continue. Looking through the figures of the Estimates for this year, I came to the conclusion that the proportion of officers is far greater than that of the men. We have about one officer to every 10 men, and that is far too high a proportion in my opinion. It is helping to crush the younger members of the Navy from showing their initiative and power of command.

The First Lord specially referred to the fact that improvement in promotion in the Navy has taken place during the year, owing to the voluntary retirement of six distinguished Admirals in order to make room for junior officers. The six officers who retired in that way were of high rank and they undoubtedly deserve the thanks of the country for their very fine public spirit, but I do not think that it is the proper way to obtain promotion to commander and captain in the Navy by officers at the top of the tree voluntarily retiring. It is not very fair upon the officers in the higher ranks of the Navy who do not retire to make room for the younger officers, because they at once lay themselves open to the suggestion that they are blocking the top of the List. I would prefer that the Admiralty brought in a very definite regulation as to the retirement of officers at the top of the Navy List.

In conclusion, I would like to say how pleased I was to hear the First Lord's concluding remarks, when he said that he had been unable to obtain his sailing ship but he did tell us how some of the young officers had volunteered to give up their leave in order to make themselves fit for sailing ships; and some, I believe, are actually going to sail home in quite a small boat from China. That shows that we still have the right spirit in the younger generation in the Navy, and I hope that the First Lord will do everything to encourage that spirit. While we will always support further economies, let him ask the House for anything else he requires in the way of men and ships for the defence of this country, and I have no doubt that he will get it.

6.26 p.m.

Mr. DAVID DAVIES: I do not intend to deal with the vast details of the personnel of the Navy, but I desire to make one or two observations, not so much to the First Lord as to the Admiralty itself. I appreciate the importance of the First Lord making provision for safeguarding the shores of this country, but the Government's action in indicating expansion of expenditure is not in keeping with the cry of economy that we heard at the General Election, particularly in view of the enormous depression through which we are passing. During this year we have had evidence each day in the Votes that have been taken in this House, of a departure from the policy that we believed had been enunciated in the country during the last election—the policy of attempting to secure peace throughout the world. On Monday of this week, the House received with great admiration an announcement by the Lord President of the Council that the ban upon the export of arms had now been removed. At the same time he announced that two representatives had gone to Geneva to hold out the hand of friendship to other members of the League of Nations. While they are dealing with that matter at Geneva we are making preparations for intensifying the difficulties with which they will have to contend. The other nations in regard to our offer of peaceful friendship will say that they recognise that hand as the hand of Esau while this House is giving expression to the voice of Jacob.

I want particularly to direct the attention of the First Lord to the importance of doing something tangible for the mining industry. I believe in the ideals of peace, and I believe in expressing them in this House. In doing so, I represent a very large volume of pacifist sentiment in my division. A departure by this Government from those principles is a betrayal of their promises to the people of this country during the election. It is true that man does not live by bread alone, but it is necessary that he should have bread to live, and, therefore, I desire to direct the attention of the First Lord to the possibilities that exist in connection with the fuel problem of the Navy.

In the area from which I come, we have a very large number of miners unemployed, and this National Government, when it came into existence, tentatively, at any rate, promised those miners restoration of their employment. They have been sadly disappointed. The demand for coal, apparently, has gone down, both inland and export, and I think that this is an opportune moment for the Navy to do something tangible in attempting to restore that great basic industry. I know I may be told that to suggest going back to raw coal for the Navy is to turn back the clock of progress; but I want to submit very respectfully, as a layman, without claiming any technical knowledge, but only claiming to have read the scientific developments up to date, that it is possible to utilise for the Navy fuel in the form of raw coal. I do not think that the Navy has done all that it ought to have done in connection with that matter. Having regard to the fact that this country is dependent, whether for the purposes of its own defence or of attacking any other country, upon foreign fuel, I do not think all has been done that ought to have been done in attempting to develop our own resources.

[Mr. Davies.]

I want to submit that pulverised fuel has a very great potential future, and I would submit, further, that it may have a potential future even in the Navy. But, whether there are doubts or not about pulverised fuel being a practical proposition, there is a form, which is certainly technically sound and practically right, that could be used by the Navy, namely colloidal fuel; and I would like to ask the First Lord whether any experiments are being conducted at the moment in order to test the efficacy of colloidal fuel. If colloidal fuel could be developed and become a piece of practical politics as far as its use in the Navy is concerned, it would give a fillip to a dying industry. I have read recently that experiments have been conducted in the Cunard liner "Scythia," in which it has been found possible to combine 60 per cent. of pulverised fuel with 40 per cent. of oil. It has been claimed that that would give the boats a greater range than they have now, and it could be produced in this country, thereby making us independent of foreign supplies. To the extent that it would do that, it would enable us to balance our Budget, and our imports of oil would not be so great.

It may not be possible for us to produce sufficient for the whole of our requirements in this country, but we could satisfy them to a very large extent. The amount that that would involve would not solve the problem of unemployment in the mining industry; it would be a drop in the ocean; but I want to submit that, when the Navy embarks upon its oil policy, other people follow it, and, to the extent to which the Navy departed from oil, or, at least, returned to something like sanity and used colloidal fuel of home production, an inducement would be offered to the mercantile marine and to the users of land engines in this country, and that would render enormous assistance in finding employment. I am not suggesting that that should be done on sentimental grounds; I want the question of the utilisation of pulverised fuel and colloidal fuel to be dealt with on a purely economic basis. I do not suggest that mining should be subsidised, but that the calorific value of raw pulverised fuel and colloidal fuel, and the means by which our boats are now propelled, should be tested.

The information that I have procured indicates that it would be an economy to use colloidal fuel or pulverised fuel. I want to reinforce the arguments advanced by my hon. Friend the Member for Aberdare (Mr. G. Hall), when he made reference to the fact that experiments are being conducted in Germany which have shown that great efficiency results from the utilisation of Diesel engines. Professor Bone, who has conducted very extensive experiments in connection with pulverised fuel in this country, says that the Diesel engine can now be run on pulverised fuel instead of heavy oil, and that, with small adaptations, it can also be used in ordinary internal combustion engines. I should like the potentialities in that direction to be examined. All that I would ask is that such examination should be made without prejudice, that the oil policy of the past should not prejudice the examination of the factors involved by the use of a new type of fuel. I am confident that, if such an investigation were permitted, it would reveal the fact that we in this country are losing on the calories that we import from abroad.

We have to remember what an enormous development has taken place in steam practice since 1913. With ordinary raw small coal, the range of a ship has been increased by modern steam practice by more than 1,000 per cent. It used to take, in 1913, from 6½ to 7 lbs. of coal to generate a unit of electricity. In modern steam practice it is possible to generate a unit of electricity by the consumption of slightly over 1 lb. of coal. I want to submit that, if the question of range in the Navy were a question of the amount of coal and the efficiency with which it is employed, the range now would be over five times greater than it was in 1913. The First Lord shakes his head, but it seems to be obvious that, if I can produce a unit of electricity with 1.2 lb. of coal, when it used to require 6½ or 7 lbs., I have inflated my range, judged by calorific value, by four or five times. That is an enormous increase, but, compared with the use of pulverised fuel, it is very inefficient. Pulverised fuel shows a far greater efficiency, and has revolutionised the use of raw coal since 1914.

This country's greatness was built up on coal, but, when history comes to be written 100 years from now, unless we change our policy of taking oil from abroad and substitute coal, the historian will write that the decay of this great country started when we commenced importing calories instead of exporting them. I want to submit to the First Lord of the Admiralty and the Admiralty Board that they should not be satisfied to depend upon private enterprise for these developments. It has been argued this afternoon that the life of the Navy is the life of this country, and it is worth while securing a proper circulation for the life of the Navy from our own products. Private enterprise ought not to be relied upon for these developments, but the Board of Admiralty itself, assisted by the Government, should conduct these experiments, in the hope of finding a practical solution. That would mean the utilisation of our own coal and the employment of the miners of this country.

6.43 p.m.

Mr. HOLFORD KNIGHT: The hon. Member for Pontypridd (Mr. D. Davies) speaks from the experience of long and devoted service to the interests that he represents, and I am certain that his suggestions will receive the careful consideration of the Board of Admiralty. I rise to express a point of view upon which I have taken every opportunity presented to me in this House of remarking. I have felt it my duty for several years to comment on the Estimates of the Admiralty from a particular point of view. Before doing so again, I want to say that I can recall no circumstances in which these Estimates have been laid before the House in which more serious reflections were excited by the situation in which we find ourselves. The First Lord opened with an appeal to all quarters of the House to provide adequate defence for this land, and that appeal will not be made in vain. In the past, that appeal has been criticised in circumstances which are not available now.

This is not the occasion to go into the details of the present situation, but it will be the general desire of the House that the representatives of this country, the Prime Minister and the Foreign Secretary, will be successful in the efforts which they are making to revive the conference on which not only the general mass of the people of this country, but the mass of the people in all lands, have fastened their confidence. Whether they will consider it part of their duty to make suggestions to the other Powers for the better conduct of the conference we must wait and see, but there seems to be something seriously wrong with the way that conference has been managed. I think the representatives of this country might well take an opportunity of consulting with the representatives of other countries as to whether some better management could not be provided. Be that as it may, the fact remains that the conference appears to be drifting to disaster, and from all quarters of the House, representing opinion in all parties and in no party, there is a general desire that this effort of the representatives of the Crown to save the conference should be successful.

The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Darwen (Sir H. Samuel) asked to be assured that these Estimates did not indicate any departure from the truce which was completed and extended at Geneva and which is about to expire. He hoped it did not mean that Great Britain was about to lead the world into another increase in naval expenditure. His observations sounded to me like those of a man who was willing to wound but afraid to strike. Did he mean by that an attack on these Estimates, or was it merely an adjuration to the Government that they should take no course which would have the effect that he deprecated? On several occasions I have had some difficulty in understanding what exactly is the attitude of the right hon. Gentleman and his friends to this administration. They continue to sit on these benches, where we like to have their company. [Interruption.] The hon. Member says he belongs to another party. I am not referring to him. It is for the advantage of the House that we should be able to detect the opponents of this administration, and it is an advantage that they should sit together, but I find some difficulty in understanding what is the right hon. Gentleman's real intention. I see no inconsistency in the Government seeking every opportunity to continue and extend this truce while they lay before us the Estimates which they think necessary for the adequate defence of the country. I say that with some emphasis because of the view that I take of the present situation.

[Mr. Knight.]

I would not by any word or suggestion deepen the alarm that is felt outside the House as to the situation. I want to confine myself to a practical suggestion about these matters. At this time of day it seems to me idle to make general reflections about the desirability of peace, and adjurations to other nations to pursue peace. Those of us who take the responsibility in this trying hour of occupying the attention of the House have a duty put upon us to make a practical suggestion which may ease the way out of the impasse in which the country finds itself. I rise to make a suggestion which I have made in all previous Debates on these Estimates in which I have had an opportunity of taking part. I do not, for obvious reasons, endorse the suggestions of the hon. and gallant Gentleman opposite as to economies in the Service. I have no title to say anything about those matters, but this plea for economy in expenditure is wholly consistent with the provision of adequate defence of the country in a difficult situation. At the same time, we must relate that economy to the necessities of the situation, and, while the Government are pursuing at Geneva and elsewhere efforts to reach accord with the other naval Powers which will have the effect of bringing about economy, I want to bring to their attention a practical matter to which, I think, they might give very close and earnest consideration.

The First Lord made use of an expression which I thought was rather unhappy. He spoke of Great Britain as the mistress of the seas. That is a description which is not calculated to assist the efforts that are being made at Geneva. It will do harm if it is intended to mean—I cannot believe it is—that Great Britain still claims to control the high seas of the world. That claim cannot in reason be preferred. It is inconsistent with our international obligations, and I hope it does not mean more than a perfervid and poetical description by a gallant officer who now finds himself in the proud position of presenting the Estimates of his great Service. While the Government are carrying out these Estimates as necessary for the security of the country in its present trying situation, they should pursue all endeavours to bring about a reconsideration of the defence of the trade routes. Those trade routes are not British possessions. They are the arteries of world commerce, and must be brought under the regulation of an international law with the provision of a tribunal before which disputes can be brought. At present that seems to be a far off event, but it is an aim which I ask this Administration to pursue. There is a particular direction in which, I think, immediate fruitful results can be obtained, and that is that discussions should be opened up with America in order that a friendly accommodation as to the protection of these trade routes should be reached. I believe considerable and representative elements of opinion in America are prepared to enter on that discussion which, after all, is in pursuance of the undertaking that we gave at the Conference of Versailles. Further, I believe that line of approach not only indicates the nearest way out of the difficulties between ourselves and the Americans, but points to the way in which accord and co-operation between these two great nations full of promise for the world can be approached.

I hope the place of experts in these discussions will be carefully regarded. It is the business of statesmen to think out policy and of experts to recommend and advise the means necessary for the support of that policy. I, therefore, press upon the First Lord that in these discussions, which I hope will take place in confidence between the two Great Powers, matters of policy and the principles that underlie them shall be the express business of the statesmen, and that experts shall not be called in until that policy has been agreed upon, and then only when it is necessary to seek their advice. One of the main reasons why the Disarmament Conference has drifted almost to disaster, it seems to me, is not merely lack of good management, but the fact that experts have been allowed to wrangle interminably with each other year in and year out while the statesmen have failed to assert their rightful place and lay down the principles on which the Conference should proceed before calling in the experts to advise them. I make that practical suggestion. It makes for true economy. No one in his senses would desire that this country should continue the heavy duty of policing the high seas of the world when other nations were prepared to assist in that undertaking subject to this safeguard, that in that policing duty there should be a law which all nations concerned would take part in formulating, The result would be undoubtedly a scaling down of expenditure which would be full of advantage to every State concerned, and not least to ourselves. Furher, it would be an example which Great Britain could set to the world. We have given many examples in the past.

It is the desire of our people in all parties and none that Great Britain should give a lead in these matters. I notice that some bills have been thrown here—a very improper action, but it is an indication to my mind of the desire that is felt throughout the country that the Government, while providing adequate support for the country in a very difficult situation, should lose no opportunity of pursuing the general work of peace and giving that lead to the world which Great Britain is expected to give. These appeals are being made in all directions. I observe that the clergy are to make another effort. I have not been impressed by the exertions of the clergy in the past. I think we have to get beyond these pulpit generalities, and some schools of politicians have to get beyond generalities about disarmament and have the moral courage, if necessary, to risk unpopularity by pointing to practical suggestions. I feel intensely, and strongly, about this matter, and I have tried to say that which I felt I ought to say with as little feeling as possible, because I know I am stating a view which is not acceptable to many Members of this House. In the last Parliament I had a very difficult administration to address as the Admiralty was in very inadequate hands. But in that Parliament numbers of those sitting on these benches were in general agreement with me. In this House the situation has changed. Parties have come together in comradeship, and in that feeling of comradeship and good-fellowship, Members can listen to a different point of view, and consider suggestions made in a general scheme of co-operation. I have ventured with great submission to make this short observation, and I commend it very strongly to the attention of my right hon. Friend, to whom I offer my congratulations.

7.2 p.m.

Mr. RALPH BEAUMONT: While it can hardly be pretended that the Navy Estimates are completely satisfactory, or that our shipbuilding programme has been so speeded up as to remove all our doubts and fears, yet I think it would be ungenerous not to admit that the increase in the provision for naval construction is extremely welcome. Further, while it certainly does not meet the full needs of the Navy, and it does not by any means ensure that we shall have our requisite number of up-to-date ships by 1936, it does represent a certain speeding up of building, and a definite determination not to allow even the urgent need for economy to cause further postponement of building programmes. Besides, this extra allotment of money for construction purposes will give a very welcome relief to our shipbuilding yards, where so many skilled workers unhappily find themselves in continued unemployment.

There are, however, several disappointments in these Estimates. At first sight there appears to be a still further reduction in the personnel of the Royal Navy. I am certain that hon. Members were glad to hear from the lips of the First Lord that the reduction is more apparent than real. It is somewhat disappointing, however, to find that the number of dockyard workers again shows a further reduction. No doubt that is a continuation of the policy, which has been adopted during the last few years, of allowing wastage to take place, without at the same time allowing any new recruitment to replace that wastage. If that is allowed to continue of course the number will still further dwindle. One cannot help wondering whether this is not likely to threaten the efficiency of the dockyards, and whether the time will not come, in the not very far distant future, when the personnel of these dockyards will be found to be inadequate, not only from the point of view of construction but also from that of repair work.

[Mr. Beaumont.]

While it has been rightly decided that our shipbuilding programme can no longer be delayed, it does not appear that there is to be very much making up of lost ground in the direction of repair work. During the last few years not only have the building programmes been held up, owing to the demand for economy, but so also, to a certain extent, have larger repairs and detailed refits, which have to be carried out periodically. It seems quite possible, therefore, that the time is not far ahead when accumulated repair work will constitute too great a demand upon the capacity of the dockyards. When we further remember that the extension of the life of our ships, under various naval agreements, means that more frequent refits will have to be carried out to keep these ships at sea, one fears that one day there will be very serious congestion in the Royal dockyards, which will be further aggravated by the policy of allowing the present personnel slowly and surely to diminish.

One further matter regarding the dockyards I would like to mention is that, during last year, there have been, at any rate at Portsmouth Dockyard, discharges of electrical fitters. These men have served their apprenticeship, and become skilled electricians at considerable expense of time and money, both to themselves and to the State. In addition to the hardship and disappointment caused to the men themselves by their discharge, it does seem to be very doubtful wisdom on the part of the State, and hardly an economy, to apprentice men for whom no permanent positions can afterwards be found, or to discharge numbers of these men, after their apprenticeship has been served, and thus lose a very valuable supply of skilled labour which the State has created at considerable expense. No doubt the amount of electrical work available depends largely on the rate of progress of construction. I should be very glad if the Civil Lord, when he replies, can reassure us as to this apparent waste of valuable material, and give us some indication of the policy of the Admiralty on the question of dockyard apprentices and ex-apprentices.

In many directions these Estimates must still cause serious misgiving. The new programme still leaves us some way down the list of the navies of the world in modern destroyers and submarines. It is obvious that we cannot have our requisite number of under-age cruisers by 1936. We have learned during the last few years to expect very little, and so, I suppose, we must be duly grateful for the increase we have actually got this year. Urgent as the need for economy undoubtedly is, the time has come when this new construction can no longer be postponed and, furthermore, this increase in the Navy Estimates should be very heartily welcomed by those who are continually demanding that the Government should undertake schemes of development and encourage public works. After all, the work of building these ships is one of the very best forms of public work for, so far from being unproductive, it is productive of national security. The bulk of the money is spent directly or indirectly in labour. It means steady work for our dockyards, brings a real measure of relief to some of those yards where unemployment is so heavy and saves numbers of skilled shipwrights from the despair, hardship and deterioration which accompanies prolonged unemployment. I believe there is general and widespread disappointment that the Estimates so far submitted show little, if any, reduction; but very few hon. Members will deny that there is ample justification for this increase in the Navy Estimates. We are only making up a little of the leeway we have lost during the past few years and, as the First Lord himself admitted in his Memorandum, even this increase in the Navy Estimates does not fully provide for all the potential needs of the Navy.

7.10 p.m.

Mr. COCKS: In considering these Navy Estimates, one cannot help the thought coming into one's mind that there is growing up, all over this country, a great revulsion against war. For example, a speaker at a public meeting, especially in one of our industrial centres, who asserts that in no circumstances whatever would this country ever go to war again is certain to have that remark greeted with tumultuous applause. As the chaos of Europe grows greater, and the lightnings begin to flash over Europe, the revulsion against war is assuming rather strange forms. Take the case of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in this House the other day with reference to the trouble in the Far East. He seemed to think that the great thing was to assure the world that in no circumstances would this country ever be drawn into it. The same sort of feeling—for people know how horrible and terrible war is and how near is the danger—caused the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Epping (Mr. Churchill) two days ago to make a speech in which he advocated that this country should free itself from all entanglements and all engagements; turn its back upon Europe and adopt a position of armed neutrality, even if that meant, as he said it would mean, a large increase in our Naval, Military and Air Estimates.

Now I am an advocate of peace, and an advocate of disarmament, but I do not believe we shall ever be able to get peace by shirking our responsibilities, and getting rid of or denying all our international engagements. It seems to me that the policy advocated by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Epping was exactly like that of a man, who, seeing another man waylaid on the highway by highway robbers, instead of going to his assistance shrugs his shoulders, turns away, and leaves him to be robbed or assassinated. When I heard the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Epping I felt that he, too, was feeling the onset of the years. These were not sentiments he would have used some years ago—those glorious, far away days of his military adventures in Cuba, at Omdurman, of the advance from Antwerp, and the retreat from Pretoria. The right hon. Gentleman has played many parts, but I never thought I should be here to hear him advocate for this country a policy of pusillanimity.

In my view the only way by which peace can be secured is by a policy of ordered security. I believe it is only by developing the structure of international law, and by visiting the offender against that law with swift and condign punishment, that we can bring about a condition in which disarmament will become possible. That is why in recent months I have viewed the situation in the Far East with such grave concern. If the Covenant of the League and the Kellogg Pact are to be flouted with impunity, then there is no chance of disarmament, and no chance of peace. If international law is to be disregarded and a policy of armed neutrality adopted, then the British Navy is too weak for the work it will have to do in the future. If we are to have neither the security given by an international system nor the aid given by allies—and the idea of having allies was also repudiated by the right hon. Gentleman—we shall have to proceed to build a far more formidable Fleet than we possess at present. The First Lord of the Admiralty make an attack upon what he calls bloody-minded pacifists.

Sir B. EYRES MONSELL: Bloodthirsty pacifists.

Mr. COCKS: I was mixing up the right hon. Gentleman with what the Foreign Secretary said the other day. I do not personally take the line which he had suggested of at the same time advocating the reduction of the Army and Navy below the level of efficiency and advocating interference in foreign troubles and international conflicts. At the same time what is worse than this is the man who adopts the gospel of militarism and scorns arbitration and covenants for the preservation of peace, who thinks these covenants are of little avail, and yet, having brushed them aside altogether, is content with a fleet which in such circumstances is not strong enough for the work it has to do, and is in a large and important area of the surface of the world at the present time in a position of lamentable and humiliating inferiority.

Apart from the way in which the Covenant of the League has been flouted, I would like to bring to the attention of the House the proposals made by the Government of Japan for disarmament as far as their Navy and our Navy are concerned. At the present moment the ratio in capital ships between ourselves and Japan is 15 to 9. The Japanese have come to Geneva and proposed that we should sink or destroy four battleships, whereas they should destroy only one battleship, thus making the ratio 11 to 8, and bringing Japan very much nearer to our strength. In 8-inch cruisers the ratio at present is 18 to 12, and the Japanese Government have proposed that we should sink six of those cruisers whereas they should sink only two, so that the ratio in future would be 12 to 10. We should then have only two more cruisers than they possess, although their Fleet is concentrated in one part of the world where we have great interests, whereas our Fleet has to guard trade routes in all the seven seas of the world. They have also demanded that with regard to smaller cruisers, destroyers and submarines there should be parity between the two Fleets. Such a proposal could not be considered for one moment. It is one which must be instantly rejected. I would say further, that if that State continues to flout the public law of the world and if she becomes as under her present rulers she seems bent on becoming, the Carthage to our Rome, it will be necessary either to increase our naval forces and have a bigger Fleet in the Pacific, or to enter into consultation with the American Government with a view to co-operating in some scheme of mutual defence of our possessions in that great ocean.

[Mr. Cocks.]

I wish to deal with one or two questions of internal administration. I would ask the First Lord, why should we keep up Dartmouth College in order to provide secondary education for officers of two branches only of the Fleet—the executive branch and the engineering branch—and not the paymaster and accountancy branches or any of the other branches? The parents of those going into other branches of the Service or into any other Department of the State have to provide their own secondary education. It is only in those two branches that we have State-assisted secondary education. The First Lord said that he was afraid that he would not get the necessary entries into the Navy if Dartmouth were abolished. Since the introduction of the special entry system in 1913, over 1,000 cadets from public schools have entered the Navy, in addition to those who have entered the other branches of the Service. Of the 1,066 who have entered from public schools, 28 have already been promoted commanders, which shows that they were found to be efficient officers. In addition there have also been commissioned 470 ratings from the lower deck to the executive branch, and 230 engine-room artificers to commissioned rank. Ten of these have been promoted to the rank of commander, and 40 promoted to that of engineering commander—a tribute to the ability of those officers. Surely, the objection to Dartmouth is the expense, for in spite of what the First Lord said about cutting down the expenses, he stated, in answer to a question yesterday, that the cost per cadet was £300 more than the cost to the State of cadets going in by the special entry system.

Sir B. EYRES MONSELL: Over six years.

Mr. COCKS: Yes, but £300 for each unit. That seems to be a matter of considerable importance. What has happened to the report of the Bennett Committee which was appointed some years ago and has reported, though the report has never been published? I understand that the Admiralty appointed another committee to inquire into the findings of the Bennett Committee, and that finally the whole thing has been shelved. One reason which has been put forward for retaining Dartmouth is that it enables officers in the Navy to get their children into the Navy cheaper than if they had to pass through the ordinary public schools. If the First Lord of the Admiralty says that that is not the case, I will withdraw what I have said.

Sir B. EYRES MONSELL: It is the same for everybody.

Mr. COCKS: Surely the sons of officers in the Navy come under a specially reduced fee system?

Sir B. EYRES MONSELL: They all come in on their merits, and we have specially reduced fees according to the income of their parents.

Mr. COCKS: Whether their fathers are in the Navy or not. I think that by abolishing the Dartmouth system and having instead the special entry system, there would be a wider field of selection at a more suitable age. After all, 13½ is rather an early age to decide whether a boy is fitted to be a naval officer or not. There would also be less wastage between the years 13½ and 17½ owing to cadets being invalided or dying and if boys were taken at 17 it would be possible to secure more rapid expansion in the case of war. I suggest that the entries to Dartmouth should be reduced by 50 per cent. this year, and then gradually reduced until the establishment is abolished.

Another point I want to put to the First Lord has reference to commissions from the lower deck, about which I put several questions to him recently. It is very desirable that the system of giving commissions to the lower deck should be increased. Last year only eight ratings were promoted to sub-lieutenants, and only four from the engine room branch. To promote only 12 out of the thousands on the lower deck is rather an absurdity when you say that you are going in for a democratic system and intend to promote men from the lower deck. How many does the First Lord intend to promote this year under this scheme? I was glad to hear from him yesterday that officers selected from the lower deck are to undergo a preliminary course at Greenwich to enable them to compete on equal terms with officers from the cadet entries.

Something has been said about the surplus of officers. In 1914, although we had 146,000 officers and men in the Fleet, with far more vessels than we have now, there were only 1,493 officers, whereas to-day, although the establishment has been reduced to 91,000 officers and men, and although the units are far less numerous than in 1914, the number of officers has gone up to 1,748—a considerable increase. As far as the men are concerned their numbers have been reduced to the barest necessity of Service requirements. What happens as a result? I have been told that ratings coming home from foreign service are entitled to 14 days leave for every year that they have been abroad, but, having had their leave, they often find on going back that their names are posted for foreign service again. Officers get 30 days leave for each year they have served at a foreign station, and after that they are very often employed at home, or on shore training courses, or get pay without any employment at all, due to the fact that there is a surplus of officers.

I am sure that the Navy is a happy Service, but I am told that at the same time there is considerable dissatisfaction about the reductions and cuts in the pay of the Navy. The men were cut by a larger proportion than were the officers. In 1922 a seaman gunner, with two good conduct badges, with a wife and two children, received 4s. 6d. a day, 3d. for being a seaman gunner, 6d. for his badges, and 3d. for grog money, a total of 5s. 6d., or 38s. 6d. a week. To-day he has been reduced to 35s. a week, and at the same time his marriage allowance has been reduced from 23s. 6d. to 15s. a week. He has been reduced in the last 10 years from 62s. to 50s., a very large percentage—over 20 per cent. The officers have been reduced only to the extent of 11 per cent. Ordinary seamen's pay has been reduced from 2s. 9d. to 2s. a day, a reduction of 27 per cent., and the seaman boy, who received 2s. a day in 1919, now only receives 1s. 3d., a reduction of 37½ per cent. On the other hand, midshipmen have not had their pay reduced at all. After all, the sailor works seven days a week and often in very unhealthy climates, and we cannot expect him to go ashore without spending a little money. It is time that some of the cuts imposed upon the Navy by the Bank of England were restored. The well-being of the Fleet is far more important than the well-being of financiers. I have far more regard for the health and happiness of the bluejackets than I have for the bankers.

I have said that I am a pacifist, and I am a believer in Disarmament. At the same time, considering the dangerous state of the world to-day and the absolute failure of the Foreign Secretary——

Mr. BUCHANAN: The Prime Minister, too.

Mr. COCKS: Well, I do not exclude the Prime Minister. Considering the absolute failure of other Departments of the Government, I do not criticise the First Lord for bringing in slightly higher Estimates than last year. He is only doing what I hope I should do if I were in his place in the circumstances: standing up for the efficiency of the great Service of which he is the head.

7.31 p.m.

Mr. J. WALLACE: I shall not detain the House very long, but I cannot help thinking, after the speech of my hon. Friend, that it does not constitute a tribute to his great authority and well-known political knowledge that he should suggest that the Bank of England was responsible for the cuts in the Navy—or, indeed, for any other cuts. I do not suppose for one moment that he meant it seriously, but expect that it is merely another example of that political persiflage of which he is such a master. I shall not attempt to follow him in the points of his speech, especially in his elucidation of technical matters, because, frankly, I think that he knows much more about them than I do. But I have listened to a great deal of information during this Debate, first of all in the speech of the First Lord and then in that of the hon. and gallant Admiral, who, while supporting the Government, offered them the frankest possible criticism in the best possible spirit. After such a speech by one with his distinguished record and great knowledge and interest in the affairs of the Admiralty, I feel that I myself may take a little courage in pursuing the same course.

[Mr. Wallace.]

Coming away from those great questions of policy and administration, I should like to give this Debate, just for a few minutes, a little local colour. I regret very much that it is no longer possible for me to read those Estimates and digest the information in those 403 pages with any particular personal interest, for I no longer, in the real sense, represent a dockyard constituency. At one time, not so many years ago, these Estimates had a direct relation to the fortunes and prospects of Rosyth Dockyard. To-day, however, by implication—because there is hardly a reference to Rosyth Dockyard—they deal only with the misfortunes of Rosyth. That great dockyard is comparatively silent and deserted. For some reason Rosyth has become the Cinderella of the dockyards of Great Britain, and there is no sign in the meantime that the Fairy Prince will come to the rescue with the magic slipper. That is a role which I should like to see filled by my right hon. Friend the First Lord; he could do it so perfectly and with all that grace, courtesy and charm which we all know he possesses in such a very high degree. In a time of great national emergency Rosyth played a memorable part, and the city of Dunfermline had every right to believe—and was led by the Admiralty to expect—that Rosyth would be maintained as a great unit in our system of naval defence. Millions were spent upon its construction, and I do not believe that there is a single naval officer of any standing who would not give willing testimony to its modern equipment during the War, and to its efficiency and outstanding service in the War years.

Why has Rosyth been virtually thrown upon the scrap-heap, while the activities of the Southern dockyards are in full operation? Why is it condemned as only worth continuing upon a care and maintenance basis? I am in no way fitted to judge of the strategic reasons which may have influenced the decision to relegate Rosyth to the background, but in these days of the mechanisation and rationalisation of industry it seems extraordinary to me to ignore real efficiency and to preserve in the South the existence of dockyards less efficient and less modern. It is a reversal of the old order of the survival of the fittest. Rosyth, with all its modern equipment and facilities, situated as it is on one of the finest waterways of the world, has from the dockyard point of view become the despised and rejected. Is it too late to reconsider the claim of Rosyth, and to recognise the sacrifices and willing service which the city of Dunfermline rendered to the Government in the hour of the country's supreme need?

I look at this question not only from the point of view of efficiency and justice, but also from the point of view of the serious condition of unemployment in that district. The whole constituency is under the gloomy cloud of unemployment. In the linen trade the factories have been closed down and thousands of men and women have joined the ranks of the unemployed. Prosperity has departed from the coalfields, and the whole industrial situation there in the Dunfermline district and Bo'ness is serious beyond description. I urge and plead for a reconsideration of the whole position regarding Rosyth and I do so very respectfully, in the name of justice and in the cause of efficiency, as a claim for the recognition of the rights of Scotland. After all, Admiralty decisions are not like the laws of the Medes and Persians, which could not be altered. This is a National Government; it must take the national point of view. I respectfully suggest that no longer should powerful Southern interests and considerations be permitted to override the legitimate claims and rights of that old country that lies beyond the Tweed. Even if strategic reasons prevail—and if they are sound they must and ought to prevail—I contend that in the departments of repair and reconditioning there is still great work to be done at Rosyth, and the interests of that yard in my judgment, are paramount.

I leave that question, and wish now to refer for a moment to one or two smaller matters. Last year, when these Estimates were before the House, I referred to the question of the repair of oil ships; I wish to bring that matter up again. Wherever there is work to be done on those ships at Rosyth, such as the scraping of the bottoms of the ships, the repainting, and the repair of zinc plates or underfittings, everything which can be done by the present staff at Rosyth should be done. There is a strong feeling up there that sometimes those oil boats are sent to Leith, although without any increase of the supervisory staff at all the work could be carried out at Rosyth. I should like to have that matter inquired into. Another small question is the employment of yard lads at Rosyth. Last year I mentioned this matter in the House, and the Civil Lord promised to look into it. Perhaps I may refresh his memory on the subject and, if it is not convenient to-night, ask him to let me have an answer at some other time. One more question: the dockyard at Rosyth frequently requires various classes of machinery, but up till now, although there is a very good engineering plant in Dunfermline, no quotation has been asked from local contractors. Might I ask my right hon. Friend to inquire into this matter also? Unemployment is so serious up there at the present time that even a few men extra employed in any of those works is of very great benefit to the city of Dunfermline.

I do not wish to detain the House further. I have mentioned one major issue and one or two minor considerations, but in my mind the major consideration is uppermost. I beg for the further consideration of the whole Rosyth problem. Even if for the time being the Admiralty has written "Ichabod" on the walls of Rosyth Dockyard, I should like it to remember that the potential glory still remains.

7.42 p.m.

Sir PARK GOFF: I venture to intervene for a few minutes as representing the senior dockyard. As long ago as 894 A.D., Alfred the Great, after one of his scraps with the Danes, said:

> "There is no advantage in living on an island unless your Navy rides in undisputed sway over the waters that surround it."

Last year we were warned that arrears of cruiser construction would be made good as soon as possible. The failure to build new ships has forced the Admiralty to retain vessels which otherwise would have been scrapped, with the result that the repair bill is mounting up and will continue to do so. Delay in shipbuilding only adds to the number of the unemployed, and all the costly equipment of our dockyards is lying idle. The general public has an entirely erroneous idea that the laying down of a battleship only applies to and involves armaments. When a battleship is laid down, orders are given to over 150 firms scattered throughout the country. It gives employment to the mines, to transport, to trades, to manufactures, and to every other kind of industry. Our ships are not luxuries; they are absolute necessities.

The cutting down of the Navy, in my humble judgment, is the worst form of false economy possible. At Chatham there is a very acute shortage of men, particularly in the seamen branch. There is a strong feeling in favour of keeping the men as far as possible in the same ship for a full commission. The reason, of course, is obvious. It is not in the interests of the ship or of the Service to make any change in a ship's company after it has been commissioned, just when a ship's company is getting to know their ship and their officers, and making their ship efficient, clean and happy. At present in the Chatham division there are two cruisers recommissioned for service abroad, the "Cumberland" for China, and the "Dispatch" for the Mediterranean, and in addition there are the annual routine reliefs for gunboats and sloops for China. The shortage of men there is so great that, unless men who have just returned from foreign service are again to be sent abroad, the only alternative is to pick them out of recommissioned ships in the Home Fleet, whereas in normal times the men required were recommissioned from the Royal Naval barracks. The shortage is insufficient to meet the requirements at sea, so the Home Fleet becomes a sort of extra depot for emergencies. The only alternative appears to be less ships maintained abroad, one or more ships put into reserve and the crews sent to barracks, or the Navy personnel increased, and, as everyone knows, the present number is absolutely inadequate.

[Sir Park Goff.]

About four years ago when the Committee made their report upon the reduction of personnel they did not take into account, when recommending the bare minimum, the number of man days lost to the Service when men were on passage to and from foreign stations, particularly China, and also the time men were granted for foreign service leave, both before and after their foreign service. Everyone wants to avoid any feeling of insecurity or any lack of confidence in any way, but any attempt to run the Navy on a card index line must fail. The Admiralty is of necessity an impersonal body, but it is essentially a personal matter that the more freedom, power and authority which can be given to officers of the Fleet afloat the better it will be for the men themselves, for the Fleet and the Service at large.

The Admiralty have now a great opportunity to keep their hold on the Fleet by a bold pronouncement of policy which they are prepared to carry out quite regardless of any criticism or of any obstruction whatever. Personally, I should like to see a training ship for boys as well as the "Frobisher" for cadets. I believe that training in sailing ships gives a far more thorough knowledge of seamanship than years of steam. I do not mean sail training qua sail training, so much as to learn seamanship in sailing ships. I have known it to be very successful in other navies. Boys from 16½ years of age to 18 after a few months at a shore training establishment are sent straight to a ship and to the fleet. A cruise for six months, or perhaps less, in a properly constituted training squadron would be much more valuable and beneficial in my judgment than two years in a fleet battleship. They will come to their ship thoroughly prepared and thoroughly grounded in their job.

I believe that all our problems and all our difficulties to-day date back to Washington, which in my humble judgment, and speaking for myself, was a most colossal mistake. I also deeply deplore and regret, rightly or wrongly, the abandonment of the Anglo-Japanese alliance. That has probably considerably changed the whole world outlook. It has caused Singapore, at any rate, to loom very much larger on the horizon. Those who have been round the world realise and appreciate now more than ever the importance of the Singapore base, and yet when we come back to our island home how many know and appreciate that Singapore is an island? I may be singular, but I have kept my eye, as far as the senior Service is concerned, directed for some years towards the East. Even since I have been in political life I have been an advocate of the Singapore base. I have realised on many occasions its importance. I do not believe in anyone talking about places or countries unless they have been there and seen them for themselves, not only on one occasion but on many occasions, and stayed there. There are some people who go to countries, to distant lands, and smell them for about five minutes and then come back here and tell us all about them with the wisdom of Solomon, the authority of a dictator, and the invulnerability of Achilles. The chief and greatest characteristic of British sea power is that it is never domineering and never selfish. Lloyds is the main mercantile insurance for the world, the Baltic is the chartering market of the world, and the Court of Admiralty is where the foreigner comes to get justice and redress. If German is the language of science and French is the language of diplomacy, then English is the language of the sea. We came by the sea, we live by the sea, and our whole future is on the sea.

7.51 p.m.

Mr. VYVYAN ADAMS: I have listened with keen attention to the speech of the hon. and learned Member for Chatham (Sir P. Goff), and I am sure that his constituents will read it with pride and interest to-morrow. I hope that he does not wish us to infer that the non-building of ships is going to have any serious effect upon the employment problem, because is it not true that these ships have to be defrayed out of revenue which comes from taxes, and the higher the taxation the more is the spending power of the individual limited. I should like, if my right hon. Friend the First Lord of the Admiralty will not take it amiss, to add my sincere congratulations for the manner in which he presented the Navy Estimates to-day. It is indeed a delight to hear the details of a Service expounded by one who is almost entirely its embodiment. There is a story told about a Scottish minister who in the course of his extemporary prayers became so familiar with his Creator that he ended one of his more intimate periods with the phrase "Paradoxical as it may seem, O Lord." I have to submit to the First Lord of the Admiralty a paradox and the relationship of the right hon. Gentleman to myself is very similar to that of the Creator to the Scottish minister. The paradox I have to submit to my right hon. Friend is that the more Great Britain disarms the more secure does she become.

Sir JOSEPH NALL: Rubbish.

Mr. ADAMS: This is not an opinion confined to myself, in spite of the interjection of "Rubbish" on my left flank because the hon. Member will find that "Scrutator" in the "Sunday Times" pointed in the same direction last Sunday, and, if hon. Members will reflect for a moment, they will see that, in spite of the unilateral disarmament which Great Britain has carried out since the Armistice, there is no country in Europe, with the possible exception of Switzerland, that is more secure than ourselves. It is true that Great Britain may still irritate the foreigner, but we seem to succeed to-day in no longer antagonising him. In these circumstances, we are again "The envy of less happier lands." Is it not true that we cannot with that inevitable and decisive forefinger say, as we could 20 years ago, there, or there or anywhere on the Continent of Europe is a potential enemy. Let us consider and compare that with the situation of our immediate neighbours, France and Germany, whose opinions on armaments are quite different from our own. Each of them is neurotically watching the other for the merest simulacrum and scintilla of an insult. That is an entirely different situation from ours. They are admittedly the most insecure nations on the Continent of Europe. One of them is, in the words of the right hon. Member for Epping (Mr. Churchill), "armed to the teeth," though he also suggested that she is "pacifist to the core." The other is apparently, for reasons which are neither clear nor compelling but entirely sentimental, passionately desirous to rearm.

If I may continue my humble relationship with the First Lord I should like to approach him with a little prayer and a little entreaty. In the January issue of a remarkable production called "Home and Empire," superscribed with the Union Jack, I read :

> "The allegation too often heard from Socialists that this country is standing in the way of general disarmament has been described by the First Lord as 'not only stupid but unchristian'; and when it is remembered how this country has reduced its armed forces in spite of increasing armaments elsewhere the words cannot be regarded as being a whit too strong."

I want to make one comment on that statement, though I doubt very much whether the First Lord of the Admiralty ever uttered it, because his wisdom is celebrated. It would be difficult to reconcile the Sermon on the Mount with a 16-inch gun. But I suppose that my right hon. Friend the First Lord can be trusted not to repeat a statement of that sort if he ever, in fact, did say it. The Navy is not in any sense sacrosanct. After all, we not only represent the taxpayers in this House, but we are taxpayers ourselves, and when one considers that a sum of £53,000,000 has to be defrayed by the taxpayers it is a sum which cannot be sneezed at. Out of every sovereign a taxpayer pays in Income Tax, over 1s. goes in the form of ship money. And £10,000,000 nearly in spent annually in keeping our 15 capital ships in commission.

I wish to revert to something which I have mentioned at greater length before in this honourable House, that in my view the battleship is to-day, as it has always been, the key to disarmament, at all events to naval disarmament. It is a notorious fact that she is the mother of that odious and loathsome craft the submarine. We have tried before, and we have found that it is absurd to try to outbuild our naval rivals. I would like the First Lord in his reply to explain why it is that the Government have not more consistently pressed for a limitation of the maximum size of battleships to a size between 10,000 and 6,000 tons displacement. The hon. and learned Gentleman who has just spoken suggested that the Washington Conference was a calamitous occurrence. I suggest that that is really not in accordance with the facts, when one considers the burden on the taxpayer. Thousands of tons of shipping was scrapped on that occasion by ourselves, and the building of thousands of tons was deferred by the London Naval Treaty of 1929. As I have said, the money has to came from the taxpayer's pocket, and it means a tremendous drag upon industry. There are strong reasons in the minds of some naval experts why the super-battleship in excess of 10,000 tons should be unilaterally scrapped. To my mind those reasons are conclusive.

[Mr. Adams.]

But I have raised this point before in the House, and I do not want to expatiate at any length on it. I will, for the purposes of argument, take the orthodox view that these battleships can only be scrapped by general agreement. But I would like to know from the First Lord how it is that the figure of 22,000 tons, which is proposed to be the new limit for the super-battleship, has been arrived at. Indeed I cannot see any reason—I have examined this matter at some length, as far as a layman can—why 22,000 tons has been fixed and not 100,000 or 10,000; I have always been informed that the defensive purpose of the capital ship is to arrest any merchantman, the largest possible merchantman or liner carrying contraband or munitions or troops from one point to another, and if you get universal agreement to limit the tonnage of these ships to 6,000 or 10,000 tons I believe it is conceded by naval experts that that maximum would be adequate. It is obvious that in the case of the liner, however large, her decks and her structure cannot carry more than a gun of a certain calibre, six inches or 7.5 inches. I am informed by naval experts that a cruiser, or capital ship as it would be in the new dispensation, of 6,000 or 10,000 tons, would be quite adequate to deal with a liner so equipped.

Yet we go on gambling with the super-battleship idea, toying with the possibility of constructing in 1936 a whole new series of these vast and vulnerable vessels. When I use the word "vulnerable" I am immediately reminded of the air, and I cannot forget that a battleship displacing, say, 30,000 tons, extends on the face of the ocean to the vertical attack of a bomber a target covering several acres. I am in great difficulty over this because I must remember that the occasion to-night is not the Air nor the Army Estimates. But if I may I would say in parenthesis that I think the whole basis on which we deal with the defensive Services is entirely faulty, because one can no longer treat the three Services with the detachment that was possible in former days. The more complicated, the more intricate and the more expensive the problem of defence becomes, the more obvious becomes the need of some Ministry of Defence. If I mention battleships I cannot escape reflecting about the bombing aeroplane, and when I consider the military value, the defensive value, of territorial infantry, I immediately have to consider the menace from the air. If the Territorial Army were equipped with wings there might be some justification for applauding an increase in expenditure or restoring expenditure upon the Territorial arm.

This necessity for a real examination into the problem of a Ministry of Defence was definitely indicated in the report of a Sub-Committee of private Members on which I served last summer. I think I can say without arrogance that that sub-committee was a strong one. It consisted partly of experts, and partly of Members entitled and able to take a fairly impartial view. Those hon. Members who regularly attended it, consisted of two General Officers, an Admiral, a Lieut.-Commander and two members of the Bar who might be considered able to sift evidence and estimate values. We were eloquently presided over in the tropical heat of last September by the hon. and gallant Member for Harrow (Sir I. Salmon), and, as he said at the time, we were giving the Government something for nothing. But the net result of our endeavours is that our suggestions have been substantially ignored.

I say on quite general grounds that I cannot help feeling, with some hon. Members who have spoken earlier in the Debate to-day, that this increase in naval expenditure is to be deplored. For one thing the National Government came into power with no specific pledge at all, but with one very positive implied pledge, the pledge of economy. That, of course, is to some degree vitiated by this increase in expenditure. Furthermore, the Disarmament Conference at this moment is in a most critical condition, likely to be thrust over the precipice by any sudden shock from outside—any sudden or slight shock. And in consideration of that I do wish it had been possible to withhold this new expenditure for at least another year. Could we not, if these replacements were absolutely necessary, have found some means of suspending some of the expenses which normally would be incurred from year to year—at all events make it apparent that we were not increasing the Estimates by £3,000,000?

It is often said about the British Navy that it has been unilaterally disarmed, but I would say, if hon. Members will come with me into the sphere of the highest values, that if unilateral disarmament is to be carried out at all I shall be very proud to see my own country do it first. After all, the Government just over a fortnight ago, on 27th February, did something unilaterally in the international sphere. They put an embargo on the export of arms and munitions—an embargo which was removed with an absolutely incomprehensible suddenness. If it was right to impose an embargo on 27th February it was right to maintain it on 13th March. But be that as it may, the decision was taken, and if hon. Members consider for one moment, upon the general question of armaments and arms and the embargo on arms, they will find themselves confronted with a quite simple issue of right and wrong, and if the folly of armaments is some day to be stopped, not perhaps by absolutely general agreement but by multilateral or unilateral action, I am patriot enough to want my country to lead in that direction.

8.12 p.m.

Dr. O'DONOVAN: If there is one place in London that is the showplace of the British Navy for those Londoners who cannot afford or have not the desire to go to the southern coast, it is the Royal Naval Hospital at Greenwich. It is a most beautiful building, perhaps the most beautiful in England. It is to-day easily accessible by motor boat from Charing Cross and by many other means of transport. If it is the showplace of the British Navy to Londoners I beg the First Lord to give a little of his attention to the way in which the public can get into it and the way in which they are received when they get there. When I was a boy in London, in the intervals of medical studies I wasted much time in the painted hall and got a great love for the British Navy. But recently, when taking my own children there, first of all I was startled by the demand of a charge for admission, which I think cannot result in the obtaining of a sum of money proportionate to the irritation it gives, and, secondly, I was astounded by the dull and dingy nature of the painted hall and the incompleteness of the museum. The painted hall is dull, the great pictures are difficult to see, and the faces are not well recorded.

The museum is a wonderful museum of shipbuilding, of the history of North Pole exploration and of Nelson's career. The articles on view are labelled in a way that was satisfactory in the days of Queen Victoria but has not kept pace with modern standards of museum equipment. The painted hall and the museum are practically all that the Londoner can see. Should he attempt to go to Admiralty House he will find, as I found, a notice in the hall "If you see a stranger hold him fast." Therefore the one building to which the Londoner might have free access, is worthy of a little personal attention from the First Lord.

8.15 p.m.

The CIVIL LORD of the ADMIRALTY (Captain Euan Wallace): I think the opening sentences in which my hon. Friend the Member for Aberdare (Mr. G. Hall) representing the Opposition, began his speech this afternoon, indicated the tone of this Debate for he began by saying that he had very little fault to find with the Navy Estimates of this year. I therefore find myself in the enviable position of rising rather with the object of giving information than of answering hostile criticism. I should like to say at once that certain matters which have been referred to this afternoon and notably some part of the speech of the hon. Gentleman who spoke from the Front Bench opposite, and practically the whole of the speech of the hon. Member for Broxtowe (Mr. Cocks) relate to training and personnel and, therefore, fall within the ambit of the specific Amendment which is to be moved later. I hope the hon. Member for Broxtowe will not think me discourteous if I leave the reply to the interesting questions raised in his speech to my Noble Friend the Parliamentary Secretary to the Admiralty.

[Captain Wallace.]

So many extremely interesting speeches have been made and so many interesting questions have been asked that it would be impossible for any representative of the Admiralty, fortified as he is bound to be with all the knowledge to be obtained from such a very great Department, to answer all those questions in the space of time for which the House of Commons would tolerate a speech from this Box. I would therefore say to hon. Members on all sides that any points in their speeches which are not specifically replied to must not be regarded as having been ignored or rejected. I am certain that my right hon. Friend the First Lord and indeed the whole Board of Admiralty will do everything they can to gather wisdom from this important Debate.

Two of the principal subjects dealt with and the two which formed the burden of most of the speeches were, first, the subject of Disarmament and, second, the question of the utilisation of coal for fuel, with what may be regarded as the allied question of the use of Diesel engines. As far as disarmament is concerned, I think the House will recognise that it would be a singularly ill-timed occasion for a junior representative of the Admiralty in this House to make any general pronouncement when at this very moment our Prime Minister and our Foreign Secretary are at work in Geneva. I should like, straight away, to reassure the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Darwen (Sir H. Samuel) and to tell him that the Estimates which we are presenting, not only as regards new construction but as regards everything in them, represent no departure whatever from our established Programme. We are not speeding up, we are not going outside our strict rights, if I may call them rights, under the Treaty of Washington and the London Naval Treaty. I may, on this point, venture to remind him and also my predecessor in office, that one of the reasons for the increased expenditure to which they drew unfavourable attention is that this year we are engaged in financing a Programme which they themselves were responsible for laying down.

I was asked by my hon. Friend opposite whether it was necessary to include four cruisers in this year's programme. I say unhesitatingly, Yes. It is only by including in this year's programme the four cruisers which remain to us under the proposals of the treaties that we can hope to have them completed by the end of December, 1936, and I do not believe that either the hon. Gentleman opposite or his right hon. Friend who is no longer in this House—Mr. Alexander—if they were at the Admiralty to-day, in view of what both have said on public platforms, would be willing to risk another unilateral gesture of this kind. My hon. Friend also asked me whether we still want capital ships and whether we still require 50 cruisers. The whole question of capital ships and cruisers has also been dealt with by my hon. Friend the Member for West Leeds (Mr. V. Adams). It is a very big subject, but I shall try to answer both hon. Members in the fewest possible words which will suffice. We do want capital ships because we believe that the abolition of the capital ship would make the cruiser the capital ship of the future—the biggest unit—and we believe the result, so far from leading to economy, would be to involve us in considerably increased expense. We do say, however, that we could do with a capital ship of much diminished displacement. My hon. Friend the Member for West Leeds asked why we had selected the figure of 22,000 tons. I think it fair to say quite briefly that 22,000 tons, in the view of the Board of Admiralty, represents the minimum figure which will give adequate protection, suitable endurance and tolerably decent living conditions for the people who have to pass their lives in the ship.

As regards the proposals made by President Hoover, I was asked why we did not support them. The short answer is that we preferred our proposals which, though they were not made exactly the day after the other proposals, had actually been in the Admiralty some time before they were published. We preferred them because we believed they were simpler and cheaper and would, in the long run, effect more real disarmament. I cannot resist saying that it seems a little odd that there are numbers of people in this House who, when any proposals for disarmament are put forward, seem to have a devastating affection for anything proposed by a foreigner as against anything proposed by us. We have to realise that in regard to disarmament there are two factors to be taken into consideration. There is, first, the factor of relative limitation. If the Navy is to perform its function of keeping the trade routes of the world open for the British Mercantile Marine, engaged in its peaceful avocations, it makes all the difference what ships you are unfortunately obliged to regard as potential enemies. There is besides that relative limitation, the absolute limitation imposed upon us by the number of sea miles that we have to protect, and the House of Commons and the country would be deluding themselves if they believed that, because everybody else in the world was willing to do away with naval forces down to what may be termed zero, this country would be wise to do the same or, indeed, would be able to do so.

I turn to an entirely different subject which was dealt with in the principal speech from the Opposition and was also touched upon in a very thoughtful and obviously well-considered speech from the hon. Member for Pontypridd (Mr. D. Davies). The question of the "back-to-coal" movement is of such public importance to-day as to demand, even at the risk of boring those who are familiar with the subject, a reiteration of certain basic principles. First of all, we ought to be quite clear as to the size of the problem and the possible good effect upon the coal industry if we were able to solve it in the way which hon. Members opposite, and indeed in all quarters of the House, desire. If it were possible for the Royal Navy to return entirely to the use of coal for fuel, it is estimated that we should, in peace time, use approximately 800,000 tons a year. That figure represents less than one-third of 1 per cent. of the total output of the British coalmines. Therefore it would be a great mistake for anybody in the country to delude themselves into thinking that the prosperity of that great basic industry, the coal trade of this country, could be restored by the efforts of the Royal Navy alone.

Apart from that, everybody who has studied the question knows very well indeed that the case against burning coal in its raw state under the boilers of His Majesty's ships is absolutely unanswerable, and nobody has put that case more clearly or more forcibly than my hon. Friend opposite when he was Civil Lord of the Admiralty. I do not think it is any exaggeration to say that, taking it all round, the endurance of an oil-fired ship is approximately double that of a coal-fired ship of the same dimensions, and hon. Members will see that, at a time when the amount of tonnage which we are allowed to construct is very strictly limited by Naval Treaties, that factor is even more important than it used to be before the War, when any nation constructed exactly what it liked. Therefore, for all practical purposes, I think we are bound to rule out the idea of burning coal in its raw state.

There remains the possibility of extracting from the coal of this country liquid fuel which will have the characteristics and advantages of oil, and there are, as hon. Members know, to-day two processes by which this can be done. There is, first of all, the low-temperature carbonisation process, to which my right hon. Friend has already referred and expressed his satisfaction that, through the enterprise of one British firm, we have been able to secure a quantity of this home-produced oil, and to burn it by itself—it has not required any mixing—in the boilers of His Majesty's Ship "Westminster." Because, however, we have been able to get a certain quantity of oil fuel of a very high quality from British coal, we must not imagine that the millennium is necessarily within reach. The main product from the low-temperature carbonisation process is not the fuel oil which we require, as hon. Members opposite know. The main product of that process is a semi-coke, which is sold at 59s. a ton, and is a most excellent fuel. We use it at the Admiralty to warm the members of the Board, and I believe it is used in other Government Departments.

But while one ton of coal produces 14 cwts. of semi-coke, it only produces 16 gallons of tar, which in turn produces anything between five and eight gallons of fuel oil. Therefore, the essential thing about this process before it can find any fuel for the Navy is that a market should be found for this solid product. If it were possible for the whole of the 40,000,000 tons of coal used for domestic purposes in this country to be treated in this way, that is, if some Government of the future forbade the burning of bituminous coal in open grates, we should then get anything between 800,000 and 1,200,000 tons of oil fuel. I think most hon. Members will agree with me that the time when we can, by legislation or otherwise, compel the consumer to pay 59s. a ton for his fuel, however excellent it may be, is still some way distant.

[Captain Wallace.]

The other process, hydrogenation, offers the possibility of getting the maximum amount of oil or petrol from coal, and the amount of oil or petrol obtained simply varies according to how far you carry the process, and you are not bothered with having to dispose of another product. The cost of this process is, however, so high that it would only be a commercial proposition to produce petrol of a high grade by this process, and not fuel oil, since the difference in the volume obtained is comparatively negligible, and the difference in price is very considerable. Therefore, I think the House will agree that we have still got some considerable way to go in that direction. I should, however, like to add—and the same thing applies to the pulverised fuel and the colloidal mixtures to which the hon. Member for Pontypridd referred—that the Admiralty are fully alive to the strategical disadvantages of our dependence upon a foreign fuel supply. We are also fully alive to the economic benefits which would accrue to this country if it were possible to get our supplies from home, and I can assure the whole House that our researches into this question in every single one of its aspects are persistent and unremitting and that they will continue.

The other question, somewhat allied to this, which was raised by the hon. Member for Aberdare and also the hon. Member for Pontypridd is that of the Diesel engine. I was asked last year in this Debate, and we were asked to-day, why we did not use Diesel engines in the Navy, because they have them in the German "Deutschland." The short answer is that we do not use them because they are not so good. There are at the moment three kinds of Diesel engine. There is the large slow-speed engine now used in merchant vessels of some kinds. That is much too heavy for the Navy, and for another thing the engine stands too high. Then there is the medium-speed engine, which we do use in submarines. We have some very good ones in the new "River" class of submarines. We use them in submarines, not because they are more efficient than steam plant of the same power, but because you cannot use steam plant in submarines; and it is equally a fact that these medium-speed Diesel engines are not as efficient in that they are considerably heavier per effective horse-power produced.

There are, thirdly, the high-speed Diesel engines, to which the hon. Gentleman has referred, and which are used in this German battleship. The difficulty with them is that you cannot get a power unit more than about 7,000 horse-power. Therefore, to be of any use as the propelling machinery for naval craft, you have to couple a lot of these engines up, and that involves the use of clutches and gearing, with the net result that here again your weight of plant per effective horse-power produced is considerably more than in steam plant of the same capacity, and it has the additional disadvantage of being more bulky. At the same time, we have a high-speed Diesel engine in the Admiralty laboratory, which I think I may say is in a fairly advanced stage. We intend to push on with our experiments, and I hope that before next year's Estimates come round it will be possible to produce something which we shall be able to put into a ship.

There is another question which the hon. Gentleman the Member for Aberdare asked to which I think I ought to reply. He referred to the experiments which we made in building destroyers in dockyards and asked what were the comparative costs. They turned out to be more expensive to build in dockyards than by private contract. I have not the precise figure with me, but I think it was in the neighbourhood of £10,000. That does not mean that we have abandoned the idea of building any more destroyers in dockyards, because any establishment, be it a Government dockyard or a private firm, which builds a destroyer for the first time, obviously does not do it in the most economical way; and the Board of Admiralty have not the least doubt that if and when it may be necessary or possible to give further orders to the Royal Dockyards for destroyers they can be built at practically competitive prices.

The hon. Member for Central Portsmouth (Mr. R. Beaumont) referred to the wastage in dockyard employés. We have felt bound to pursue this policy for some years for the simple reason that our Building Programme has been diminishing. The future is uncertain, and there are many Members who hope that it will diminish still further, and we should have failed to discharge our responsibility to the taxpayer had we engaged on a Government job a large number of people whom we might subsequently have to discharge. I go further and I say that we may congratulate successive Boards of Admiralty and Civil Lords on the fact that we have been able to spread out new construction and repair work not only among the Government yards, but among private contractors, in order to prevent as far as possible dislocation and discharges on what I may call a falling market. So far as the discharge of the electrical fitters is concerned, I am afraid that it is inevitable that every dockyard from time to time should have to discharge men in one trade and take on another. It depends on the stage of construction of the ship and the kind of work that is being done. I hope that it may be possible for the electrical fitters to get back in time, and we may derive a little satisfaction from the thought that an electrical fitter after he is discharged from a dockyard is better able to get a job than most men in other trades.

Let me turn to the speech of my hon. Friend the Member for Dunfermline (Mr. J. Wallace). I must tell him, as I had to tell him last year, very sadly but as sympathetically as I was able, that it is not possible for anybody representing the Board of Admiralty to hold out any hope of such a radical change in policy as would alter Rosyth from a care and maintenance basis to the status of a fully working dockyard. The hon. Member accused the Board of taking rather a narrow view. I assure him as a fellow Scotsman that if I took a narrow as opposed to a national view, I would much sooner see some work going to Rosyth, but I am satisfied, as my predecessors were and as the First Lord is, that under present conditions it is not possible to increase work there. The specific question which he asked me with regard to repairs to oilers happens to be one which was discussed this morning at the Admiralty Industrial Council. I am in a position to be able to tell him that the answer is that there are only 23 men in the Constructive Department at Rosyth, that they are fully occupied without repairing oilers, and that if we had to repair them it would mean bringing in extra staff. The hon. Member, therefore, must take comfort from the thought that what employment is lost in Dunfermline is gained by our mutual friend the Minister of Mines at Leith.

Mr. J. WALLACE: It is no consolation to me to know that fewer people will be employed in Rosyth repairing oilers. My point is that by taking on more men it is not necessary to increase the supervisory staff, which was before the excuse for not doing work at Rosyth. Its claims from that point of view ought to be considered.

Captain WALLACE: The claims were considered last year and have been reconsidered, and I cannot do more than look into them again, but I fear that no new facts are likely to come out of it. I hoped that my right hon. Friend the Member for South Molton (Mr. Lambert) would have found it possible to come back by now, for I have been saving his interesting speech as long as I could. He asked a pertinent question as to whether we were getting our money's worth for our expenditure, which I am glad to see he recognises as being most important. He has made with his usual clarity what I may call the stock case against the Admiralty Office. I do not propose to take up the time of the House by giving him the stock answer because there is in existence an excellent memorandum by the Secretary of the Admiralty which demonstrates beyond the possibility of a peradventure that the decrease in the numbers of the Navy since 1914 is no proper criterion of the decrease which is supposed should have taken place at headquarters. All kinds of other factors have to be considered and I should enjoy giving them to the House but I resist the temptation.

The second question which my right hon. Friend asked was in regard to our co-operation with the Royal Air Force. I can assure him that we co-operate with them very closely. We have had for some time at the Admiralty a special department under the Director of the Naval Air Division. We have in more recent times appointed a Rear-Admiral in charge of the aircraft carriers, with the most beneficial effects from every point of view. I was fortunate enough the other day when I was in Malta to attend a conference on the results of some exercises which had taken place during the winter cruise and among many things which impressed me, nothing impressed me more than the very close co-operation which was maintained between the Navy and the air arm throughout two very long and rather difficult exercises. My right hon. Friend seemed rather to resent the idea that our aeroplanes were designed by the Air Ministry, but the First Lord and, I think, the rest of us, are willing to believe that the Air Ministry can design aeroplanes better than the Admiralty, and we are very glad to leave the technical side of the Fleet air arm in their hands.

[Captain Wallace.]

Finally, the right hon. Member for South Molton asked me about Singapore. I am only going to say this. Of course the Board of Admiralty does envisage eventually having a properly equipped and defended naval base at Singapore. Everybody who has studied the problem, indeed, anybody who has ever bothered to look at a map of the world, or one of those round globes which are seen in nurseries, must realise that such a base is necessary in order that our Fleet may have complete mobility in all parts of the world. Not only is this view held at the Board of Admiralty, but it is also held by other members of the British Commonwealth, who have signified their acceptance of that view by substantial contributions to the cost of the base. I think that may be taken as an indication of our eventual intentions. For the moment, the work is progressing satisfactorily, and there is every reason to believe that Sir John Jackson will complete his contract in time. For the moment we only contemplate the completion of those heavy engineering works which are now in progress and which form the backbone of the scheme.

Just one word in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Mile End (Dr. O'Donovan). I am sure that he will be very glad to know that as the result of a generous benefaction the Royal Hospital School is moving from the congested area of Greenwich to a new home in the country. We hope to get that move carried out at the beginning of next term. It is then proposed to hand over the buildings which have been occupied by the Royal Hospital School at Greenwich to a board of trustees under the Office of Works, and there to create a suitable, and I hope impressive, Naval museum. Those relics which exist, as my hon. Friend said, in large numbers, and in very inadequate accommodation in the Painted Hall and other places, will then be displayed under better conditions.

Curiously enough, no one has drawn attention in this Debate to the value of the trade which the Navy, to my mind, exists to protect. I think it is perhaps worth while to point out that last year the declared value of our imports and our exports was £1,119,000,000, and that the estimates for the naval defence of that vast trade represent less than 5 per cent. of its value. Only four months ago the First Lord himself reminded the House that every day there comes into our ports 110,000 tons of merchandise and 50,000 tons of foodstuffs. It is quite true that the conquest of the air has already compelled us to envisage the naval defence of our 80,000 miles of trade routes from a new angle, and may require us to make further modifications. The Royal Air Force can co-operate with, and can in some cases supplement, but in my view it can never supplant the Navy in this vital rôle of commerce protection, and it is, in the words of the preamble to the old Naval Discipline Act, 1866:

> "the Navy whereon, under the providence of God, the wealth, safety and strength of the Kingdom chiefly depend."

PERSONNEL.

8.50 p.m.

Captain PETER MACDONALD: I beg to move, to leave out from the word "That" to the end of the Question, and to add instead thereof the words:

> "in the opinion of this House, it is essential that special attention should be paid to the provision of ample qualified personnel, both on the active and reserve lists of the Royal Navy, with an adequate margin for drafting and training, and to the maintenance of the high standard of training necessary to meet the increasingly responsible duties caused by modern naval developments."

In moving this Amendment I do not intend to dwell at any great length upon general considerations. The necessity for this country to maintain an adequate and efficient Navy has not only been dealt with in this Debate but has been maintained by men of practical intelligence for many centuries past. However much we may deplore it, the fact remains that whatever negotiations have taken place with the nations of the world since the War have not encouraged us to place any reliance in, or to leave our people dependent upon, such security as may be attained by international agreement. So long as this country remains dependent not only for its prosperity but for its very existence upon its trade routes, so long is it absolutely essential that we should maintain an adequate force to protect us from such weapons as may be employed against our trade routes by our potential enemies. I know there are people in this House who take the view that the developments of aviation since the War should cause us to take an entirely different view of the methods to be employed for the defence of this Realm and the Empire. Whatever may be said for the co-ordination of the Navy and the Air Force I still maintain that the main work of protecting the trade routes must rest upon the Navy. Aircraft, both military and civil, can be countered by anti-aircraft guns and by other aircraft, and if aircraft are to operate over our trade routes it is absolutely essential that they should have bases from which to operate. These bases can only be provided by ships, and ships of His Majesty's Navy. Ultimately, therefore, whatever may be said for co-ordination between the two Services, the main duty of defending the trade routes must remain with His Majesty's Navy. Furthermore, as aviation develops, and aircraft operate further and further from their home bases on land, it becomes more necessary that the trade routes of the country must be forced further and further afield from the normal trade routes, which will entail not fewer ships but more and bigger ships for their protection.

The case for a strong and efficient Navy being made out, what are the Lords of the Admiralty doing to maintain that strength and efficiency? I note in the Estimates that provision is being made for new construction. Whatever criticism may be offered in opposition to this expenditure, and there has been considerable criticism, I maintain that in view of the delayed Programmes for construction in the last few years the increase of £3,000,000 in the present Estimates for this purpose is a very small one. In addition, there is the further consideration that this new construction is giving employment to thousands of men who otherwise would be unemployed. It is estimated that 80 per cent. of the cost of a ship is for labour, and that 80 per cent., and perhaps more, is being paid or will be paid in wages to men who otherwise would have no means of livelihood for some time to come.

Arguing from that basis alone, the laying down of these new hulls is justified. I know that there are people whom the First Lord described as "bloody-minded pacifists"—I think he called them, or "blood-thirsty pacifists"—who mainmain that this is a wrong method of spending money on employing labour, but it may be far better to build battleships and have bread than to preach pacifism and starve. That is a view which I am quite sure is taken by many men in our private shipbuilding yards and dockyards. While I welcome the fact that the Estimates provide for an increase in materials and ships, I deplore that corresponding provision is not made for the personnel. I deplore the fact that the personnel has been reduced by an additional 1,100 officers and men this year. That is a very dangerous tendency. When you consider that the personnel has been decreased by 13,000 in the last five years, it makes us wonder if the Lords of the Admiralty are placing far too much reliance upon the mechanics of the Navy and are not sufficiently considering the old argument that it is the men who man the ships and that it is a question of the man behind the gun.

The London Naval Treaty places no restriction upon personnel. It is interesting to notice what other great Powers have done and how they have taken advantage of that fact. In 1914 the United States had 67,258 officers and men, and in 1932 they had 107,000 officers and men, an increase of 40,000. Japan in 1914 had 50,645 officers and men, and in 1932 89,000, or an increase of 39,000. Italy in 1914 had 40,023 officers and men, and in 1932 53,000, or an increase of 13,000.

[Captain Macdonald.]

Great Britain in 1914 had 146,047 officers and men, and in 1932 91,410, a decrease of 54,637. The United States from 1914 to 1932 increased their personnel by 59 per cent.; Japan in the same period increased her personnel by 75 per cent., and Italy by 32 per cent. Great Britain decreased her personnel by no less than 37 per cent., until to-day she is on the same basis as Japan, whereas according to the London Naval Treaty the Japanese Navy should have been at a ratio of three to five compared with ours. In view of those figures, I am inclined to ask whether the Lords of the Admiralty are sufficiently considering the necessity of maintaining a personnel, as well as ships and guns, to man the Navy in the future.

I come to the question of training. I am very pleased to learn from the Memorandum accompaning the Estimates that provision is being made for the training of the active personnel. I was pleased to hear from the First Lord that greater attention is to be given to the individual responsibility of young officers and petty officers in the Service. On the whole, that seems quite satisfactory. It is regrettable to hear that the Admiralty have had to cut down on the question of sea-training. I know that there are many arguments, in these times of economy, for cutting down expenditure, but I ask if it is wise to cut down so severely in sea-training. The questions of fuel and of the wear and tear of guns and machinery are strong arguments, but nevertheless I have always been of the impression that an essential part of the training of a sailor and of a seaman was in seamanship and navigation. Unless officers and men are to be given a chance of sea-training, I cannot see how they can be prepared to meet an emergency when it arises. I share the regret of the First Lord that sail-training is not looked upon with favour by the Lords of the Admiralty. That is very unfortunate. It is, to my mind, a very economical form of training, because no fuel is required and no machinery is likely to be in any way damaged. You have the opportunity of sending cadets to sea for long periods to get the experience of seamanship and navigation which every sailor should have.

I remember on returning from a cruise, a couple of years ago, being on the bridge one day with the captain of the ship when he said: "Will you look through that glass? You will see a very fine sight, one which you will never see again." I said "What is that?" He replied, "It is one of the last of the windjammers." I looked through the glass and I did see a very beautiful sight. Against the sky-line, in full sail, was a four-masted, full-rigged ship. I knew that everybody on board would be anxious to see it on a pleasure cruise, so I asked the captain if he could change his course and go up nearer. He did, and everybody on board—there were about 2,000 people—rushed to photograph the ship. There is no one who does not treasure that photograph to-day, because there is no sight more pleasing to the eye than a ship in full sail. That ship was the "Bremen," and we were informed that it was a training ship for German cadets. When it drew up nearer, we were told that they had been practically six months at sea, and that they were 14 days out from Amsterdam. Surely that is the kind of training that is needed. Training ships could be obtained from the mercantile marine. Lying on our mud banks are many ships suitable for the training of cadets and officers. Why should they not be commissioned and sent to sea? I regret very much that the Lords of the Admiralty have turned down the, to me, very welcome suggestion of the First Lord as to the adoption of sail-training for naval cadets. It makes me feel that the Lords of the Admiralty to-day have no romance in their souls; it has been driven out by steel and oil.

There is one other question with which I want to deal, and that is the question of the reserve. It occurs to me that surely, when the active personnel of a Service is being cut down, it becomes all the more necessary to concentrate on the reserves of that Service. One finds that, although the Army is provided this year with £900,000 for the training of Territorials, the Navy is provided with only £355,000 for the training of its reserve. I submit that that is too low a sum. I regret very much that there has been a decrease of £3,000 in Royal Naval Reserve expenditure, and I notice, from the Memorandum of the First Lord, that this is due to smaller requirements for the training of officers and the obligatory training of men. I should like an explanation as to why there is a smaller requirement for the training of officers at a time when the active personnel is being cut down. I should have thought that it would have been all the more imperative, in such circumstances, that greater reliance should be placed on the training of reserves. I think that this tendency is a very unfortunate and very dangerous one.

I also regret very much that the training periods both for the Royal Naval Reserve and for the Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve have been reduced this year. In the case of the Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve, the only provision made on this Vote is £63,000. Surely, that is a very modest sum, particularly as there are so many Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve officers and men to-day in the Mercantile Marine who are unemployed, and who would jump at the opportunity of putting in some time in training for His Majesty's Navy. I would ask the Financial Secretary if some consideration could not be given to the question of providing further training for the Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve, particularly at the present time, when there is so much unemployment in the Mercantile Marine.

I notice another list, headed "Officers on Retired and Emergency List," and for the training of that list the sum of £200 is provided. What is this list? It contains the names of about 150 officers. I wonder how many of these have had a single day's training since they left the Service? I notice that the name of the First Lord is on that list, and I think that, perhaps, he is the only officer who by virtue of his position has had any connection whatsoever with the Navy since he retired. He shares the honour of being on the list with a captain 77 years of age. I am wondering what kind of emergency would bring that veteran hurtling back to the Colours, and whether he would be allowed to bring his bath chair with him? Surely it is time that these lists were gone into further. If it is necessary to have an emergency list, there are 10,000 retired officers who could be drawn upon, instead of having a redundant list, such as this, of officers who in many cases are over 70.

We have heard a good deal to-day about the training of cadets. In that connection there has been a good deal of vacillation in the past. I think the first idea was that boys should be entered at a very early age, 13 or 14, that they should spend four or five years in the "Britannia," and should then be sent to sea. Subsequently, it was decided that they should spend two years at Osborne and two years at Dartmouth, with a year at sea. Since then the "Britannia" has been scrapped, Osborne has been scrapped, and all that remains of the old system of training is Dartmouth. One or two speakers, who have, perhaps, a greater knowledge of the Navy than anyone else in the House, and particularly my hon. and gallant Friend the Member for Burnley (Vice-Admiral Campbell), suggested that the percentage of selected candidates for Dartmouth is too small. In fact, my hon. and gallant Friend even went further and said that Dartmouth should be done away with altogether. I do not go that far; I think there is room for Dartmouth; but there is room also for cutting down in the cost of that institution. It cost about £50,000 this year over and above the fees paid by the parents of cadets. I think that that is rather a large sum, and could be cut down. I agree, however, that there is scope for a greater number of cadets for the Navy being chosen from public schools. I think, myself, that the age of 13 or 14 is too young for a boy to be expected to decide definitely what his future career is to be, whereas at the age of 17½ he has some idea of what his qualifications and his desires are, and has a far better chance, if he enters the Service at that age of making a success of his career than if he is pushed into it at 13 or 14, sometimes, perhaps, against his will, and expected to make a success of it.

I should like to ask whether the Navy is not to-day too much at the mercy of the technician? We seem to be pouring out money on technical improvements in the Navy. We are spending as much as £1,500,000 on a small ship, and as much as £1,000,000 on reconditioning an old ship nearly 20 years of age, but, nevertheless, we find that the cost of the active personnel and reserve is continually being cut down. I cannot help feeling that that policy is dangerous and unwise. I would like to know, as others have indicated to-day that they would like to know, whether the Admiralty is not a little too expensive. When we consider that the active personnel has dropped by 37 per cent. since 1914, while the civilian personnel at the Admiralty has increased by 65 per cent., it makes us wonder how these people are employed. I know that the clerical work of the Admiralty has greatly increased since 1914, but it seems to me that that percentage is thoroughly out of proportion, and that the matter should be looked into. I see that, by certain changes which the First Lord enumerated to-day, a saving is to be made, but only a saving of £10,000. When one considers £10,000 in relation to £53,000,000, it is a very small amount indeed to save on that Department.

[Captain Macdonald.]

I think also there might be a great saving, both in money and in efficiency, if sailors were not retired at such an early age. Forty years of age, when they are at their prime and at the height of their efficiency, is far too early and is far too heavy an expense to be borne by the taxpayers, because that adds to the non-effective Vote, which has gone up from £8,000,000 two years ago to £9,000,000 this year, and it will be increasing each year. Surely a great deal could be saved by keeping men on after the age of 40. It would save not only in the efficiency of the Navy but in other ways. The men who retire are swelling the ranks of the unemployed among the mercantile marine. That is a very serious matter, and it is causing a good deal of feeling between the Services. Why the men should be retired at 40 when an officer only reaches that stage at the age of 50 and is kept on the active list until 65 I cannot conceive. Perhaps the Financial Secretary will give some explanation. I hope he will take these suggestions and criticisms that I have made as constructive as they were intended to be. It is very difficult to find anything fundamentally or radically wrong with the personnel or training of the Navy. I have come in contact with them a great deal, and I say without hesitation that a finer, or a more efficient body of men will not be found in the world. But in spite of that, I do not think it does to look upon the matter with too much complacency, and it is because I believe that on the strength and the efficiency of the Navy depend the security not only of this country but of the whole Empire, and the peace of the world that I move this Amendment.

9.18 p.m.

Commander MARSDEN: I beg to second the Amendment.

I do so with the greater pleasure because I think my hon. and gallant Friend has certainly struck the right subject for discussion. As far as construction goes, we are more or less tied down by our various Treaties, but in the manning and training of the Fleet we have a subject on which the House can do a lot of useful work, I do not say by adversely criticising the existing training but rather by helping the First Lord by urging him on to further efforts in that direction. At the first glance it would appear that, in regard to the numbers of the Navy, we are very much down on last year, but I now appreciate the fact that the lowest ebb of the whole of the financial year is to-day. Every day after this we shal have more men. There are 800 more boys under training this year than last. Then there is the direct entry of ordinary seamen, which started last October. Allowing about 200 men to each of the three ports, at the end of the financial year I estimate that that will give about another 800 men. I do not think that number is anything like satisfactory. I had it in mind to suggest something that my hon. and gallant Friend has already mentioned, and that is that we should utilise in some manner the unemployed in the mercantile marine. When we enter men on the short service system, as far as I know they need have no qualifications beyond possessing certain physical requirements and some sort of education, but not very much. It seems an extraordinary thing to enter men as seamen who need have no knowledge whatever of the sea. If you enter them for any other trade, the first qualification is that they should be really masters of that trade. So I suggest that we might consider the large number of seafaring young men along our coasts who would already have valuable qualities before they entered the Navy, including a close knowledge of the sea, probably greater than most men rated as seamen in the Navy would acquire after 22 years' service. They also understand discipline and know that the captain is captain of the ship and gives the orders.

My hon. and gallant Friend has suggested that the reserve should be enlarged and that these men might be used in the Fleet now. I should like to suggest another form of short service entry of five years for young men who can bring some certificate to show that they have some experience and knowledge of the sea. If they are entered for a short period, they have not a long term of years before them in case they do not like the conditions. We were told to-day that there were 42,000 unemployed in the mercantile marine, an increase of 5,000 in six months. Surely amongst them there must be several thousands whom we might enrol for five years service. It would be economical. We could explain that they could not get married and would not receive a marriage allowance and there would be no question of a pension for them, though I hope we could be generous enough to give them some reasonable bonus at the end of their term, always leaving an avenue open for a few who might be exceptional to remain on. I commend that suggestion to the Admiralty. The difficulty with the men is this, and it applies to the officers as well. The boys that we get are of the highest standard. They come in with very high qualifications and receive a very sound training, I imagine considerably sounder than officers got years ago, and they come to sea bursting with enthusiasm, thinking they are going to be immediately rated up to petty officers and, perhaps, chosen as sub-lieutenants and going on to higher ranks.

In practice the number who can do that is very small indeed, yet their qualifications up to a point are all equal, so it seems to me that, if we are going to satisfy the lower deck, we must have some other system. The more we bring in this sort of short service men, who can do a large number of duties in the ships which do not require any particularly skilled training beyond an ordinary sense of the sea and common knowledge, the better is the chance of promotion to the higher ranks of those who enter as boys and are trained for our service. Then, as they go on, they may get a chance of being chosen for sub-lieutenants. The expression "promotion from the lower deck" is entirely misleading, because those young seamen who are chosen for the rank of sub-lieutenant have been in the Service a very short time and have had no real opportunity of showing what they can do as petty officers. They merely show a certain promise that in certain conditions they may become good officers.

I am afraid that the hon. Member for Broxtowe (Mr. Cocks) was rather perturbed about these promotions from the lower deck, but it would not say much for our entry and our education through the Royal Naval College at Dartmouth if these seamen sub-lieutenants could reasonably compete. You may get an exceptional case, but, taking it generally, the seaman sub-lieutenant cannot hope to compete for promotion with the officer who has achieved his position either through the Royal Naval College at Dartmouth or is a direct entry public school cadet. Consequently as he gets on in life, he gets rather discouraged and sees no further promotion and settles down in that state of mind, which I dare say we can all appreciate, that he wants the best and softest job he can get until the day comes when he can get his pension. I suggest that the Admiralty should make sure of quite a different type of lower deck promotion. It is the warrant officer who has shown and proven his worth. It would mean promoting this type of man to lieutenant, probably in the early thirties. He would be lieutenant-commander when about 40, and could go on and retire with the rank of commander and full pension, well satisfied with his career in His Majesty's service.

These men also could often really better perform some of the duties which are done now by lieutenant-commanders who are passed over in promotion, and who go on waiting for their time to come. The promoted warrant officer is in an entirely different position. He has achieved something, and it is up to him to fulfil his job as well as he can until the end of this service. We come then to the commander—for the big jump is from lieutenant-commander, and then from commander to captain. The number promoted from one rank to the other is pitiably small. There, again, once an officer is out of the zone it is simply a question of waiting for the year to come when he can retire on the highest maximum pension. The First Lord has laid great stress on age. There I do not agree with him at all. When I was a midshipman I used to think that 40 was quite old, but when I arrived at the age of 40 I was not at all of that opinion. After all, what is age? Experts tell us that you cannot judge a lady by the years she has lived, but rather by her looks. I know perfectly well that you cannot judge a man by his age. I would not judge a man even by his agility. We want a man whose brain is strong, who can visualise a position and give strong orders and see that they are carried out. What have years got to do with that? It is the man himself.

[Commander Marsden.]

It was not the young man that you called in in the awkward situation in the Fleet about two years ago. We did not send for any young admiral but for one of the oldest seagoing admirals of the Fleet and a man who, if he had not had that opportunity, would probably never have been employed again. So I do hope the Admiralty will keep out this idea of age and come to some other arrangement which will ensure that the best officers are retained irrespective of age. The First Lord said that thanks were due, as they undoubtedly are, to the six senior admirals who have gone in order to start the flow of promotion right down to lieutenant-commander. That was very noble and patriotic of them. It was not quite satisfactory for the captain who was employed and who might have been employed a year or two longer, but who has had to come to the top of the list, without the slightest desire to do so, and has had to be promoted and retire the next day, but it was satisfactory for the commander who could get promotion to captain. Although that may have covered an emergency, I hope the First Lord will not look upon it as a regular or permanent method of keeping the circulation of promotion going. All that has to do with men and officers.

May I say a word about the actual training of the Fleet at sea? I do wish more money could be spent on fuel and munitions, because training is everything. I, personally, had some considerable experience in small ships at sea, and I know full well what it means. Take the ordinary destroyer, and compare it with what destroyers used to be. At Cowes last year I saw a beautiful destroyer, shining with enamel, and perfect. I went down into the engine-room to pass the customary compliments to her engineer, remarking that the engines must have been made by Cartier. The vessel was very wonderful, but I do not feel altogether sure that that ship would be any more effective in a night attack in a rough sea against the enemy than the ships of 15 years ago with the very experienced type of officers to command them—not that I am saying anything against the present officers. On a ship the man is everything. I know full well that in the War if any commander-in-chief had to send out a destroyer for a certain job he would not say, "Has that ship a good gunnery or torpedo record?" He would look at the list of officers and say, "That is the chap; send him to me. I do not care what the ship is; it is the fellow I want. He is going to be in the right place and do the right thing." If you accept that, you can balance the ability, training and experience of the commanding officer against all the other assets of gunnery, torpedoes and everything else. Therefore, I ask the First Lord to give every opportunity to these ships to undergo the fullest system of training as near active service conditions as possible.

That brings me to one other subject, training in sailing ships. I did not quite agree last year with the possibility of training all boys in sailing ships. I knew what that meant. It meant having small sailing ships going round the coast, attached to somebody, for in the Navy you always have to be attached to someone. Those ships would have gone out for sailing purposes and training with orders to be back on a certain date because of arrangements made for them ashore. I, myself, was in favour of rather a different form of training, and I still hope it may be brought about. I have in mind rather the training of men who have shown themselves good seamen and men who would become good petty officers. Out of these there may be selected a certain number to go to sea in sailing ships, not in the small ship, such as a brig or sloop but a well-found ship of some size, with a complement of 300 or 400 men who might make a long voyage round the Horn or to Australia or the Cape. I do not think that there is any man who knows anything about it who will disagree with me when I say that if that ship went off under no orders but those of her captain, the men would return in a few months much better men than when they went.

The cost is not great, not so much as a modern destroyer, and the ship's life is five times as long. The actual consumption of stores is also very small. I hope engines would not be put in her at all. She might be tempted to start the engines going out but on the way back I can see the engines not functioning at all, and the company waiting three weeks outside Plymouth Sound in order to come in under full sail at the proper time. I hope the First Lord will stick to it. He has been talked off it, and I hope he will again show his great powers of persuasion and get this done. I hope it will be realised that you cannot have training without money. Money must be spent in fuel and ammunition, and I do feel that an extra £200,000 or £300,000 spent in that way would be far more to the advantage of the Fleet than large sums we are now spending on reconditioning capital ships. The "Repulse," for example, has just come in for 2 to 2½ years refit costing probably the best part of £750,000. Whatever we have in the way of numbers of ships, I feel sure that the Motion will commend itself to the House. It is merely to ensure that however small and insignificant our Fleet may be, it shall be the best manned, most efficient and best equipped fleet of its size in the world.

9.36 p.m.

Mr. CHARLES BROWN: I do not know whether the hon. and gallant Gentleman the Member for the Isle of Wight (Captain P. Macdonald) and the hon. and gallant Member for North Battersea (Commander Marsden) have been members or not of any of the economy committees about which we have heard so much in recent days, but, apparently, neither of the hon. and gallant Gentlemen is satisfied with the proposals which have been put before the House to-day involving an increase in the Navy Estimates of over £3,000,000. Both of the hon. and gallant Gentlemen are asking for more, and I cannot refrain from making a few comments in view of that fact. The hon. and gallant Member for the Isle of Wight used the phrase that he thought the Admiralty in these days was too much at the mercy of the technicians. Does he think that the Admiralty are their own masters in a matter of that description? Is it not rather that if the Admiralty did not pursue certain policies in regard to technical development they would be ousted by their competitors in other parts of the world? Is it not a fact that if technical developments were not initiated by the Admiralty they would be forced upon them by developments elsewhere, and are not the same processes going on in technical warfare as are going on in industry? Surely, the hon. and gallant Gentleman must know, when talking about the decline in personnel, that part of such decline is due to technical changes. In 1914 we had 39,000 stoker ratings in the Navy and now we have only 18,000 which is largely due, of course, to the change from coal to oil. Obviously, these technical changes bring about reductions in personnel. It is extraordinarily difficult to follow the arguments put forward by the hon. and gallant Member in regard to increasing the personnel of the Royal Navy, when he must know from his own experience and from his knowledge of the Navy that the continual technical changes which have taken place analogous to changes in industry are calculated to reduce personnel, and not to increase it.

I did not hear the opening sentences of the hon. and gallant Member's speech, but when I came into the House he was talking about the protection of trade routes. I cannot help thinking that although the trade routes will be there for a long time, the trade along those routes will be non-existent if His Majesty's Government continue to pursue their present policy much longer. The routes will be there, but there will be no trade to protect if present policies are pursued. Consequently, that may result in the naval economies which many of us on these benches desire. Everybody has been impressing upon us the great need for economy. Ministers have told us about it, and so have back benchers and Members who support His Majesty's Government. I am certain that all Chancellors of the Exchequers would desire to reduce taxation. It is only because of the geographical and the historical traditions of the Admiralty that probably they have this year been able to wring additional expenditure out of an unwilling Chancellor of the Exchequer. He must have been unwilling in view of the very great difficulties. I see that the First Lord shakes his head. I am very glad to know that in certain directions the Chancellor of the Exchequer is willing to spend some money. He is certainly not willing to spend money in the direction I want him to spend it. At any rate, I must take the word of the First Lord that he was not unwilling on this occasion. If you spend money like this at a time when the Chancellor of the Exchequer will have great difficulty in balancing his Budget, I think that before we go into the Lobby hon. and gallant Members who have made speeches in favour of a larger Navy and increased personnel which involves increased expenditure ought to be asking themselves certain questions. In four or five weeks from now they will be asking for reductions in the Income Tax, and I suggest that it is to-day they ought to be thinking about that matter.

[Mr. Brown.]

Commander MARSDEN: My hon. Friend must realise that having made my suggestion for spending money, I put in a suggestion that the money should be taken off the amount now being used for refitting the big ships and used to better advantage for training. It would not mean any extra expenditure on the total Estimate.

Mr. BROWN: That may be the position with regard to the hon. and gallant Gentleman who seconded the Amendment, but the hon. and gallant Gentleman the Mover made no such qualification. I must accept the word of the hon. and gallant Member when he says that he does not want additional expenditure. He thinks that all he requires through the instrumentality of this Amendment could be obtained without additional expenditure. I take his word for it, but that does not alter the general argument. I am asking hon. Members who are in favour of economy and who four or five weeks from now will be asking for reductions in Income Tax to think about the matter to-day. On that occasion there will be another group of hon. Members—perhaps I shall be among them—asking for a reduction in the Beer Duty, but it is to-day that we ought to be thinking about that matter and not in a month's time. If to-day hon. Members go into the Lobby and support proposals which will make it difficult for the Chancellor of the Exchequer to balance his Budget, let alone reduce taxation, how inconsistent will it be in four or five weeks' time to ask for reductions in taxation? Let hon. and gallant Members think about it now, and when a Division is taken go into the Lobby with us against the proposed additional increase in naval expenditure.

9.44 p.m.

The PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY to the ADMIRALTY (Lord Stanley): I am sure that all Members of the House who are interested in naval affairs will join with me in thanking the hon. and gallant Member for the Isle of Wight (Captain P. Macdonald) for raising a subject which is of such paramount importance to the Navy in the interest both of the efficiency and welfare of the Fleet. I need hardly say that we on this bench fully endorse the terms of his Amendment. In his opening sentences he gave us an interesting comparison of the numbers of our personnel with the numbers of the personnel of other countries. I do not propose to follow him very far in that direction, but I would point out that the size of Vote A is determined by the size of our Fleet, and that again is controlled by various agreements which have been come to at Washington and in London, and also by the decision of the Board of Admiralty as to the number of ships which are to be kept in commission. A Debate on those lines would, therefore, be most interesting and, I venture to say, most profitable. But it raises the whole question of naval policy, which I think is far too wide for this Amendment.

I would ask hon. Members not to pay too much attention to actual numbers. Every country has a different method of manning its ships; different countries' ships of the same tonnage and armament might have an entirely different complement, and it must not be assumed from that fact that the ship with the smaller complement is any the less efficient. Efficiency is determined by the quality, not by the quantity, of the men in the ship. You might as well suggest that to level up the difference between Oxford and Cambridge you should put another man into the Oxford boat, but I do not think that you would find much gratitude for that suggestion. He would only get in the way, and he would find nowhere to sit down. The same condition would apply in modern ships. You only put in enough men for the work that there is for them to do, and—what is in these days very important—for the accommodation which is available for them. I can assure hon. Members that full weight is given to the highest standards of training and of fighting ability when the complement of our ships is fixed.

But I would rather deal to-night with a point of more pressing importance, and that is our actual requirements and our present difficulties. This is a very opportune moment to raise this particular discussion. For many years past cuts have been made in Vote A. It has been a very popular form of economy, and I cannot blame my predecessors, who have all been hard pressed, for having availed themselves of this measure. It is a very simple matter to put a ship into reserve, and so to be able to produce economies, and that reduction goes the whole way through the Votes, not only in the pay, but in the clothing, the victualling and the expenses of keeping a ship in commission. So it will be widely understood that that has been a popular way of making the reductions which have been enforced by economy. Now the full effect of that reduction has not been felt until this year. You can put a ship into reserve in a very short time, but it is obviously impossible to get rid of the men in the same time. That would be an arbitrary and unfair way of dealing with them: because their ship is put into reserve, to get rid of them at very short notice. You have perforce to keep them until the period of their engagement has expired.

In recent years, therefore, we have been carrying more men than the fleet actually requires. We have had the use of them, and therefore have not until this year felt the problem to its full extent. This condition, as the First Lord told us in his speech, no longer exists. We are now down to the low limit; in fact this year there has got to be some small increase. The figures at the end of this financial year are going to be 89,350; by the end of the next financial year, for which these Estimates have been framed, it goes up by nearly 1,000. This, then, is the key year. We have reached the datum line, or the limit, which has been mathematically calculated according to the number of ships in commission and other requirements of His Majesty's Navy, with, in addition, a small margin which is in no sense a pool for emergencies but simply sufficient extra men to enable the machinery of drafting to work. Mathematically, we make no allowances for illness, leave, and other reasons of absence of that kind, but in practice, of course, we have to make allowances for that and for the time taken up in transport. For this reason we have to have a small margin simply to enable the machinery of drafting to work at all.

I can assure the House that drafting is one of the most difficult problems which the Admiralty has to face. It is dependent on so many human factors and so many varying conditions. In working on our various drafting plans we keep two main objects in view. The first is to make as few changes in commissions as possible; that point has been fully stressed not only in this Debate but even more in the Debate last year, and I do not think that one can possibly exaggerate its importance. If you can only get these full two-year commissions without any large number of changes in the personnel, you give a chance to the men to settle down, to the officers thoroughly to know their men, and to the men thoroughly to know their jobs. Our second object, equally important, is to get a fair division of every man's time between foreign service, service in the Home Fleet, and shore service, that is, in establishments on land. It can be readily understood that this fair division is a question of the very greatest importance, particularly to the older seamen who have got wives and families on shore.

In order to achieve these objects and to counteract the present shortage, we have adopted several administrative expedients. One has been that active service ratings in certain shore establishments have been replaced by pensioners. Another one has been that ships on a foreign station have come home and paid off before the new ships which are to relieve them have commissioned. Now it is quite obvious that these expedients are not good in themselves. They are not expedients which we could recommend for general adoption, but we feel that they are, on the whole, better than the major evil of continued changes in the ships' companies during commissions, particularly in the Home Fleet. We are now engaged in working out a scheme of drafting which we hope, in combination with the increase in Vote A, will prove to be a real cure. Sailors, whether they be officers or men, must realise that a little over half their time must be spent on foreign service. When they are at home their time is divided equally between service in the Home Fleet and shore service, which covers barracks and training establishments. It is very clear that if you want, say, a two-years' undisturbed commission in the Home Fleet —which is the period at which we aim— then officers and men do approximately five years abroad and five years at home, the five years abroad almost always being broken by a spell up to six months at home. This is the principle upon which we propose to work in the future, and which we hope will meet with success.

[Lord Stanley.]

The whole problem of drafting would be comparatively simple if all men belonged to the same category. You would then only need rough-and-ready divisions into those men you want for your foreign service, those for service in the Home Fleet, and those for service with the shore establishments. But it is greatly complicated by the fact that there are no less than 100 groups of men, all of which have to have their own particular drafting margins. These particular groups or grades of men are really necessary because they are the only men who can carry out particular work in such a complicated machinery as a modern ship of war. The comparatively simple problem which drafting must have presented in years gone by now becomes a jigsaw puzzle of the most formidable dimensions.

I cannot leave the subject of personnel without touching on the chances of promotion. This is obviously a matter affecting the interests and welfare of all ranks in the Navy. Numbers affect materially the chances of promotion. At the top of each rank there is a funnel through which only a limited number can reach the next stage. As far as officers are concerned we are working at it from both ends. We are clearing the top of the list accelerating promotion to captains by one year; and at the same time we are investigating the possibility of reducing the number of posts in a ship which need be filled by junior officers, thus limiting new entrants in proportion. Obviously, the fewer the number of new cadets in the Navy, provided that the senior appointments remain the same, the greater will be the chances of anyone in attaining them. This reduction in the duties of junior officers also fulfils another purpose. It gives a much needed experience to senior petty officers. If the hon. Member for Broxtowe (Mr. Cocks) had read the OFFICIAL REPORT this morning he would have found that several of his questions were answered last night. The number of promotions from the lower deck for the coming year have not yet been settled. In answer to a question yesterday I told the hon. Member that the reason only eight promotions for sub-lieutenants and four in the engineering branches were made, was that although a greater number had been selected these were the only persons qualified.

One word about the new scheme of promotion from the lower deck. I should like to assure the hon. and gallant Member for Battersea North (Commander Marsden) that the promotion of warrant officers to lieutenants is still going on and has not been interfered with in any way by the new scheme. Those interested in this matter will know that the object of the new scheme is to equalise the chances of lower-deck promotions with those who come in as cadets. Previously they were selected at a rather older age than cadets, and quite apart from any disadvantage they may have in having less educational facilities there was the added disadvantage of starting life as a sub-lieutenant several years older than their colleagues from the special entry class or the cadets. The whole point of the scheme is to remedy that evil, and to select them soon after they have joined the ship, give them as much training in the ship as possible, and eventually send them for a preliminary course at Greenwich before they are assimilated into the sub-lieutenants' course at Greenwich; and then go through the remaining stages of the Navy pari passu with those who come in by special entry and the cadets.

So far I have only dealt with the promotion of officers, but we are equally sympathetic with the desire of ratings for chances of promotion One of the disadvantages of the scheme propounded by the hon. and gallant Member for the Isle of Wight to lengthen the service for men beyond the normal 22 years by another five years, would, obviously, be to retard promotion. The men would be much older before reaching responsible rank. It would also materially affect the number of reserves. I quite agree that we can give men in the ratings a better chance of promotion by taking in a larger number of short-service men, and that is one of the reasons why this year we have recruited just under 1,000 short-service men. The hon. and gallant Member for Battersea North went a step further and suggested that we should take in an additional 5,000 men, not only to help unemployment in the mercantile marine, but also to tide us over our present shortage of numbers. Although that is an extremely interesting and ingenious suggestion I am afraid it is one that we cannot accept because the number of short-service men is limited to the fixed proportion which is allowed in each ship for long-service and short-service men. Furthermore, it would be uneconomic to train short-service men for higher non-substantive rates and petty officers.

Our desire is to equalise the flow into and out of the Reserve. One of the difficulties we have to face at the present time is that our establishments are full because a great number of men went into the Reserve this year and, therefore, if we wanted more we have not room to train any new recruits. If we were to go back to the ad hoc method suggested by the hon. and gallant Member for North Battersea, I am afraid that in five years time we should be faced with exactly the same difficulty. The Admiralty policy in regard to recruiting and discharges is to avoid peaks whenever possible. I have been asked whether we are satisfied with the numbers we have got. I can only repeat that we have not room this year to train any more. The right hon. Member for Darwen (Sir H. Samuel) asked whether Vote A numbers would be increased next year. I hope my right hon. Friend will not think me impertinent if I give him the answer given on many occasions by one of the most illustrious leaders of his party, wait and see, until next year's Estimates are introduced.

This is a test year. We are glad of the opportunity of telling the House some of our drafting difficulties, and to assure them that our future requirements will have to be based on the experience gained during the next 12 months. There is not much to be said with regard to training. The ground was fully covered by the Debate last year and by the speech of the First Lord to-day. But there are one or two points which I do not think have been sufficiently realised. One is that the fuel allowance which was cut last year has now been restored, and that the "Frobisher" taking cadets from Dartmouth and special entrants, has now nearly completed its first voyage.

I think a word or two ought to be said on the subject of Dartmouth. Several speakers have expressed doubt whether we were getting full advantage from selecting recruits from Dartmouth, and whether we ought not to rely on the special entry, so that we would not have to pay for so many years of their education. Comparisons are odious, and I certainly do not intend to compare the present products of Dartmouth and the special entry. We are getting admirable results from both. I feel convinced that we are now getting the best value for our money. We have promised that at least 25 vacancies shall be given to the special entry for next year. Personally I think that is about the highest number that we will get from civil educational establishments and yet keep up the high standard that has so far been shown. I think the numbers that are now allotted to our own educational establishment are those best suited for the purpose. I must admit that when I first came to the Admiralty I felt some of the doubts that some of my hon. Friends have expressed this afternoon, but I feel quite convinced that the proportion which we are now allotting is the correct one, and that the only criticism which could fairly be levelled against Dartmouth, namely, that of expense, has been fairly met in the Estimates now presented.

In conclusion I would take an opportunity which is very rarely given of paying a tribute to the Royal Marines, the engineering, accounting and medical branches, and to all classes of Reserves. They carry out their work with such quiet efficiency that they do not get the credit to which they are fully entitled. There are one or two points of interest that the House might like to hear about these various branches. The Royal Marines since the War have suffered from very slow promotion of the officers, on account of reductions which have been made. I am glad to say that that is now adjusting itself and that there are good prospects for young officers in the years to come. With regard to the engineering branch it is important to realise that there is a common entry for cadets in Engineering and Executive Branches and their early training is the same. They then go on to Keyham, where they have a technical education second to none. Both in the Service and out of it they have good prospects. They have particularly good prospects on retirement, owing to the technical education which they have been able to get during their time in the Navy. The conditioning of the "Frobisher" as a sea-going training ship has enabled us to send paymaster cadets to sea for training before their appointment to ships in the seagoing fleets, and that I am sure will be found most advantageous to all concerned. I regret that in the medical branch the shortage of officers still exists. I think the shortage is felt by all the Service departments. It is now the subject of an inquiry by an Inter-Departmental Committee, and we hope soon to find a correct solution of the difficulty.

[Lord Stanley.]

Now a few words about the Reserves. I am sure that the House will learn with pleasure that it has been decided that four captains of the Royal Naval Reserve and two captains of the Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve are to hold the rank of commodore. The rank is to be given to active and retired officers, and is to be held for life. I hope it will be taken in the spirit in which it is given, as a tribute to the service which they have rendered. I am sure that the whole House will greatly appreciate the patriotism and the devotion to duty shown by the personnel of the Reserve, to whom the Royal Navy owes a deep debt of gratitude.

The Amendment and the speeches this afternoon have been very comprehensive and have covered practically every branch and department and sphere of activity for which the Admiralty is responsible. I hope that in the speeches which have been made from this bench most of the questions that have been put to us have been answered, and that as a result the House is satisfied that every aspect of the problem affecting the personnel, both in its training and its welfare, is receiving and will continue to receive the closest continuous attention of the Lords of the Admiralty.

Captain P. MACDONALD: I would thank the Financial Secretary to the Admiralty for his comprehensive reply to the points I raised, and, in view of its satisfactory nature, I beg to ask leave to withdraw my Amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Question put, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair."

The House divided: Ayes, 189; Noes, 30.

Division No. 85.] AYES. [10.12 p.m.

Agnew, Lieut.-Com. P. G.
Albery, Irving James
Allen, Sir J. Sandeman (Liverp'l, W.)
Anstruther-Gray, W. J.
Applin, Lieut.-Col. Reginald V. K.
Apsley, Lord
Aske, Sir Robert William
Astbury, Lieut.-Com. Frederick Wolfe
Baillie, Sir Adrian W. M.
Balniel, Lord
Beaumont, Hn. R. E. B. (Portsm'th, C.)
Bernays, Robert
Borodale, Viscount
Boulton, W. W.
Boyd-Carpenter, Sir Archibald
Braithwaite, J. G. (Hillsborough)
Broadbent, Colonel John
Brocklebank, C. E. R.
Brown, Ernest (Leith)
Brown, Brig.-Gen. H. C. (Berks., Newb'y)
Buchan-Hepburn, P. G. T.
Burgin, Dr. Edward Leslie
Burnett, John George
Cadogan, Hon. Edward
Campbell, Vice-Admiral G. (Burnley)
Caporn, Arthur Cecil
Carver, Major William H.
Castlereagh, Viscount
Clarke, Frank
Clayton, Dr. George C.
Cobb, Sir Cyril
Colman, N. C. D.
Colville, Lieut.-Colonel J.
Cook, Thomas A.
Copeland, Ida
Craven-Ellis, William
Crooke, J. Smedley
Crookshank, Col. C. de Windt (Bootle)
Crookshank, Capt. H. C. (Gainsb'ro)
Cross, R. H.
Crossley, A. C.
Cruddas, Lieut.-Colonel Bernard
Davies, Maj. Geo. F. (Somerset, Yeovil)
Dickie, John P.
Donner, P. W.
Doran, Edward
Duggan, Hubert John
Duncan, James A. L. (Kensington, N.)
Ellis, Sir R. Geoffrey
Elmley, Viscount
Emrys-Evans, P. V.
Evans, Capt. Ernest (Welsh Univ.)
Fermoy, Lord
Foot, Dingle (Dundee)
Ford, Sir Patrick J.
Fuller, Captain A. G.
Ganzoni, Sir John
Gillett, Sir George Masterman
Glossop, C. W. H.
Gluckstein, Louis Halle
Goff, Sir Park
Goodman, Colonel Albert W.
Grattan-Doyle, Sir Nicholas
Greene, William P. C.
Grimston, R. V.
Guinness, Thomas L. E. B.
Gunston, Captain D. W.
Guy, J. C. Morrison
Hall, Capt. W. D'Arcy (Brecon)
Hanbury, Cecil
Harbord, Arthur
Harvey, Major S. E. (Devon, Totnes)
Headlam, Lieut.-Col. Cuthbert M.
Heilgers, Captain F. F. A.
Henderson, Sir Vivian L. (Chelmsford)

Heneage, Lieut.-Colonel Arthur P.
Hills, Major Rt. Hon. John Waller
Holdsworth, Herbert
Hope, Capt. Hon. A. O. J. (Aston)
Hornby, Frank
Horsbrugh, Florence
Howard, Tom Forrest
Howitt, Dr. Alfred B.
Hudson, Capt. A. U. M. (Hackney, N.)
Hunter, Dr. Joseph (Dumfries)
Hunter, Capt. M. J. (Brigg)
Inskip, Rt. Hon. Sir Thomas W. H.
James, Wing-Com. A. W. H.
Jennings, Roland
Joel, Dudley J. Barnato
Jones, Lewis (Swansea, West)
Ker, J. Campbell
Kerr, Lieut.-Col. Charles (Montrose)
Kerr, Hamilton W.
Lamb, Sir Joseph Quinton
Law, Sir Alfred
Law, Richard K. (Hull, S.W.)
Leckie, J. A.
Lees-Jones, John
Leighton, Major B. E. P.
Lindsay, Noel Ker
Lockwood, John C. (Hackney, C.)
Lovat-Fraser, James Alexander
Mabane, William
MacAndrew, Lieut.-Col. C. G. (Partick)
Macdonald, Capt. P. D. (I. of W.)
McKie, John Hamilton
Mallalieu, Edward Lancelot
Margesson, Capt. Rt. Hon. H. D. R.
Marsden, Commander Arthur
Martin, Thomas B.
Mayhew, Lieut.-Colonel John
Merriman, Sir F. Boyd
Mitchell, Harold P.(Br'tf'd & Chisw'k)

Molson, A. Hugh Elsdale
Monsell, Rt. Hon. Sir B. Eyres
Moreing, Adrian C.
Moss, Captain H. J.
Nall, Sir Joseph
Nation, Brigadier-General J. J. H.
Normand, Wilfrid Guild
Nunn, William
Pearson, William G.
Percy, Lord Eustace
Perkins, Walter R. D.
Peters, Dr. Sidney John
Petherick, M.
Peto, Geoffrey K.(W'verh'pt'n, Bilst'n)
Pickford, Hon. Mary Ada
Pownall, Sir Assheton
Raikes, Henry V. A. M.
Ramsay, T. B. W. (Western Isles)
Ramsden, Sir Eugene
Rea, Walter Russell
Reed, Arthur C. (Exeter)
Reid, David D. (County Down)
Reid, William Allan (Derby)
Remer, John R.
Rentoul, Sir Gervais S.
Robinson, John Roland
Ropner, Colonel L.
Ross, Ronald D.
Runge, Norah Cecil
Russell, Alexander West (Tynemouth)
Russell, Richard John (Eddisbury)
Rutherford, Sir John Hugo (Liverp'l)
Salt, Edward W.
Samuel, Rt. Hon. Sir H. (Darwen)
Samuel, Samuel (W'dsworth, Putney)
Sandeman, Sir A. N. Stewart
Selley, Harry R.
Shakespeare, Geoffrey H.
Shaw, Helen B. (Lanark, Bothwell)

Slater, John
Smiles, Lieut.-Col. Sir Walter D.
Smith, Sir Jonah W. (Barrow-in-F.)
Somervell, Donald Bradley
Somerville, Annesley A. (Windsor)
Sotheron-Estcourt, Captain T. E.
Spencer, Captain Richard A.
Stanley, Lord (Lancaster, Fylde)
Stones, James
Storey, Samuel
Strauss, Edward A.
Strickland, Captain W. F.
Sueter, Rear-Admiral Murray F.
Sugden, Sir Wilfrid Hart
Sutcliffe, Harold
Templeton, William P.
Thompson, Luke
Thomson, Sir Frederick Charles
Thorp, Linton Theodore
Todd, Capt. A. J. K. (B'wick-on-T.)
Tryon, Rt. Hon. George Clement
Turton, Robert Hugh
Wallace, Captain D. E. (Hornsey)
Ward, Lt.-Col. Sir A. L. (Hull)
Ward, Sarah Adelaide (Cannock)
Warrender, Sir Victor A. G.
Wedderburn, Henry James Scrymgeour-
Whiteside, Borras Noel H.
Whyte, Jardine Bell
Wills, Wilfrid D.
Windsor-Clive, Lieut.-Colonel George
Winterton, Rt. Hon. Earl
Wise, Alfred R.
Womersley, Walter James
Wood, Sir Murdoch McKenzie (Banff)
Young, Rt. Hon. Sir Hilton (S'v'noaks)

TELLERS FOR THE AYES.—
Lord Erskine and Commander Southby.

NOES.

Adams, D. M. (Poplar, South)
Attlee, Clement Richard
Banfield, John William
Batey, Joseph
Brown, C. W. E. (Notts., Mansfield)
Buchanan, George
Cocks, Frederick Seymour
Cripps, Sir Stafford
Daggar, George
Davies, David L. (Pontypridd)
Edwards, Charles

Greenwood, Rt. Hon. Arthur
Grenfell, David Rees (Glamorgan)
Groves, Thomas E.
Grundy, Thomas W.
Hall, F. (York, W.R., Normanton)
Hall, George H. (Merthyr Tydvil)
Hirst, George Henry
Jones, Morgan (Caerphilly)
Lunn, William
McEntee, Valentine L.
Maxton, James

Nathan, Major H. L.
Parkinson, John Allen
Price, Gabriel
Salter, Dr. Alfred
Tinker, John Joseph
Williams, David (Swansea, East)
Williams, Dr. John H. (Llanelly)
Williams, Thomas (York, Don Valley)

TELLERS FOR THE NOES.—
Mr. John and Mr. G. Macdonald.

Supply accordingly considered in Commitee.

[Captain Bourne in the Chair.]

PERSONNEL.

Resolved,

"That 90,300 Officers, Seamen, Boys, and Royal Marines be employed for the Sea Service, together with 865 for the Royal Marine Police, borne on the books of His Majesty's Ships, at the Royal Marine Divisions, and at Royal Air Force Establishments, for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1934."

WAGES, ETC., OF OFFICERS AND MEN OF THE ROYAL NAVY AND ROYAL MARINES, AND CIVILIANS EMPLOYED ON FLEET SERVICES.

Resolved,

"That a sum, not exceeding £12,593,000, be granted to His Majesty, to defray the Expense of Wages, etc., of Officers and Men of the Royal Navy and Royal Marines, and Civilians employed on Fleet Services, which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1934."

WORKS, BUILDINGS AND REPAIRS AT HOME AND ABROAD.

Resolved,

"That a sum, not exceeding £2,184,300, be granted to His Majesty, to defray the Expense of Works, Buildings and Repairs at Home and Abroad, including the cost of Superintendence, Purchase of Sites, Grants, and other Charges connected therewith, which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1934."

VICTUALLING AND CLOTHING FOR THE NAVY.

Resolved,

"That a sum, not exceeding £3,099,800, be granted to His Majesty, to defray the Expense of Victualling and Clothing for the Navy, including the cost of Victualling Establishments at Home and Abroad which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1934."

Resolutions to be reported upon Monday next; Committee to sit again upon Monday next.

WAYS AND MEANS.

Considered in Committee.

[Captain BOURNE in the Chair.]

Resolved,

"That towards making good the Supply granted to His Majesty for the service of the year ended on the 31st day of March, 1932, the sum of £97 1s. 5d. be granted out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom."

Resolved,

"That towards making good the Supply granted to His Majesty for the service of the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1933, the sum of £187,180 be granted out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom."

Resolved,

"That towards making good the Supply granted to His Majesty for the service of the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1934, the sum of £208,772,100 be granted out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom."—[Captain Margesson.]

Resolutions to be reported upon Monday next; Committee to sit again upon Monday next.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT (GENERAL EXCHEQUER CONTRIBUTIONS) BILL.

Order for Third Reading read.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the Bill be now read the Third time."

10.25 p.m.

Mr. BATEY: Surely this Bill is not going through without a protest. I am sorry to speak at such a late hour, but it means so much to some of us in the distressed areas that we are bound to make a protest before the Bill goes through. It will not help the distressed areas in the least. To-night the House has spent its time in granting an increase of £3,000,000 to the Navy, and it is shameful that the Minister should give us only £350,000 for the second grant period. A better case can be made out for a larger sum of money for the distressed areas than can be made out for a larger sum for the Navy. When we know that three county councils and 20 county boroughs are to have divided among them only £145,000, it means that some of our distressed areas will really get nothing and they will be in a serious condition with the cost of Poor Law jumping up as it is. The estimate for public assistance expenditure in Durham has increased enormously during the last three years. In 1931 the expenditure for public assistance was £920,000. This year the estimate is £1,376,000. As we are to get only £145,000 to be divided among three county councils and 20 county boroughs, we are entitled to protest against the very small amount which the Minister is offering for distressed areas.

The Minister surely cannot realise how the numbers of those in receipt of Poor Law relief are increasing. As a matter of fact, the increase per week for Poor Law relief in Durham is £1,499. That entitles us to far more generous treatment from the Government than we are receiving. When an hon. Member, not of our party, but of the party opposite, raised the question of the distressed areas the other day, I understood from the Parliamentary Secretary that the Minister was considering some alteration in the second grant period, and that the period which we were deciding in this Bill would not operate for the four years. I understood that it might operate for two or three years, but not for as long as four years. Even a second grant period of two years will leave us for this year and next year in a very critical position. Before this Bill goes through the Minister should tell us what he means to do for the distressed areas to help them in their very serious position, just what he is thinking of doing, and when we may expect some financial help for the distressed areas in order to assist them to meet this increasing cost of Poor Law relief. Unless the Minister can do that I think we are entitled to object to the Third Reading of this Bill.

10.30 p.m.

Mr. GREENWOOD: This Bill is now leaving the House without having gained the strong approval of any Members. The Government can claim no credit for it. They are merely implementing an Act passed three Governments ago, by the Conservative Government in 1929. The right hon. Gentleman has been unfortunate in his legislation. He had to bring forward this Bill, he could not help it and I am not blaming him for that. He has done, as has been explained on more than one occasion, the minimum which the law allows. As the Parliamentary Secretary explained, this is a routine Bill, and it has to be passed very rapidly through all its stages in this House during a time of very severe economic depression when local authorities, obedient to the will of the National Government, have for 18 months economised because they believed that that was the right policy. Now it is quite clear that many Members of this House believe that that policy is a mistaken one, and many local authorities, having done their best to meet the wishes of His Majesty's Government, are to-day faced with a situation which is more difficult on the whole than that of the Imperial Government.

Since the Bill was introduced great cities, cities which are not in the hands of Members of my own party, but under the control of what may be called "national majorities," Conservative or Liberal, have felt the increasing burden of responsibility placed upon them by the National Government to be so serious that even they have revolted. Whatever may be the truth about the formula under which the Minister has, in this Bill, acted like a robot, the fact is that when that formula was devised nobody could foresee the situation which would obtain in 1933. The situation is this, that because of a world-wide depression, because of an enormous volume of unemployment, because of the deliberate policy of the Government in having forced people off national funds on to local funds, our local authorities are faced with an increasing local burden which is beyond their power to bear. This Bill leaves the House without any gesture of help to local authorities who are helping to bear the national burden. A great city like Liverpool is virtually bankrupt. I was criticised by the Minister for using that term. I used it advisedly. I quoted the words of a member of his own party in the city of Liverpool. This great city, one of the greatest in the Empire, a city which has always been prepared to bear its responsibilities, has had to revolt. It has taken its part in economising under the policy of the Government, but, faced with a Poor Law bill of more than £1,500,000 for the coming year, a burden due not to Liverpool, but to broad economic forces, which did not originate in Liverpool and which cannot be cured in Liverpool, that city to-day is a stricken city. The term "distressed area" with which we have become accustomed in this House during the last ten years, was a term which used to apply to mining or shipbuilding areas, but to-day there are distressed areas that were unknown in this country at that time. Until after 1929, Liverpool would have been ashamed to describe itself as a distressed area. To-day it is distressed.

The major criticism which can be brought against the Government is that when they had the opportunity, after local authorities had come to their assistance and carried out the policy of economy, of coming to the assistance of local authorities, by doing a little more than the minimum required under the Local Government Act, they did only the minimum. The local authorities, not merely those which had been distressed for 10 years but those which have become distressed during the past two years, might have been given some greater assistance under the 1929 Act. They are given the letter of the law. Only this week there have been appeals from the local authorities to which the right hon. Gentleman the Minister of Health has not responded. However hard the burden may be upon the taxpayer, during these days of increasing numbers of people on the Poor Law the burden of the rates is much heavier than the burden which falls upon the taxpayer.

Though this Bill does what is equivalent to what was done in 1929, it does nothing to help the ratepayers, who to-day are sorely stricken, or the local authorities who are desirous of carrying out their responsibilities. It does nothing to assist those town councils and county councils which to-day are suffering from an enormous burden of unemployment. We have been told that, because of the automatic operation of another formula, certain moneys will go to distressed areas as defined by the formula of the Local Government Act. As much money as goes to those areas will be withdrawn from areas which to-day are becoming as distressed as the areas which have been helped. The operation of the unemployment formula does not help. The enormous mass of unemployment is so large to-day—it is much larger than was contemplated by the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he introduced the Local Government Bill—that the operation of the formula by taking money from one authority and giving it to another does not assist.

[Mr. Greenwood.]

Our case against the Bill is that, in these times with unemployment higher than ever it has been in the history of our country and with burdens falling on local authorities larger than have ever fallen on them before, the Government which might have come to their assistance have failed to do so. I am aware that nothing I can say will alter the decision of the House to-night. The Bill will get its Third Reading, but I desire to make our final protest against the niggardliness of the Government when, after all this cajolery, bullying, and, indeed, misleading of the local authorities, they might have come to their assistance, they have failed to do so. The Government will get their Bill, but the local authorities and all those who are concerned with local government know that His Majesty's Government are imposing on local authorities a burden which it is impossible for them to bear. I should have thought that the Government might have done something to assist them in their difficulty, but they have done no more than an Act passed four years ago prescribes. Their policy has put upon them burdens which are intolerable.

The MINISTER of HEALTH (Sir Hilton Young): Both of the speakers who have opposed the Third Reading of this Bill have given a very wide sweep to their arguments, and, in so doing, they have followed the same course of action which commended itself to them both on the Financial Resolution and on the Second Reading. If I do not follow them to-night, it is because, on both of those occasions, the House has had already a very full discussion on these points. I will content myself rather, in the first place, with pointing out to the House what is the actual purpose and effect of the Measure which is now proceeding to a Third Reading. I cannot really find better words in which to do it than those used by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Wakefield (Mr. Greenwood) himself on the Second Reading of the Bill. Referring to the principal Clause, the Clause relating to the increase of new money, he said:

> "The £350,000 is almost exactly what the formula invented by the right hon. Gentleman the present Chancellor of the Exchequer required."

As a matter of fact, it is £2,000 more. In other words, we are doing the sensible thing—we are carrying out the line of action which we laid down at that time, and which was laid down for the purpose of providing certainty and security for local authorities in their difficulties. We are fulfilling the guarantee which we gave. The right hon. Gentleman proceeded to complete a perfectly satisfactory account of the situation by the following words:

> "It is difficult in these times to increase that minimum amount."—[OFFICIAL REPORT, 7th March, 1933; col. 1083, Vol. 275.]

It is, indeed, difficult. It is difficult in these times, when, as we know, the resources of the nation have so many calls upon them, to increase that amount beyond what is necessary and essential for the local authorities to carry out the services with which they are charged.

There are two words which I would say in reference to what the right hon. Gentleman said, and I say them just in order that it may not be supposed that by silence the authority responsible gives assent. He repeated the statement that a great city in this country was bankrupt. I know of no fact and no circumstance which would justify that statement, and I desire that, when any such statement is made in this House, it should be accompanied by as emphatic an official contradiction as can be given. The hon. Member who spoke first used words belittling the effect of the Measure which we are now passing in regard to its assistance to the distressed areas. There, again, the words used by the hon. Member do not give a full and fair account of the position. It is right that the House should be in possession of what that position is before it passes the Bill. Under it we are distributing not £350,000 but £15,000,000 in such a manner as to give a preference to distressed areas. The direct effect of the wording of the formula that we are now enforcing is that, whereas in the first grant period the unemployment factor attracted £1,250,000, in the second grant period it will attract a much larger sum for the benefit of the distressed areas. The additional sum of £350,000 which we are now voting in order to fulfil our guarantee to the local authorities and to keep the spirit and the letter of the pledge given to them will also be distributed in a manner which I have demonstrated on two previous occasions will give a preference to the distressed areas.

Finally, objection was taken to the Bill as not revealing the Government's programme in regard to larger matters. Of course, it does not do so. It is not an innovating Bill. It is a Bill to carry on certain arrangements in the interests of the local authorities themselves. That we have succeeded in doing, and it is really a feather in the cap of the Government to have succeeded in these arrangements in spite of the great difficulties of the times. On two previous occasions we have had a very full opportunity of discussing the Bill and I trust, now that there is substantial agreement that it is necessary, the House will now give it a Third Reading.

Question put, and agreed to.

Bill read the Third time, and passed.

The remaining Orders were read, and postponed.

ADJOURNMENT.

Resolved, "That this House do now adjourn."—[Captain Margesson.]

Adjourned accordingly at Twelve Minutes before Eleven o'Clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday, 17*th March*, 1933.

The House met at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. SPEAKER in the Chair.

WRITTEN ANSWER.

SUBSIDISED HOUSES (TENANTS).

Mr. L. SMITH asked the Minister of Health if he has tendered any advice to municipalities to raise the rents of municipal subsidised houses to the full economic level when the circumstances of the tenants permit; and whether he has received any information as to the extent to which this policy is being carried out?

Sir H. YOUNG: I would refer my hon. Friend to the replies given to similar questions put by the hon. Members for East Dorset (Mr. Hall-Caine) and Oldham (Mr. Kerr) on the 9th instant and 17th November last respectively, copies of which I am sending to him, together with the extract, referred to in the former reply.

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

SHOPS ACTS (1912 to 1928) AMENDMENT BILL.

Order for Second Reading read.

11.6 a.m.

Mr. MORGAN JONES: I beg to move, "That the Bill be now read a Second time."

Perhaps it will be convenient for the House if I recall, briefly, the history of the movement which culminates, as I believe, in the introduction of this Bill this morning. It is 60 years ago exactly, namely, in 1873, that the first Bill relating to hours and conditions of shop assistants was introduced into this House, and those who are interested in social legislation will recall that that Bill was associated with a gentleman who was very distinguished in our public life, namely, Sir John Lubbock, afterwards Lord Avebury, who was himself associated in that movement with equally distinguished men, Mr. John Morley, and Mr. A. J. Mundella. That Bill applied only to women, young persons, and children employed in shops. It proposed to apply to them the provisions of the Workshops Act relating to hours and conditions of employment and, secondly, that these persons should not work on Christmas Day or Good Friday, and that they should be allowed holidays for four whole days or eight half-days in the year. That was exactly 60 years ago.

Another attempt was made by Sir John Lubbock in 1884-5, and on that occasion he was assisted by another distinguished Parliamentarian, Lord Randolph Churchill, and by others. That particular proposal was to apply the provisions of the Factory Acts to shops. In 1886 the Shops Regulation Act was carried, and this is rather important, because that Act limited the hours of young persons employed in shops to 74, inclusive of meal-times. It is important to dwell for a moment upon that, because it has a great bearing upon our subject to-day, and may I recall to the House, therefore, that on page 5 of the Report of the Select Committee which reported in 1931 on this matter there appears this paragraph upon the point:

> "This is still the only statutory limitation of the working hours of any class of shop assistant, as distinct from the hours of opening of the shops, if we except provisions as to half-holidays and meal-times, and the special limitation of hours in licensed premises and the Shops Act, 1913."

That is to say, there has been no sort of legislation carried in this House dealing with the limitation of the hours of shop assistants since the Act which limited the employment of young persons to 74 hours per week, inclusive of meal-times. I need not emphasise to the House that a provision of that sort must clearly merit our condemnation, and it is partly on that account that I have the temerity, if indeed it be temerity, to introduce this Bill to-day.

To continue my brief historical sketch, no fewer than 22 private Bills were introduced to deal with shop assistants' hours in the last decade of the last century, not one of which went a single step further. Our next important date is the year 1911, when the Shop Hours Act was passed, but that Act was not substantially different in terms from the previous legislation. That Measure proposed a statutory half-holiday for shop assistants and also the limitation of hours, but owing to the exigencies of Parliamentary time and conditions, the limitation of hours section of the Bill was abandoned, and the only part of any import carried was the compulsory half-holiday. There is no other legislation to which I need refer except to a short Bill dealing with the limitation of the hours of assistants employed in places of refreshment, whether licensed premises or not, and their hours were limited in 1913 to 65 hours per week, exclusive of meal-times.

We now come to the post-War times. Since the War, as the House knows, repeated attempts have been made to deal with this matter by almost innumerable Members of Parliament, but not one of those efforts has been brought to fruition, until my hon. Friend the Member for Normanton, I think it was, introduced a Bill in the year 1930. On the 31st March, 1930, the House, without a Division, gave a Second Reading to a Bill which proposed to limit shop assistants' hours to not more than 48, that is to say, the same as are proposed in this Bill to-day, with certain exceptions, and the Government of the day decided to refer the issue raised by the Bill to a Select Committee of the House. That Select Committee was set up on the 19th November, 1930, and consisted of 11 Members of the House, five Members of the Committee being members of the Conservative party, five of them members of the Labour party, and the remaining Member being a representative of the Liberal party. That is to say, the Select Committee was set up in such a way as to be thoroughly representative, not only of the respective strength of the parties of those days, but also of the diversities of opinion which were presented in the House during the last Parliament. The terms of reference to the Select Committee are well known to everybody, but perhaps I may recall what they were to the House. They were to inquire:

[Mr. Jones.]

> "(1) What are the hours at present usually worked in the various distributive trades, both retail and wholesale;
>
> (2) what would be the probable economic effects of a statutory 48-hours week (with a limited amount of overtime) upon the distributive trades as regards organisation of work, wages, employment, and prices; by what methods it could be applied to various kinds of trade; and what arrangements would be feasible for enforcing it;
>
> (3) whether conditions of employment exist in any classes or descriptions of shops in respect of matters affecting the health and welfare of the assistants which make it desirable that powers of regulation and supervision should be given by statute."

The Select Committee went very carefully into the questions raised by their terms of reference and presented their final recommendations to Parliament on the 18th September, 1931. It is important to add that they examined no fewer than 89 witnesses in person and heard and considered the point of view of every trade as expressed by the representatives of the employers' organisations and trade unions concerned. Further, individual shop assistants were examined, as well as persons having special knowledge of administration and juvenile welfare. The inquiries of the Select Committee were supplemented by a joint investigation by the Home Office and Ministry of Labour during the summer of 1930 and the report of the Departmental investigation was printed as an appendix to the Select Committee's Report. With the information before them, the Committee were able to reach certain unanimous recommendations, many of which are embodied in the terms of this Bill, but before I pass to a brief explanation of the Bill, I would like to remind the House of the facts that were brought to light by the inquiry.

If I dwell for a moment on this point I hope that the House will extend to me their indulgence, because it is important that we should have clearly in our minds what precisely is the problem with which we are called upon to deal. There is a good deal of innocent misrepresentation of the position, arising, I have no doubt, from genuine misunderstanding, and I should like to put to the House some of the facts that I have culled, not from my experience, but from the results of the inquiry of the Select Committee. What are the conditions which apply in some trades? Let me read some of the hours of work which I take at random from the report of the Committee. Bakers and pastrycook assistants work from 40½ hours to 75 hours per week; boot and shoe shop assistants 44½ to 56½; butchers 41 to 66½; confectioners and sweetshop assistants 42 to 80; dairy assistants 45 to 70. I could go through a whole gamut of trades and produce instances not dissimilar to these. I ought in fairness to add that in the wholesale trades the Committee found that the hours were, generally speaking, much shorter than in the retail trades and that apart from busy seasonal periods the hours of work varied from 39 to 52 hours per week.

I shall surely carry the House with me when I say that these figures disclose human tragedies. These shop assistants are very often people of tender years, and they have to work from 40 to 60 and 70 and even 80 hours a week. Many of them are children, and surely I do not require to argue that youngsters of that age cannot but have their health undermined by these grotesque conditions. If I may use an aphorism it is well within our knowledge and experience—it is cheaper in the long run to preserve health than to cure disease. The conditions of these young people working these long, almost interminable hours must surely make a call upon the sympathy of all Members of the House who have the well-being of those who serve them near their hearts. Apart from the undermining of the health and the deprivation of facilities for physical recreation, the deprivation of cultural facilities is also involved. I do not speak here with first-hand knowledge but from evidence given to me by a friend, who would not have given it except on the closest inquiry. He tells me that in Glasgow the local education authority recently abandoned technical classes for the grocery trade, because the numbers had been reduced to seven. That is obvious evidence that there is a failure on the part of the young people for whom these classes were designed to attend for one reason or another, and one reason must be the long hours which preclude their availing themselves of these educational facilities. I am told that for the present winter session the London County Council recorded a drop of 11,000 in the number of students enrolled for evening classes. I do not argue that that drop is entirely due to long hours. It is probably due in part to increased fees, but possibly one of the reasons is the long hours worked by the young people.

I want to turn to a subject on which I am sure all Members will be at one with me—the subject of juvenile employés. I have referred to the large number of juveniles employed in shops, and I would commend to the consideration of the House the evidence as to the unsatisfactory state of the law submitted to the Select Committee by the spokesman of the Asociation of Juvenile Employment and Welfare Officers who spoke with authority on this matter. He said:

> " We have all been conscious, as we are now, of a feeling of helplessness when we have come across instances in which employers, without being guilty of the infringement of any Act of Parliament, have allowed young people in their employ to work from an early hour in the morning until a late hour at night week in and week out, without regular or sufficient time for meals, and under conditions of strain and stress that the average working man of today would not tolerate for one moment for himself. It is not generally realised that there are many boys, not long out of school, whose working week is nearly twice as long in actual hours as, for example, the normal week of the joiner and his fellow workers in the building industry. Some employers agree that the customary hours of van delivery boys and errand boys are too long, yet none feels accountable. 'They did not create the abuse, they cannot alter it,' seems to be their view."

I hope that the House will forgive me if I recall to its attention pages 40 and 41 of the Select Committee's Report and to give three instances recorded by the Committee from evidence adduced before them.

> " A girl of 14 years of age, employed in Blackpool as a waitress and kitchen-maid at 15s. a week. Her hours were from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m. with one hour for dinner, a half-hour for tea, and a half-day on Wednesday. She was not employed on Sunday. The total number of hours she worked weekly was thus 69, inclusive of meal time."

> " Nine boys employed in a butcher's shop in Ashington, where the hours of work were 74, including meal hours, and where the proprietor stated that clearing and cleaning generally kept the staff employed half-an-hour after closing times on ordinary days and longer on certain days."

> " A van-boy of 14 years of age, employed by a wholesale hardware merchant. His hours were 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. on five days, and 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. on one day. His parents took him away as a result of a trip to Yorkshire, when he was on the van—"

I invite the House particularly to this—

> " from 8 a.m. on one day to 11 a.m. on the next. The boy slept on the van, and the driver purchased meals."

Surely instances like these cry aloud to us to do something to mitigate the injustices and the hardships which these young children have to undergo.

The second principle which the Select Committee was called upon to discuss was the probable economic effect of a statutory 48-hour week on the organisation of work, wages, employment, and prices and the method of limitation of hours by the enforcement of the law. I need not cover this whole field except to say that any Member can find on the briefest reference to the Committee's findings that their conclusion is that wages and employment would not be materially affected by the compulsory limitation of hours. The total amount of distributive trade to be done would remain approximately the same; whilst an increase of staff would probably take place in shops which are now understaffed and where long hours and systematic overtime obtain, there is no ground for believing that the volume of employment would be substantially diminished or that wages would be decreased. I do not wish to trouble the House with extracts from communications I have had from individual correspondents both in London and in the country detailing to me the conditions under which they are called upon to work in shops associated with various trades. Perhaps the House will take it from me that these letters disclose a situation of which none of us, I think, could feel in any way proud.

Let us recall once again that no legislation has been passed by this House for 60 years dealing with the limitation of the hours of shop assistants. The Shop Hours Act dealt with the closing of shops, but after the blinds come down in the shop the work goes on, and often the spirit of the law is defeated though the letter is observed. There is one other observation to make before I explain the details of the Bill. I want hon. Members to appreciate the area of employment with which we are called upon to deal. There are more women and juveniles employed in connection with distribution than in any other single occupation. One out of every three boys and two out of every five girls who entered insured employment go into the distributive trades, and in July, 1932 no fewer than 143,000 boys and 111,000 girls between 16 and 18 years of age were employed in distribution. The total number of insured workers in the distributive trades in July, 1932 was 1,950,000, of whom 748,000 were women. In the last 11 years the number of persons employed in distribution has been doubled, the number of insured workers in 1921 being only 967,000 compared with 1,950,000 to-day.

[Mr. Jones.]

Incidentally, I may perhaps be permitted to observe that this is an interesting commentary on an economic system which has resulted in the uneconomic diversion of the labour of an additional 1,000,000 workers to the task of trying to get rid of the goods which people would readily purchase if they had the necessary spending power. Owing to the fact that comparatively few women and children are organised, they are at present, with the two exceptions I have mentioned, entirely unprotected in the matter of working hours. In this respect they are in a much worse position than women and young persons employed in those industries covered by trade boards, where a limitation of working hours is laid down. It surely cannot be the desire of this House that shop assistants, who minister so devotedly to the needs of everyone, should be under adverse conditions by comparison with other workers.

Having devoted some time to these observations on the general principles of my Bill, I will now as quickly as possible summarise the Clauses. Clause 1 lays down the general principle of a 48-hour working week. It provides, in accordance with the unanimous recommendation of the Select Committee—I hope the House will note that point—that no young person may work more than 48 hours at any time, but shop assistants over the age of 18 may work for more than 48 hours a week if a local board, composed of employers and employed, as provided for in Clause 2, has agreed to overtime employment and a local order is in force. Overtime employment must be paid for at overtime rates as specified in Clause 7.

The UNDER-SECRETARY of STATE for the HOME DEPARTMENT (Mr. Douglas Hacking): The hon. Member has not made the position quite clear. He started by saying that this was a unanimous report of the Select Committee. The whole of it was not unanimous, part of it is only the majority report.

Mr. JONES: Yes, that is quite right. The idea of having overtime pay is to discourage as far as possible the habit of keeping assistants employed for an undue length of time in shops, and in that way, by the use of the service of assistants free of charge, providing the employer with an unfair advantage as compared with other employers who get no such assistance. Clause 2 establishes the local boards, which were unanimously recommended by the Select Committee in paragraph 292 of the Report. This form of machinery was recommended in order that progress can be made by agreement and to remedy defects due to lack of organisation. These local boards are to be the machinery through which the varying conditions in different areas and trades are to be met and seasonal overtime provided for. It is assumed that if local or trade exigencies are such that longer hours than 48 are reasonable and necessary the local boards, representative as they are of both sides, will act accordingly. There are Sub-sections to this Clause defining the constitution and the duties of the board.

Clause 3 enables local authorities to combine for administrative purposes in carrying out their duties under the Shop Act. The point of that is that you often have contiguous areas where one condition of affairs is in being under one Order and a different condition of affairs in operation under another Order, and so we give power for such adjacent local authorities to arrive at a mutual decision to apply the same rules throughout both areas. The Clause provides that the Secretary of State may revoke or amend local Orders on the application of a local authority. If experience showed that the working of a local Order had been unsatisfactory it would be amended in that way. Clause 5—Sub-sections (1) and 2—is in accordance with the recommendations of the Select Committee on page 74 of their report, and requires the Secretary of State to set up a National Shops Board within one year of the passing of the Act, consisting of an equal number of shop assistants and employers with a neutral chairman appointed by the Secretary of State. The subsequent Subsections deal with the powers and duties of the National Board.

Clause 6 gives the Secretary of State power to fix the hours of overtime employment which are to be permitted in local areas where there is substantial disagreement on the local board. The Secretary of State will, however, only act after the matter has been discussed by the National Board, the local authority and the local board concerned. It is necessary, before the Secretary of State can make an order under this Clause, for the National Board to have submitted a recommendation as to the terms of any proposed order to be made under this Clause. Clause 7 deals with the provision for the payment of wages at the higher rate for overtime. Clause 8 is in accordance with the unanimous Recommendation, again, of the Select Committee, and is one of the most important Clauses of the Bill. It is necessary for facilitating the application of a 48-hour week in certain trades.

The primary reason for the proposed change is the necessity of safeguarding existing voluntary closing arrangements for shops closing at six or six-thirty. At present no compulsory closing order can be made for an earlier hour than seven o'clock, and consequently no legal compulsion can now be used to enforce a voluntary closing arrangement. One or two obstreperous traders can and do break down a general agreement by keeping open longer than their competitors. To operate a compulsory 48-hour week, it would be an advantage if earlier closing could be compulsorily enforced, and Clause 8 is intended to meet that situation. Clause 9 sets up the penalties for infringement in various directions. Clause 10 does what I think is long overdue; it provides a definition of the term "shop-assistant" and a definition of the term "shop."

Mr. HACKING: There has been one.

Mr. JONES: Well, it requires alteration in many respects. Nothing is so good that it is not capable of a little improvement. Clause 11 attempts to give effect, within the limits of a private Member's Bill, to the following recommendation of the Select Committee on page 59 of their Report, paragraph 240:

> "Your Committee have been impressed with the fact that there is no statutory power lying in any Government Department to supervise the administration by local authorities of the Shops Acts, and are strongly of the opinion that the Secretary of State for Home Affairs and the Secretary of State for Scotland should be specifically entrusted, by statute, with the general supervision of all the provisions of shops legislation."

Clause 11 is devised to deal with that situation. Clauses 12 and 13 are just the ordinary Clauses of the kind that are to be found at the end of any Bill.

I am afraid that I have explained the Bill rather hurriedly, and perhaps I have made too severe a demand upon the patience of the House in dealing with its proposals. I have tried to present the general ground upon which the Bill is brought forward by my hon. Friend and myself. The Bill will undoubtedly be capable of a good deal of improvement, but we have tried to embody in its Clauses what we felt ought to be attained. We do not claim that every Clause shall remain inviolate, and we do not regard every comma and every sentence as sacrosanct. We merely invite the operation of the common will and purpose of this House in removing a wrong done to men, women and children who serve us in our daily needs with fortitude and devotion. We invite the House therefore to carry a step further this movement, which, as is well known to those who have studied this kind of legislation and its history, has had associated with it distinguished Members of all parties. I might refer to Sir John Lubbock, Mr. John Morley and Lord Randolph Churchill. Then there were the members of the Liberal Government from 1908 to 1913 and 1914 who introduced a Bill later known as the Shops Act. Many of my hon. Friends have made attempts since 1918. Thus individual Members of all parties have been associated in one way or another with attempts, to remedy the state of the law in regard to the employment of shop assistants.

[Mr. Jones.]

I shall be more than pleased if this Bill is accorded a Second Reading to-day. Its fundamental principle is one about which I do not feel disposed to make a concession, namely, the question of a 48-hour week. Every hour we win for these people is in fact an hour redeemed for freedom. It is an hour dedicated to the rejuvenation of their bodies. It is an hour that can be consecrated to the replenishment of their minds. It is an hour, in my judgment, which, properly used, could be directed to such a degree as to lead to the fortifying of the fabric of society to which we all belong. It is in the confident belief that this Bill is a small contribution in that direction that I invite the House to give it a Second Reading.

11.42 a.m.

Mr. MITCHESON: I beg to move, to leave out from the word " That " to the end of the Question, and to add instead thereof the words:

" this House, whilst recognising the undesirability of shop assistants working excessive hours, declines to give a Second Reading to a Bill which would not only involve local authorities in increased expenditure in securing its enforcement, but would also add to the existing burdens on industry by hampering business and increasing the cost of distribution, and would be bound to lead either to an increase in retail prices or to a reduction in the wages of shop assistants."

I wish to pay a tribute to the obvious sincerity of the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Morgan Jones) in his able introduction of the Bill. I am sure that the utmost sympathy and consideration would be given by every hon. Member to the question of juvenile employés, but they are not the subject of this Bill. They are the object of negotiations which are now continuing with the Home Secretary, and which will no doubt be the subject of a further discussion. I am opposing this Bill in no spirit of party, or of antagonism to those who are supporting it. I am just as keen and as sincere in my desire to help those for whose benefit this Bill is intended, as are the hon. Gentleman and his supporters. It is only because, from actual and practical experience, I know that this Bill would defeat its own ends, and would jeopardise, instead of helping, the interests of the shop assistants of the country, that I offer my most strenuous opposition to its Second Reading. I would say here, whilst fully recognising the desires of those who are supporting the Bill, that there is no mandate from the vast majority of the shop assistants of the country for this interference with their occupational conditions. I estimate—and my hon. Friend's figures agree with mine—that there are no fewer than 2,000,000 people engaged in retail distribution in this country. On the average these are of a high standard of education and business ability; they are a body well able to look after their own interests and to overcome any serious or widespread grievance. Yet I am not able to trace more than, at the outside, 200,000 of those 2,000,000 as members of any union or any protective society. It does indeed occur to me that we have in this House quite sufficient on our hands if we will concentrate on the real and crying needs of the community, without taking up our time in seeking to interfere in a direction from which there has been no real call.

As to the effect of this Bill, were it to become law, I will, for the purpose of my argument, divide shopkeepers into two classes. In the first place, I will deal with the large stores and multiple shops such as Harrod's, Barker's, Selfridge's, Woolworth's, and so on; and, secondly, I will deal with the small individual shopkeepers, who represent, of course, an enormous majority of the trade. As to the big stores—and be it remembered that each of these big stores was originally founded by a shop assistant—what can be the effect on them of this Bill? These firms are invariably controlled by boards of directors, who are themselves the servants of their shareholders on the one hand and of their customers, to whom they must render service, on the other. They are bound by their duty to their shareholders and their customers respectively. The directors and their counter sales assistants are separated by managers, departmental managers, buyers, floor managers, and so on. Therefore, while I contend that the standard of employment conditions today is a very high one, and fulfils most of the requirements of this Bill, only hard, practical facts, without personal considerations, can enter into the discussions of a board of directors. They must look at this Bill purely and simply from the point of view of cost.

Apart from the estimate of the cost of overtime as provided by the Bill, there must be a number of inspectors, variously estimated at from 10,000 to as many as 0,000. They must be appointed, together with local busybody boards, because the busy trader and the ambitious shop assistant will not have the time to devote to these local boards. Then there is to be a National Advisory Board, and I suppose that, if some hon. Members had their wish, there would be an International Appeal Board beyond that. All of these will involve offices, printing, stationery and travelling expenses, which must be a very considerable and substantial item.

The percentage of nett profit on turnover in a business of this kind is, and always must be, an exceedingly narrow one, and every additional expenditure has to be found from somewhere. The directors, therefore, will have to estimate the cost to them of this interference, with the additional clerical staff required, the payment for every minute of overtime, additional taxation, local rates, and so on, and in that estimate they must, naturally, safeguard themselves in every way. The question must then arise, where will the money come from? They cannot buy their goods more cheaply, or they would have done so. They cannot get more from their customers, or they would have done so. They cannot get relief from their rent, rates and taxes. The only possible source of replenishment, therefore, is either by a reduction of staff—thereby increasing the work, the responsibility and the pressure on those remaining, as well as adding to our unemployment figures at an increased cost to the nation—or by a reduction of the salaries and commissions of all those shop assistants whom my hon. Friend is out to help. Is this the way in which hon. Members would endeavour to serve the interests of those whose cause they are claiming to plead? It is no good suggesting that the directors have any other way out; they have not. They themselves are only servants, and have their duties to perform. It is no good saying that they could not either reduce the remuneration or reduce the number of their staffs; they could. There are, unfortunately, to-day plenty of good, sound, capable people who would be only too glad to fill any vacancy.

Now as to the small shopkeeper—the chemist, the grocer, the butcher, the greengrocer, etc.—with whom the position is very much more grave than it is even with the large stores. In his case there is a much greater intimacy, a much closer friendship, between the employer and the employé than is possible in the larger stores, for they are almost invariably working side by side. In many cases they are actually relatives—sons, daughters, brothers, nephews and so on. In the case of the small businesses there is a much narrower distinction between employer and employed. It is "The Boss," and "Jack," and "Bill," and "Mary." They are more closely and generally engaged in all the intimacies and details of their business. Each takes the responsibility of his master, pulling his weight generally in whatever work there is to do. He must be thoroughly trustworthy, and can only do his work under conditions of harmony and contentment, because there is little, and that irregular, supervision. The weighing of goods, the measurement of materials, punctuality and courtesy in the service of customers, direct dealing with the cash—this work could not be done by discontented servants; and one of the first objects of a successful business man is to be assured of a willing and harmonious staff, such as can only be obtained by the employer seeing to it that every consideration and good treatment is given.

How can this Bill possibly help here? Think of the irritation to the employer in keeping extra books and details, to be done often by himself, or perhaps by one clerk, almost in the form of police records of his employés. Think of the notices "conspicuously displayed". The Bill says "conspicuously displayed", and it wants them "conspicuously displayed", for employer, employed and customers alike to see and to be unable to avoid seeing them. Every minute he is on the premises, morning, noon and night, the notice is to be "conspicuously displayed". Jack and Bill and all that that conveys must disappear. It will be Mr. John Brown and Mr. William Jones, telling everyone that in this penitentiary he shall only work so many hours and his services shall be measured, not by the success of his work, not by his degree of intelligence, not by his good will and everything that pertains to good service to employer and employed alike, but by the number of hours that he has stood in the shop looking at the notice in a conspicuous position, quite irrespective of what he has done in the time other than watch the notice. Never mind annoying a customer by refusing to give a few extra minutes. That now becomes the governor's responsibility. No thought of the fact that, if the governor loses his customers, he will not be able to employ the staff, nor even to pay the rent of his premises. No thought that it is only the most obliging firm that will succeed in business. No thought of promotion, financial and otherwise, as the business progresses. No thought of the service that the wise employer would like to give. No thought of anything that in many ways can be and is rewarded by the employer, but only a notice in a conspicuous position.

[Mr. Mitcheson.]

The law is to come between them. Henceforth, if this Bill passes, friendly and mutual progress and helpfulness must be replaced by a continuous concentration on legal rights, legal obligations, fines and penalties. Imagine a grocer's shop on a busy Friday morning when Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Robinson are coming for their groceries, and the assistants are busy and the governor is busy. Suddenly "Halt. Stand aside." The shops inspector approaches. "Cease delivering the goods. Stand to attention." Where is the notice in a conspicuous position? The inspector has to go up to that conspicuous position. The conspicuous inspector has to see that the instructions are there, and that the marriage certificates and all the other details of each assistant are there. I will tell you another thing he has to do. He has to catch that assistant. The assistant does not want his freedom. He wants progress and promotion. The inspector is not going to be a friend to that shop assistant. He is going to be an enemy and a spy. Be it remembered that from 48 to 50 hours a week—the hon. Member gave the minimum and the maximum possible—is a common practice throughout the land, so that even in this direction the Bill would serve no real purpose against the enormous harm that it must do to all parties.

May I give an instance of my own actual case. I have not exactly a shop, but I have a business and an office with a staff of employés with whom, in order to achieve success, intimate relationship must exist, for neither office staff nor shop assistants are mere machines that can be turned on or off at will either with an inspector or a conspicuous notice. Our employment is based on mutual respect and regard the one for the other. We have arrangements whereby one-half of the staff is free every Saturday, the other half gladly taking on the additional work that is entailed. Provided that work is not seriously interfered with, an hour away a day is merely a matter of the asking. This privilege has never been refused, and it has never been abused. Tea is provided in the afternoon, not as part of our agreement but as a gesture of good will, which is appreciated. On the other hand, if there is work to do—I should not ask, quite possibly I would not even know it, but the staff would be there doing it irrespective of hours and without instructions, just because we are all part and parcel of a happy, harmonious and normally successful organisation. Any staff suggestion is given every consideration. In good years bonuses are given to every employé. We have had bad periods and, in fact, owing to unfortunate happenings at about the time of the last Socialist Government my business was practically closed down, from the middle of 1930 to the middle of 1932. I knew it had to be. I could have dismissed the whole of my staff, but I did not. They have been with me all the time. I found the monies for rent, rates, taxes, and salaries for a period of two years with no hope of a return until conditions improved. I still have my staff, their loyalty, their enthusiasm, their interest and their intelligent application. Their training and knowledge of my business has made them valuable. Other people might possibly think it was worth trying to entice them away, but I will bank on the loyalty of every one of them. They know that they will join with me in any further success that I may have.

The importance of this is not the history of my affairs, but the fact that my business is only one single instance of similar conditions in many thousands of businesses in the distributing and similar trades throughout the country. Help everybody in every way you can provided that by trying to help him you are not causing greater harm in other directions. We have approximately 3,000,000 unemployed in this country. I would do everything, and I am doing everything in my power, as I know every hon. Member in this House is doing, in seeking a means of reducing that number, and, in the meantime, in alleviating their distress.

Let me, however, remind the House of one point which is forgotten, or very much overlooked, that for the 3,000,000 unemployed workmen we have 300,000 practically unemployed, broken-spirited and broken-hearted employers, the majority of whom have lifted themselves from the position of workman to employer, who have their money sunk in factories and business premises, and who are at their wits end to find customers for the goods which they manufacture or sell. Every ounce of their energy and ability is concentrated on trying to find a way out, which, if successful, must, logically, increase employment. The more goods the distributor can distribute the more people will be engaged both in manufacture and in distribution. This unemployed employer is without even the pittance offered to the unemployed workman. He is offered no sympathy, no help and no encouragement, and almost every phase of legislation, as in this Bill, would seek to add further to his burdens. If we want to solve our unemployment question, this is the man who, not for his own sake, but for the sake of the nation, should be helped and encouraged in every way. Why hate him? We are all born the same way. We shall all die the same way and we shall all be worth the same price per ton when we are dead. A man can only wear one suit at a time. He can only sleep in one bed at a time. He can only have one meal at a time. There is a great deal of truth in a notice in a north country factory addressed to the men in a conspicuous position:

"Work eight hours a day conscientiously and do not worry, and one day perhaps you will become an employer. Then you will work 16 hours a day and have all the worry.

The only difference between the employer and the employé is that the employer is blessed or cursed with some little restive mentality which will not allow him to be content with a steady regular wage job. He must advance, must organise, must develop, must control, must spread, must sell, and we must encourage that man, for without him the other man would not be able to get any employment at all. The queen bee is a great employer of labour. Under her command and control the bees give us a very valuable article of food in the form of honey, provided, and always provided, that the bees are left alone. If you upset the hive, or if the bees are irritated and annoyed, they will not give you any honey. This Bill is just one of irritation, serving no good purpose whatever. On the other hand, it is bound to have a serious moral effect, and would prove a barrier, dividing and breaking the contact of everything that is good in the mutual interests of employer and employed alike. This continuous and unmerited appeal for justice is misleading. Justice is a cold thing. It is a last resort. What we should work for, every one of us, apart from party and apart from creed, is a greater consideration, the one for the other, employer or employed.

12.12 p.m.

Mr. REMER: I beg to second the Amendment.

In doing so, I should like to say that I was considerably surprised that the hon. Gentleman the Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Morgan Jones) had put this particular Bill upon the Order Paper. For the last 14 years during which I have been in this House it has been the invariable practice of the Socialist party, whenever they obtained a first chance in the ballot, to put down on the Order Paper a Bill dealing with the ratification of the Washington Hours Convention which, as the House well knows, is to provide for all industries—not as is done in this Bill merely for one industry—a 48-hour week or an eight-hour day. I hope that the House will note the change which has come about to-day, particularly on the part of an hon. Gentleman who sits on the Front Opposition Bench, that after 14 years of wild dreams they have come back to realities and have realised that the theories which they have held in the past about the Washington Hours Convention have certain international and national difficulties and have now selected one industry—the distributive trades—for a trial. I can only assume that this is part of the policy which was recommended some years ago by the noble Lord who used to be known in this House as Mr. Sidney Webb—the inevitability of gradualness.

[Mr. Remer.]

I think that I shall be able to show later that in choosing this industry they will find even greater difficulties of application. I would ask the hon. Member, or whoever is to reply on behalf of their party, why they have chosen this particular industry, and where is there any evidence of any demand for this type of legislation? For over 30 years there has been complete harmony and peace among the employers and employed in the distributive trades. The only exception to that is the case of the co-operative societies who are engaged, and have been engaged from time to time, in various disputes with their employés.

There is a very good reason, which has been very well put by my hon. Friend who moved this Amendment, why it is good business for business men to be on terms of happiness and contentment with their employés. Happiness and contentment mean team work, and team work means success. I think that this applies more to the distributive trades than it applies to any others, for the very good reason that the shop assistant has to serve the customers personally, and it implies personal attention for which he gives value. I have no experience whatever of a shopkeeper's life, nor can I claim any very great knowledge of shopping, because I frankly admit that on every possible occasion I avoid shopping, and leave it to other people to do it for me. But there are two commodities which I have to buy myself. One is shoes and the other is hats. As far as shoes are concerned, I must be the most tantalising customer, because I can never remember the size of the shoes I wear, and, as far as hats are concerned, nobody knows better than you, Sir, that the size of a politician's head varies on many occasions according to the success or otherwise which he attains in this House.

I have mentioned that there should be the closest harmony between the shopkeepers and their assistants, and I venture to say that there is no industry in the whole country where there is greater harmony than exists in the distributive trades. I am going, first of all, to refer to the evidence which was given before the Select Committee to which the hon. Member in moving the Second Reading referred, and I should like particularly to call attention to the evidence given by the National Chamber of Trade. I am not going to refer to their evidence-in-chief, but I am going to refer particularly to the cross-examination of the two witnesses, Mr. Walter Clark and my very great friend Mr. Patrick Howling. These two gentlemen were cross-examined by three Members of the late Parliament, Mr. Taylor, the late Member for Lincoln, Mr. Oliver and Mr. Charles Roden Buxton. If there is anything more than another that struck me, it was the answer which Mr. Clark gave to Mr. Taylor. It is on page 9 of the Minutes of Evidence. It is evidence of the harmony which exists between the shopkeeper and the shop assistant. He said:

> "I will give you an example: I was with a friend of mine who is a very large employer of 700 or 800 assistants the other day, and I walked through his establishment. Every employee, humble or in a prominent position, spoke to him quite frankly and freely without any fear or hesitation. He answered at once. He addressed many of them by their first name, 'John' or 'Mary' or whatever it was. We work together. There is a friendly give and take. It is not a rigid, inelastic operation. What we fear here is that if there is going to be so much work for so much pay and so much pay for so much work, it will be very closely defined on both sides."

I think that that does really give a very striking example of the relations between the shopkeeper and his assistant. There is the added point, which was very clearly brought out in the evidence before the Select Committee, namely, the position of the small trader who serves at the counter by himself or with one assistant or several assistants. There is the position of the country towns where people come in on market days. There is a rush of work for a very few hours when the shopping is done in one day. Mr. Hirst, in his cross-examination, was at very great pains to show that the co-operative societies and the multiple shops, generally speaking, work less than the 48-hour week. He did not deal with the very important point that these co-operative societies and the big multiple shops are able to work a shift system, which is utterly impossible for a small trader to organise. This is, I believe, a very important point because in cross-examination—it is on page 13—Mr. Clark said:

> "May I suggest that there is a great difference between one trade and another? Take a small town like the one from which I come, Halifax. We have food traders in a very small way of business, and yet they are food traders and do answer a very real need. We have men who work very awkward hours and women who work very awkward hours for purchasing the necessities of life, and people who live under conditions where they cannot keep food for any length of time. There are very small shops employing no assistants in some cases, or only one or two in others, and they find it absolutely necessary to keep open to the very last moment allowed by the Shops Acts."

In further cross examination it was tried to pin Mr. Clark down that the co-operative societies could deal with all this trade, and on the next page Mr. Clark replied:

> "The co-operative society in our neighbourhood do not cater for that class of business. They cater for a very much higher class of business. More motor cars go to our co-operative society than to any other business in the neighbourhood."

Mr. MORGAN JONES: I think the hon. Member is not quite doing justice to the body of evidence to which he refers. May I call his attention to questions 72 and 73 in regard to co-operative organisation?

> "I am not in the inside of the co-operative movement, and therefore I cannot speak for them. I can only say we are convinced there will be certain difficulties in the food trades in this country if you bring them within the legalised regulation of a 48-hour week. If I were to tell you that in the co-operative trade generally they do not find such difficulties existing, would you accept that as being a fair statement?—Certainly, I should accept anything you say."

Mr. REMER: It is rather difficult to go over the whole of this evidence, but I think you will find it quite clear from Mr. Clark's evidence that he said the co-operative societies, and the multiple shops, could not cater for the tram-driver coming off duty just on time, and the type of workman who could not store food—for that type of workman could not obtain the goods he wanted by any other means than by the use of these small traders. This Bill would be absolutely crippling to that class of traders. I do not think the hon. Member has seriously taken into consideration the question, which must arise under this Bill, with regard to the rush which takes place every Christmas. At the present moment there is give and take between the shopkeeper and his employés, who, in return for the heavy rush for a fortnight or three weeks before Christmas, are allowed several days off as compensation for the hard work they put in during that time.

I am more concerned with the observation of the hon. Member when he quoted the hours which are worked by some people. He was careful to say "up to 70," and "up to 80 hours," but he did not make any reference to the regular practice. I venture to say that the number of these examples of hours up to 70 or 80 is so small, and negligible, that it ought not to be taken into consideration. The hon. Member raised an issue which was very largely outside this Bill—the question of juvenile employment. It is a subject which has exercised, and will continue to exercise, the mind of Parliament on many occasions. He raised the point about boys being on vans from eight o'clock to eleven o'clock the following morning. I would say that boys on vans are outside the scope of this Bill altogether, and, in any case, unless I am very much mistaken, the Road Traffic Act, which was passed by this House two years ago, prevents anybody from doing more than eleven hours on a motor vehicle without a considerable interval for sleep.

I am not going to deal with this matter on narrow issues. I am going to deal with it on big, broad issues because it was brought out in the cross-examination by these three gentlemen. The hon. Member for Grimsby (Mr. Womersley) intervened with two questions on page 23. He said:

> "The Chairman said there are cases where it is alleged they work 76 and 80 hours a week. I notice the term 'alleged.' Can you give any instances in your knowledge of any shops where the employés are asked to work 76 to 80 hours a week?—I cannot understand an employer working such hours.
>
> You do not know any case in your experience?—No.

[Mr. Remer.]

Have you ever had any case returned to you in the form of an answer to a questionnaire or any case in your Association's return?—(Mr. Howling) No."

Mr. MORGAN JONES: Read the next question please.

Mr. REMER: Mr. Oliver then said:

"Mr. Howling was going on to say: 'If it is proved that there are excessive hours,' and then he was interrupted?"

and then Mr. Clark said:

"I think Mr. Howling would say that if those very excessive hours had existed they are in such extremely isolated cases that legislation should not cripple those who are doing the right thing."

These stories are given by the hon. Member, but he gives no concrete example. It is simply a story which he gives to the House without any data whatever. The cases which he has in mind are so isolated, and so negligible, that it is perfectly ridiculous we should be asked on this Friday morning to pass legislation to deal with such trumpery matters. I said I was laying particular stress on the small trader. May I remind the House that there was one small trader, I believe on Clydeside, who afterwards became famous and known to the laymen of practically the whole world—I mean Sir Thomas Lipton. He, from a little shop in Glasgow, built up a great business which was the marvel of the whole world for its ramifications. How did he build up that business? He did so by his shrewdness, his thrift, and his business acumen, and more than that by his hard work. Now there are people in this House who believe that nationalisation, puting everything under the State, gives an advantage. There are some, even in my own party, who advocate something very like that, but they call it rationalisation and co-ordination. For my part, I must say that I believe in the small unit. The small unit is the more efficient unit. The manager of the small unit can give closer attention to his business. He can provide more efficient organisation, and give that personal touch which is so valuable in securing the trade and commerce which will bring back a state of prosperity. It is the small unit, and not the large one, which has made our British people so successful in the business line. My last words in seconding the Amendment is to ask the House to give the small man a chance, to enable him to conduct his business free from all these restrictions.

12.35 p.m.

Mr. LEONARD: As the House rises early to-day I think I will spend a little time in paying a visit to the Old Curiosity Shop. The two speeches to which we have just listened take me back to the opinions which were held strongly in the days of Charles Dickens; they certainly do not represent opinions which are held to-day in enlightened business circles. The hon. Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Remer) is a little perturbed because we have selected this industry, but really no explanation is needed. The point is, does it require attention; and the details which have been put before the House by the hon Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Morgan Jones) warrant the claim that it is an industry which does require some attention. It has been suggested by the hon. Member that there is no trouble or agitation anywhere in retail shops and that the only place where there is any strife is in the Co-operative Society. May I tell the hon. Member that there are no fears exercising the minds of employés in the Co-operative Society, there is no intimidation; and because of this freedom they have no hesitation in demanding their rights.

The hon. Member made a reference to the county towns. Apparently he has not read the Bill, because there is sufficient elasticity in it to enable peculiar conditions where they exist to be considered and met; if not under the Bill at any rate by an Amendment. He also referred to the shift system in the Co-operative Society, and just as he asked the hon. Member for Caerphilly where he got his data for the details he gave to the House I should like to ask the hon. Member for Macclesfield where he got his information from. He has put some questions regarding the Co-operative Society to the Government, and I have asked him for the data in regard to those questions. I am still awaiting the apology that is due because the hon. Member has not yet sent these facts to me.

Mr. REMER: I refuse to make any apology because my statement was true.

Mr. LEONARD: That is a question of fact, but if the statement was true the acts have not been sent to me, notwithtanding a promise to do so. I shall wait with interest the receipt of the acts. I do not think there will be much bjection to the Bill because it proposes o give some protection—and this Government believes in protection. The Bill is calculated to protect not only shop ssistants but the good small employers, who are now subject to the conditions imposed upon them because of the freedom which is allowed to bad employers, who have less scruples in placing impositions n their employés. We ask for a 48-hour week, and so far I have heard nothing which goes to prove that it is impossible to apply a 48-hour week. With regard to overtime, I see no reason why payment hould not be made to those who are inonvenienced or why a penalty should not be imposed on employers who do not rganise their business in such a way as to eliminate the necessity for overtime being imposed upon their employés.

We listened to a humorous speech from the hon. Member who moved the Amendment, but in my opinion there is no more complexity in this Bill than in many of the measures proposed by the Government. Indeed, it is not half so complex as some of the legislation which will have to be introduced by the Government in egard to import duties. No increased costs are involved. They are already being met and paid for by the co-operative movement in this country, and the esults so far has not been to entail any ncrease in price. With regard to the general public there has been a great agitation amongst some people that the general public will be placed at a disadvantage. I cannot see that there will be much inconvenience on the part of the general public. There is a tendency to assume that there is a great mass of purchasers waiting at the stores at the beginning of the day and a great crowd of people standing at the doors just at closing time. That is not the case. The great mass of purchases in shops takes place during hours which can quite reasonably come within a 48-hours week. The number of people who would be at all nconvenienced is negligible, most of the purchases are made at times well within reasonable hours.

It must also be remembered that the public is very adaptable. In the past they had been forced to be adaptable by changed circumstances; and they can be equally adaptable with regard to any imposition which may be placed upon them through the operation of this Bill. The working population is the buying public, the great mass of the workers constitute the great mass of the buying public, and there is no reason to assume that the buying public are not sufficiently adaptable to meet any changes which may be made. I notice that in the evidence of Mr. Kenneth Thomas given at the inquiry he says:

> "A society trading with its own members can, within reason, make what arrangements it pleases as to the hours and conditions of service rendered."

That is to say, that the people who make these conditions are the representatives of the buying public, they are the purchasers of commodities, and it is unreasonable to assume that because they are members of co-operative societies they are going to place hardships upon themselves as purchasers, and are going to insist on their shops maintaining hours which will inconvenience them as purchasers. Therefore if in the case of the 6,000,000 representatives of co-operative societies in this country it is found that they suffer no hardship from the application of a 48 hours week, there can be no hardship in applying it to the general buying public. Further on the same gentleman says:

> "They have, in effect, to go out and seek their customers, and this means consulting the shopping convenience of the public in every possible legitimate way."

I respectfully submit that if 6,000,000 purchasers controlling their own shops find that a 48 hours week is sufficient to permit their womenfolk and others to make all the purchases they require, there can be no hardship in applying the 48 hours week to anyone else. This Select Committee had before it many private individuals who gave quite impartial evidence. There was no doubt as to their opinions on the practicability of a 48 hours week, and its desirability from the point of view of the health of the assistants.

Now a word with regard to the shopkeepers themselves, for I recognise that they have to be considered. We have heard a great deal as to the intimacy of employers with their employés. Again that applies both ways; it applies to good employers' and bad employers' shops. We see signs in certain shops that do not point to such freedom, even in small shops. Among the many difficulties some shopkeepers have to contend with is the fact that there is not so much money coming into the shops, and this may make them a little sore on many points. But they themselves are wholly responsible, because they have been very prominent in the stampede for national and local economy which has reduced the wages that generally go into their shops. The proposal of the Bill gives fair play to the good employer, and we can only get fair play by regulation. I do not think that this House can object to anything in the form of regulations, because regulation is the order of the day now. We are saying to various industries, to agriculture for instance, "Yes, we think you should be helped, and we will help you, provided you organise yourselves, but you must make a start." The shopkeepers are entitled to fair play, and one of the means of giving them fair play is by regulations such as are suggested. I have taken part in negotiations covering the furniture trade, and time and time again the employers have told us how they have been held up because the conditions applied by bad employers absolutely determine the conditions that others have to lay down. It is said that the bad employer ultimately fails, and that may be so, but unfortunately before that comes about a great deal of hardship is inflicted on his employés and he cripples them in health.

[Mr. Leonard.]

With regard to the multiple firms. I do not see that the advantages of organisation percolate through to the employés under their control, but I notice from the Maypole Dairy Report that they paid a dividend of 17.5 per cent. from 1927 to 1930, that the Meadow Dairy Co. paid 30 per cent. during the same period, that the Home and Colonial Stores have been very successful and have paid 25 per cent. during the years 1927 to 1931, and that the International Tea Co. stores have been equally successful, having started with 22 per cent. in 1927 and ended with 30 per cent. in 1932. Those companies might allow the advantage of good organisation to percolate through to their employés.

I want to refer to a suggestion with regard to perishable goods. The assertion is made that any curtailment of hours will penalise those who deal in perishable goods. There may be something in it, but I do not think the case is as important as it is represented to be. When persons purchase perishable goods they do not purchase them on the basis of the hours a shop is open. It does not matter to them how many hours a shop is open. If a customer wants to make certain purchases he will make those purchases whether the shop is open for eight hours or nine hours. As a matter of fact the shorter the hours the better, because the stuff will be fresher when it comes out of the shop. It is not the co-operative experience that we have had to increase the number of employés because of reduction in hours.

I notice here a statement made by a Mr. Jones, who acts on behalf of the Labour Department of the Co-operative Union. He states that so far as the retail side of the movement is concerned it may be said that the 48 hours week became substantially operative from 1910 to 1912, and that it has been general since about 1916. He refers to the question of the warehouses of the general or wholesale type, and he says that in that class of employment the hours are actually 41 per week. They are also able to recognise the right of an employé to better organisation. The Union recommends that if overtime is not less than one and a half hours, 1s. 6d. shall be paid; if not less than two hours, that 2s. to be paid; if not less than 2½ hours that 2s. 6d. shall be paid; if not less than three hours, that 3s. to be paid; and if not less than 3½ hours that 3s. 6d. shall be paid. Those are actual conditions being operated at the present time.

Then there is the case of co-operative societies taking over private stores, not stores with which they were in competition, but stores far removed from such competition. There they apply the new conditions, work the organisation with the same staff, and increase the wages by 2s. to 29s. a week and reduce the hours from 56 to 48. As to the shop assistants themselves, we have been told that there is no mandate for this Bill. I do not know how one would get the voice of the shop assistants. There is only one way in which the shop assistants can tell what they desire and that is through their organisations. This Bill has the support of the shop assistants of this country who are organised in such a way as to give expression to their opinions. In the past shop assistants in general had been looked upon as persons indulging in light employment, what many people think is light and desirable employment.

I have had experience both as a shop assistant and as a carpenter, and I have felt much more tired, worried and washed-out after a week's work as a shop assistant than after a week as a cabinet maker in the ordinary workshop. I have seen those whose general employment is that of shop assistants going home in the evening so tired as to be unable to take the rest to which they were entitled, let alone any enjoyment. I would like hon. Members to get out of their minds the idea that shop assistants are a privileged class of persons. With regard to the number of hours worked by them, as to which some question has been raised by hon. Members, may I refer again to the minutes of evidence which have been touched upon already. Mr. Kenneth Thomas, who speaks on behalf of the United Kingdom Association of multiple shop proprietors said, with regard to his shops and those of the people for whom he spoke, that inquiries by the association had revealed that the present hours, excluding mealtimes, varied from 50 to 58 hours, with an average of 54 hours, in some instances plus overtime of about three hours weekly spent in clearing up.

I am prepared to accept those figures as representative of the great multiple shop trade and I state quite emphatically that, as a result of my experience, they are far too long and that the multiple shops could very well afford to have the "imposition," as hon. Members call it, placed upon them in order to improve those conditions. The work of shop assistants is also looked upon as a youth's employment. There is evidence to-day in many working-class homes to prove that in large warehouses and shops to-day employers are weighing very carefully in the balance the alternatives of keeping in employment a girl of 25 or putting her out and getting in a girl of 16. They even consider whether they should not bring in girls of 14 and save insurance stamps. That is the condition of things to which your conception of good conditions has led.

If this is to be regarded as a youth's employment, then the vitality of youth is being exhausted by working these long hours. I see in certain trade papers references to the great need at the present time for instruction in the art of salesmanship. When are these young people to be instructed if you keep them at work for 58 hours a week or how are they to be in a fit mental condition to receive any instruction? The difficulty of maintaining health has already been mentioned and I do not touch upon it further than to point out that the gentleman to whom I have already referred said that among the staffs of the firms under his jurisdiction, there was a high standard of health. That may be so, but it is in the main due to the fact that they are absorbing the healthy youth of this country to an extent which they are not entitled to do. If the co-operative employers in this country, covering eight per cent. of the distributive trades, are able to satisfy 6,000,000 people with regard to hours and wages and overtime conditions, we are asking nothing unfair and nothing which is outside the bounds of possibility in asking the House to accept this Bill.

1 p.m.

Sir GERVAIS RENTOUL: As the hon. Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Remer) has said, those who have been for some years Members of this House recognise in this Bill an old friend. We have been reminded that a Measure substantially similar was introduced in March, 1930, and received a Second Reading without a Division. In order to avoid any misunderstanding on that matter the House ought to be told that that Bill only received its Second Reading without a Division because a distinct and definite pledge was given by the spokesman of the Labour Government, the then Under-Secretary for the Home Department, that an immediate inquiry would be set on foot to examine the whole position. It was after the opponents of the Bill had been fully satisfied that the inquiry would be a proper one and an extensive one that the Bill was formally allowed to pass the Second Reading stage. That point ought to be emphasised, in case some hon. Members imagine that on that occasion the House definitely endorsed the general principles of the Bill when, in fact, it did nothing of the kind.

[Sir G. Rentoul.]

On that occasion I was privileged to move an Amendment somewhat similar to that which has been moved this morning. It is interesting to observe the changes which have been made in the Bill now under discussion as compared with the Bill of three years ago, but the main purpose of both Bills is the same namely, to establish a compulsory and rigid 48 hour week in the distributive trades. It is easy to suggest that those who oppose the Bill are in favour of long hours of work and are anxious to put back the clock. That suggestion, I, for one, entirely repudiate. I do not, in all sincerity, believe that there is the slightest foundation for it. A genuine difference of view exists between us and hon. Members opposite. We believe that an entirely wrong method of approach is being adopted towards the question of dealing with the evil, if indeed, an evil on any widespread scale exists.

When the previous Bill was discussed I submitted a few reasons why any compulsory restriction of hours was undesirable. I suggested that such a restriction would cut across the whole principle of voluntary negotiation; that it would necessarily increase overhead charges, tend to raise prices and cause inconvence to the customer and that it would create unemployment and promote casual labour. I suggested that there was no overwhelming demand for it, that it would penalise small shopkeepers, add to the difficulties of distribution, upset existing agreements and prevent that reasonable elasticity in the conduct of the distributive trades which, I think, everyone with experience of those trades admits to be essential. Finally, I suggested that it represented mere piecemeal dealing with a question, which, if dealt with at all, ought to be dealt with on broad national and indeed international lines.

If those were the objections which occurred to one three years ago, I confess that most of them are much stronger to-day. A good deal of water has passed under the bridges since the House last discussed this subject. We have, quite rightly, heard a great deal about the report of the Select Committee set up as a result of the previous Debate in this House. I have always admired the sincerity of the hon. Gentleman who moved the Second Reading of the Bill and I admired to-day, not for the first time, his advocacy. In the most skilful manner, he skated lightly over the points which were not in his favour or which did not tend to support his argument, and he laid enormous emphasis on one or two matters which he conceived to be in support of his case. For example, time and again throughout his speech he referred to the unanimous nature of the Report of the Select Committee. I was a member of that Select Committee, and so were the hon. Member for Westhoughton (Mr. Rhys Davies) and several other hon. Members who are here to-day, and I think that they will agree with me in this at all events, that it was very far indeed from being a unanimous Report.

That applied throughout the whole of the proceedings. From first to last there was a fundamental difference of opinion on questions of principle revealed between us. Indeed, the main recommendations of the Report, the substance of the Report—that is to say, the 48-hour week and the question of overtime—were only carried by the Chairman's casting vote. The Committee was split from top to bottom on those two vital matters, and, with regard to the other proposals contained in the Report, the Committee was certainly not unanimous. The Chairman of the Committee would, I think, be the last to deny that he was a strong supporter of the principles embodied in this Bill. It fell to him, in accordance with recognised procedure, to draft the Report, and I do not in any way venture to impugn the accuracy of the Report where it refers to evidence given before the Committee, but I do entirely dispute the emphasis, the wrong emphasis, that has been laid throughout the Report, almost from first to last; and any Member of this House who reads that Report and then will take the trouble to go carefully through the evidence produced before the Committee, upon which that Report is based, will tend to agree that the Report does not substantially represent the evidence and that it leaves an erroneous impression upon the mind.

Therefore, I hope that hon. Members who want to make up their minds on this matter will attach far more importance to the evidence, to the statements of the witnesses, their cross-examination, and so on than to the summary of that evidence as it appears in the actual Report of the Committee. We had, as has been stated, a very great volume of evidence before us from some 69 witnesses representing the distributive trades of the country, many individual shopkeepers and shop assistants, and others. I confess that much of it tended to strengthen and confirm the views which I had previously held, and I think that was the case with many of my hon. friends. It is not that we did not try to approach this matter with an open mind, which is proved by the fact that in some minor respects, as a result of the evidence, we felt constrained to modify our views; but, with regard to the main principles, I am clearly of opinion to-day that the evidence given before that Select Committee strengthened the views that were previously held.

We regret, therefore, that this Bill should simply revive in substance these old controversies and should not have concentrated, as it might have done, on one or two perhaps comparatively minor points where the Committee was in agreement and where, in a private Member's Bill, a proper and very useful advance might have been made along the road of social legislation. If, for example, the Bill had confined itself to laying down some statutory limitation of hours in the case of young persons, it might have commanded a very definite measure of acceptance from many Members of this House.

Mr. RHYS DAVIES: Does that mean to say, that if we introduced a Bill dealing with that specific point, we could rely on the support of the hon. and learned Gentleman?

Sir G. RENTOUL: It would be a matter of caution on my part to ask to see the terms of the Bill first, but I certainly would not desire to retreat in any way from the recommendation of the Select Committee, where I think there was reasonable unanimity, that a 48-hour week might be justifiable in the case of young persons. Whether it would be practicable is, of course, a matter that would have to be discussed, but at any rate what I say at the moment is that if this Bill to-day had been confined to a matter of that kind, I think, so far as the principle is concerned, it would probably have obtained its Second Reading, and then any questions and matters of detailed administration would have been left to be decided in Committee upstairs.

Mr. WALLHEAD: Without any reference to the international aspect of the question?

Sir G. RENTOUL: I am only concerned now with the recommendation of the Committee, with regard to which I think there was unanimity in the Committee. Whether the proposal would be practicable, either from a national or an international point of view, is a matter that would need further discussion. Similarly, if this Bill had confined itself to enabling powers to be given for the enforcement of an earlier closing hour for shops than 7 p.m., there might have been some unanimity with regard to that. But when this Bill simply revives the old controversy and the very widespread and important questions of a general 48-hours week for the whole of the distributive trades, which has long been a subject of controversy, in both its national and its international aspects, then it puts the Bill on an entirely different footing; and it is not a matter which ought to be dealt with in a private Member's Bill under any circumstances whatever, apart from any merits that it may have.

The hon. Member who moved the Second Reading of the Bill created, I think, quite unintentionally, a slightly misleading impression when he said, with a good deal of emphasis, that there had been no legislation for 60 years dealing with this matter. He was referring to the Act of Parliament limiting the hours of juveniles to 74 per week, and he said, "No legislation for 60 years; what a scandalous thing." In point of fact, 12 Acts of Parliament of one kind and another, dealing with conditions and hours, either directly or indirectly, of shop assistants, their health, and so forth, have been passed in the last 30 or 40 years, and it is not in the least the case that Parliament has been unmindful of the claims and conditions of this particular class of worker. The hon. Gentleman ended with a peroration in which he said that every hour that could be won for these people was an additional improvement in their health, their well-being, and so on. Well, of course, if you were to carry that theory far enough, you would finally arrive at a state of affairs where no work at all would be done. I have often wondered whether hon. Members opposite do not make a fundamental mistake in looking upon all work as an evil. That seems to be their attitude. "Let us have shorter and shorter hours, and let us get rid of this, that, and the other." I totally disagree with them in that view. We do not regard work as an evil in any sense of the word. I have often heard some hon. Members opposite boast in this House about the long hours that they themselves have worked in their earlier life. That may have been a hardship which they do not look back upon with particular pleasure, but it has not apparently done them very much harm or interfered with their health, for it has enabled them to end by sitting on the benches in this House.

[Sir G. Rentoul.]

This Bill contains three points of substance. The first is the 48 hours, the second is the question of the regulation of overtime, and the third is the proposal to set up national and local advisory boards. With regard to the 48 hours, it is admitted that a rigid regulation of hours in the way proposed would be a big interference with trade. It is an interference of the kind that cannot be justified unless it can be proved that the need for it is obvious, and that an evil exists which cannot be satisfactorily dealt with in any other way. Where is the evidence of that? Where is the evidence that a widespread evil exists in the distributive trades? It is easy, of course, to pick out isolated cases and say what a terrible thing this, that and the other is, but legislation cannot be carried through on such a basis. I submit that in face of the large body of evidence that was put before the Select Committee, there is no evidence of a widespread evil with regard to the length of hours which would justify the drastic action now proposed. Some reference has been made to the investigation which was carried out at the same time by the Home Office into hours and conditions in shops. Widespread inquiries were made all over the country in regard to every kind of retail trade. What do we find? A large number of shops were visited in London belonging to every class of distributive trade. The result of the investigation showed that 30 per cent. of the assistants worked a maximum of 44 hours a week; 11 per cent. worked 46 hours; 24 per cent. 48 hours; 11 per cent. 51 hours; 6 per cent. 52 hours; 6 per cent. 54 hours; and only 2 per cent. worked a maximum of 56 hours. That disproves any suggestion that there is a widespread evil.

Mr. LEONARD: As the figures are so important, will the hon. Member say under whose auspices the investigation took place and if they have been published?

Sir G. RENTOUL: The figures are taken from the inquiry which was conducted by the Home Office and I assume that they are available for hon. Members. They are substantially similar to those given in evidence before the Select Committee. They prove that the overwhelming majority of shop assistants do not work anything that can reasonably be described as excessive hours. These figures apply to London, but similar figures are available in regard to most other big towns throughout the country, and they tend to show that the vast majority of workers in the distributive trades work between 44 and 55 hours per week. We know that years ago there was a great scandal in regard to the length of hours. A point has been made that there has been no legislation on this matter for 60 years, and yet no one will deny that a very big improvement has been brought about during that time. It has been brought about, not by any action that Parliament has taken, but by voluntary agreement, by collective bargaining, and possibly in some instances by militant action on the part of shop assistants themselves.

That tends to support the suggestion that there is really no case for State interference, and I take the view that State interference is in itself an evil unless there is a situation which cannot reasonably and properly be dealt with by any other means. There is certainly no demand for it on the part of shop assistants. We know that the trade unions have failed to organise the shop assistants on any widespread scale, and that possibly is one of the reasons why they attach some importance to this particular Bill. Why is it that the trade unions, which have been so successful in organising the workers in other industries, have not been successful on the whole in organising the workers in the distributive trades? It is because there is no substantial cause of complaint and for dissatisfaction on the part of shop assistants. If there were, do hon. Members opposite suggest that the average shop assistants are such feeble and spineless individuals that they will continue through years to submit to terrible conditions and hardships amounting almost to cruelty, and take no steps in these days of popular education, when the trade union system is so widespread, to combine in order to remedy the evils?

Mr. LEONARD: Are the evils in the printing industry responsible for its being organised to the extent of nearly 100 per cent.?

Sir G. RENTOUL: I do not want to be led away from my argument. It is always easy to raise a point to distract the speaker from his argument. The trade unions have not been successful in organising the shop assistants on any big scale, and I suggest that the reason is that there is no widespread complaint. The trade unions have in many ways served an enormously useful national purpose, but there is no doubt that they have flourished and do flourish on grievances. Whether those grievances are always as real in these days as is sometimes suggested might be open to argument. Every intelligent person knows that a great deal of improvement has been brought about in many cases by collective action, and I refuse to believe that if these evils exist in the distributive trades on the scale that is suggested, the shop assistants would refuse to take the opportunity and the means that are open to them to combine in order to remedy them.

If there is to be a 48-hour week for the distributive trades, it ought to be only as part of a general arrangement applying to all the industries of the country and to other countries as well. In the distributive trades it is admitted, I think, by those who support the Bill and by anybody connected with the trades that overtime to a certain extent is essential for the competent conduct of business. It is a little significant to compare the provisions with regard to overtime in the previous Bill with those in the Bill now before the House. In the previous Bill it was proposed to lay down a definite maximum limit of 60 hours a year for overtime, and it was suggested that that was a very generous concession. Apparently the promoters of the Bill have now realised that it was nothing of the kind, and that it would be most inadvisable to attempt to prescribe any rigid limit of overtime, and therefore they endeavour to try to get out of their difficulty by saying, "We will leave it to be settled by the Advisory Board."

Even if the Advisory Board were able to settle it, nothing could be more unworkable than the proposals of this Bill. Some reference has been made to the conspicuous place in which the notice would have to be put up. As I read the Bill, the employer would have to decide definitely a week or so in advance what amount of overtime was to be worked and by whom it was to be worked, and a schedule would have to be put up. That would entirely destroy any elasticity in the general conduct of the business, or any power to deal with a sudden rush of work or a sudden emergency as it might arise. Whilst overtime is admitted to be necessary, the idea of the promoters of this Bill is to make it as burdensome and as unworkable as possible. That seems to be entirely unreasonable. It ought to be a matter of voluntary arrangement. Nothing could tend more to destroy the good feeling that should exist, and which I am sure we all know does exist, in the great majority of distributive businesses, between the employers and the employed. We know, also, that many assistants work on commission. To limit overtime would be to put a definite obstacle in the way of personal advancement and individual initiative.

One matter which I think is often overlooked in these discussions is the interest of the public itself. The public and the community have rights as well as shopkeepers and shop assistants. There is the worker, who can only do his shopping after his own working hours are ended. That consideration applies particularly to foodshops. Even if a 48-hour limit were imposed, shops would have to be kept open for longer than that, and some arrangement would have to be made to meet the position, and we should probably have the introduction in the big shops of a shift system such as would be quite impossible in the case of the small shopkeeper and would gradually tend to drive him out of business. All through the inquiry, as in this discussion to-day, the example of the co-operative societies was held up to us as a wonderful thing. The underlying idea seems to be that the conversion of the whole country to a vast co-operative system is the ideal at which we should aim. But there is plenty of evidence that people who belong to co-operative societies take advantage of other shops which are open for longer hours and at other times to supplement their purchases from the co-operative societies. It is no argument to say—because I do not think it is a fact—that people are perfectly satisfied with a 48-hour week for co-operative societies and therefore should be satisfied with a similar restriction on all other businesses.

[Sir G. Rentoul.]

With regard to the advisory boards, here, again, I think it is right to make it clear that there was no unanimous recommendation in the report of the Select Committee. We—I mean I and some of my friends—were fundamentally opposed in principle to a legislative 48-hour week, but what we did say was that if, in spite of our objection, a 48-hour week were established by law, it would probably be necessary to have something in the nature of a national or local advisory board to control conditions. but it certainly was not the case that the Committee were unanimously in favour, irrespective of other conditions, of setting up national and local advisory boards to control the distributive trades. There are other minor points in the Bill which I think would need a good deal more consideration before they could be accepted, such, for instance, as the new definition of shops and shop assistants, and the question of bringing in the wholesale shops, a matter which certainly was not considered as fully by the Committee as it would ultimately need to be.

For these reasons I submit that this Bill is not only unnecessary in principle but unworkable in detail, that there is less justification for it after the evidence given before the inquiry than existed when it was last discussed in this House, and that in any event this is the wrong time to interfere in a matter of this kind without grave cause. We are passing through a period of very great trade difficulties, when many shops are having the utmost struggle to keep their heads above water, and this is certainly not the time to place upon their shoulders further burdens which would deprive them of that power of development, that elasticity, which they must possess. Even if it were justifiable to do it in a time of general prosperity it cannot, to my mind, be justified under present conditions. Therefore, I trust the House will decline to give this Bill a Second Reading, because it is an unjustifiable interference with private enterprise and initiative, and, in my view, merely another example of modern and shortsighted Socialism.

1.33 p.m.

Miss PICKFORD: I hope there will be as much unanimity in the House as there was in the Select Committee on the question of young persons engaged as shop assistants, because I cannot help thinking the whole House will agree that a system which permits a boy or girl of only 14 to work for 74 hours a week should not be allowed to continue any longer. It is an anachronism. It is perfectly clear from the statistics which appear in the report of the Select Committee that, normally speaking, in most of the distributive trades, the working week varies from between 46 or 48 hours up to 54 or 56. At the same time the report shows that there are instances, grave instances, in which young persons do work 69, 70 or even more hours. If it is not necessary for the normal working week throughout the country to exceed 48 to 54 hours there can be no justification for permitting young persons to be worked up to 60 and 70 hours. One has every sympathy with the small trader who has to meet the competition, not only of the chain of shops in different districts, but also of the multiple shop which can afford to take a small profit at one branch which competes with the small trader because it gets a larger turnover from the other shops. One wants to do what is possible to help and encourage the small trader, but I do not think that it is possible to justify the small trader working young persons up to hours as long as that.

I hope that before the day is over the Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department will tell us that it is the intention of the Government to bring in before long a Young Persons Bill which will restrict the working hours of young persons in shops and in other trades as well. The experience of history shows that if you restrict the hours of one class of workers the hours of those in unprotected trades tend to conform to the hours of the protected workers. By bringing in regulations for the young persons, a great deal will be done to improve the general standard of working hours throughout the country for shop assistants.

When I turn to the Bill, it is with regret that I have to agree with many hon. Members who have found it far too rigid and inelastic. If it had been a reasonable Bill I would have been only too glad to support it, but the hours and conditions that it lays down see to be an attempt to approximate much more to factory conditions than to shop-hour conditions. There is no possible analogy between conditions in shops and in factories. I would be glad to see legislation to make, with reasonable exceptions, a 48-hour week the normal working-week in factories, but that is a very different thing from expecting a 48-hour week to be the normal working-week in shops. The proprietor of a factory has most of the factors of production under his control, and when he shortens his hours of work he can, by organisation and better machinery, speed up his production. He has control of those conditions. The retail trader has not control of all the conditions of his own working. He can, of course, control the hours at which customers come by locking the doors and by saying that his business is not being carried on, but he cannot otherwise control the customers who come to his shop.

It is very often said that the main and the most important occupation of my sex is shopping, and shopping is perhaps a matter about which I have a good deal of knowledge. There is no doubt that, on the whole, women are far better shoppers than men, because, unlike men, they do not take the first thing that is offered to them without asking the price so as to get out of the shop as quickly as possible. What women do is to have a good look round first, and to find out where they can get the best article at the cheapest price, and all that takes up a considerable amount of time, a good deal of it without bringing in any profit to the retailer. Any retailer who said: "You have had enough of my shop assistant's time. We must now pass on to the next customer", would soon find that his business would not continue to flourish. It is not possible for the shopkeeper to have the same control that a factory proprietor has over the conditions in which his business is carried on. The shopkeeper has to conform far more to the wishes and peculiarities of his customers than does the factory manager who, so long as he produces the goods ordered within the contract time, does not have to consider the whims and fancies of the man who has placed the order.

There are other points in which it is not possible to make any clear analogy between conditions in shops and in factories. In a shop there will be rush hours and slack times which cannot be avoided. Therefore, one must in all reason and fairness take into account those slacker times when assistants should be able to get a certain amount of rest. I lay emphasis on the word "should" because although there is legislation for obliging the proprietors of shops to provide seats for shop assistants, the Report of the Select Committee shows that that provision is to some extent inoperative, and that shop assistants get very little chance, even in slack times, of taking rest by sitting down.

I was glad to see that the report of the departmental investigator in London showed that although 27 per cent. of the shops in Islington did not provide seats, 17 per cent. in Westminster did, and so did 12 per cent. in Hammersmith. I was glad to see that, in common with the County of London, Hammersmith had the best record of London county boroughs in applying the Regulations in regard to seats for shop assistants. It is the practice, unfortunately, that those responsible for the working conditions of shop assistants discourage the assistants from using seats where they are provided. There is the evidence of the Select Committee that that is the practice, but shopkeepers should encourage shop assistants to take every possible advantage of the rest in slack times so that when busy times come they may be fresh and able to cope with their work.

It ought to be agreed that shop hours must have a greater elasticity than should be the case with factories. If we turn to the Bill, we find not only that the limits of hours are less elastic, but that they are even more rigid. When a Factories and Workshops Bill was introduced by two successive Governments, one Labour and one Conservative, to make the normal working-hours 48, instead of as at present 60, in non-textile factories and workshops, it was recognised that it would be necessary to allow a certain reasonable amount of overtime to all, and not only, as at present, to trades which are subject to special rushes of work. If that was considered necessary for a factory, where the strain is considerably greater and where the concentration of work within the time is much greater than it is in a shop, surely at least as much elasticity should be allowed in shop hours. As we can see, the Bill does not suggest that it should be permissible to have overtime in every trade, but that only the local boards might recommend that there shall be overtime in excess of the working-week of 48 hours in certain trades and businesses, and only within the area of the local authority over which that local board has control. That, as the hon. and learned Member for Lowestoft (Sir G. Rentoul) has just pointed out, is making overtime extraordinarily difficult, instead of allowing as the Factories and Workshops Bill allowed, a reasonable amount of overtime to all trades.

[Miss Pickford.]

There is another curious point that I notice in the Bill. The Report of the Select Committee defined shop hours as being the hours in which a shop assistant should be deemed to be at the disposal of the employer, but with the exception of meal-times. It is true that Sub-section (1) of Clause 1 says that a shop assistant shall not be employed in or about a shop for a longer period than 48 hours, exclusive of meal-times, in any week; but Sub-section (3) of Clause 10 says that:

> "For the purpose of calculating the hours of employment and of overtime employment under this Act a shop assistant shall be deemed to be employed for all such time as he is at the disposal of his employer."

I think it must be clear that in those shops—and this would apply to most small shops—where the shop assistant takes his meals on the premises, probably frequently with the family, he is at the disposal of his employer during the time when he is taking his meals, and may be called to serve a customer during that meal-time. Although in large stores it certainly is possible, and probably is the practice, to have definite meal-times for assistants, during which times they would not be at the disposal of their employer, that would be an extraordinarily difficult matter to regulate in small shops. Therefore, the effect of this Sub-section, as I read it, is to make the working week 48 hours inclusive of meal-times.

On the question of overtime, there is another point that seems to have escaped the attention of other Members of the House. Those members of the Select Committee—which was not unanimous on this point—who advocated extra payment for overtime, advocated it at 1¼ times the usual rate; but the promoters of this Bill go further, and say that, for any periods beyond the first quarter of an hour, not less than 1½ times the ordinary rate shall be paid. I was a little surprised that this question of extra payment for overtime was introduced in a Bill of this kind, because, so far as I am aware, it has not up to the present been the practice to deal with hours and conditions of employment and with payment in the same Bill and by the same Department. For instance, hours and conditions in factories and workshops are dealt with under factory and workshop legislation, and are administered by the Home Office, but questions of payment, which come under the Trade Boards Acts, are administered by the Ministry of Labour, with a separate organisation. The suggestion in this Bill is to include both under the same legislation. I was rather surprised that the hon. Members who have brought forward the Bill should wish to bring in the question of overtime payment in this way; I should have thought that they would have preferred to rely on collective bargaining, while, in those cases where it is not possible to rely on collective bargaining at present, the enforcement of rates of wages and overtime rates is carried out under the Trade Boards Act.

It must be apparent to hon. Members on the Opposition Benches, as it is to myself and others who have had some experience in the administration of trade board matters, that the payment of the rates of wages laid down by a trade board, after they have been settled by the representatives of both sides of the trade, has to be enforced by a special inspectorate, and that, if it were not for the inspectorate, a good deal of that legislation would be ineffective. It is very elaborate, and it necessitates an experienced and fairly large inspectorate to see that it is carried out. A thing which is comparatively simple when dealt with by trade boards, of which, speaking from memory, I think there are some 42, would be a very much more difficult matter in the case of retail shops scattered all over the country and having very different methods of working and book-keeping—some of them very large, such as multiple stores, and some very small indeed, such as the shop with a single juvenile employé. I am almost forced to the conclusion that the hon. Members who have introduced and supported this Bill are really not very keen that it should be passed, because I cannot help thinking that, if they were, they would have introduced a Measure which would have secured a considerable amount of support from Members holding the same views as myself who sit on the opposite benches from the promoters of the Bill. The Bill seems to me to be so inelastic and difficult that I fear it is impossible for those of us who have the retail trade at heart, both the employers' side and the employés' side, to support it.

I hope, however, that the question of young persons and their employment will be taken up before very long, because, as is shown in the Report, and as I said at the beginning of my remarks, there is no evidence that there is any necessity for excessive hours in the case of young persons. It is very easy to argue that such cases are exceptional, and I hope they are, but, just because they are exceptional, there can be no hardship in preventing by legislation the continuance of such exceptional cases, because such prevention will not bring any real hardship on those employers—and I believe them to be the vast majority—who would not think of exploiting young persons in this way.

1.53 p.m.

Mr. DENMAN: I would join with the hon. Member for North Hammersmith (Miss Pickford) in inviting the Government at least to deal at as early a stage as they can with the position of young persons in shops and in the distributive trades. So far as this Bill deals with that matter, I believe it will have the general approval of the House as a whole. When, however, we are asked to support an Amendment which condemns the Bill in general, I think we are asked to do something that is beyond what most of us would wish, and I hope that the Government, whatever they may say about the Bill itself, will not indicate any approval of the Amendment that is now before us. The Amendment recognises the undesirability of shop assistants working excessive hours, and then proceeds to give a number of extremely bad reasons why we should not support the Bill, which at least is an attempt to fulfil that particular object. It asserts that the Bill would involve local authorities in increased expenditure.

One is bound to comment on the fact that the Mover and Seconder of the Amendment referred very little to the Report of the Select Committee which had this whole matter under consideration. After all, a Select Committee consisting of Members from all parts of the House, and having before it a very large volume of evidence, is in a better position than most of us individuals to make some authoritative pronouncement on the facts before it; and on this first point, that there will be an excessive burden of cost, the Committee unanimously agreed to certain statements which are not consistent with that view. On page 58 there is a very interesting statement about the evidence given by the chief officer of the Public Control Department of the London County Council who, when asked whether any increase of his staff would be necessary if he had the task of enforcing legislation imposing a 48-hour week, said that he thought that any increase required would be only a reasonable one. He stated:

> "From a wide experience of London people I find that, when you get a law into their minds, they are an extraordinarily law-abiding people."

Later on:

> "Your committee are of opinion that the closer supervision of shop hours could be carried out without any great increase in the inspectorates. In the County of London 13 inspectors do the work under the Shops Acts; and, normally, every shop and stall is visited once a year."

This bogy of a large increase of officials is trotted out whenever any kind of Bill imposing regulations is proposed. All the arguments of the Proposer and Seconder of the Amendment are arguments that we have heard in every Parliament that any of us can remember. If we choose to read the records, we shall see the same arguments applied to the Factory Acts, the Trade Boards Acts and the Shops Acts, and in every case where it is supposed that any regulation would cause hardships and evils and ruin to employers which, in fact, when the regulation is imposed never occurs.

[Mr. Denman.]

The Amendment goes on to assert that this will cause an increase in retail prices or a reduction in the wages of shop assistants. What does the Committee say on that point? It was not oblivious to the danger. Why should it be? It had evidence on the point, and it produces paragraphs which are unanimously agreed to.

"Your Committee believe that a 48-hour week for shop assistants would have no appreciable effect on prices."

On the question of the wages of shop assistants, they very certainly point out that, as far as can be judged from the views of representative organisations, the shop assistants

"would be prepared to take the risk of the consequences suggested, if risk there be, rather than sacrifice the advantage of a limitation of working hours."

The Amendment really neglects the evidence of our own Select Committee who reported to us. The Bill suffers from the defects from which so many Friday Bills suffer. They deal with large subjects which are really outside the range of a private Member's Bill. The promoters must recognise that the Bill has no chance of passing this Session even if it gets its Second Reading to-day. The only effect of it going upstairs will be that a large amount of time will be occupied in Committee, and it will come down and have no chance on Report. It is far too controversial in the form in which it is produced. We are, therefore, in the difficulty of having either to vote for a Bill which we know is doomed or voting against a Bill which contains a principle that we approve. That is an unfortunate difficulty in which we are often placed on Friday afternoons. The Bill has defects which, if not incapable of being remedied in Committee, would at any rate involve an extremely difficult Committee stage.

Let me take one point to show how difficult is the task of a private Member in drafting Bills and getting them through. The Select Committee pointed out that a change of hours from present conditions to 48 per week would not take place suddenly, but would be put into force gradually. I look at the Bill to see how it carries out that requirement, and I find an extraordinary condition of things. It comes into operation on 1st January next. The local advisory boards have to be set up within six calendar months of its passing. That is to say that, before it comes into force, apparently some authorities may or may not take action under it. Let us suppose that it is passed on the 15th July, then within six months of the passing, that is before 15th January, these boards have to be set up, and yet the Bill does not come into force before 1st January. Let us suppose that in the hectic fortnight between 1st and 15th January local boards are set up to fulfil their task. We are then faced with the further difficulty that a National Board has to be set up within a year after the passing of the Bill. Suppose that is not set up until July, 1934, you would then have a period in which you could not make an order because it could not be made until the National Board has made a recommendation to the Home Secretary, and you would simply have your initial period of six months in which there would be a rigid 48 hours without any possibility of variation. Of course, that is a Committee point which could be put right, but it indicates the difficulty of drafting Bills of this sort, and it indicates much better than any other example that this kind of thing ought to be done by the Government.

On the broad question, this Bill is in the direct Conservative tradition. Act after Act has been passed regulating trades on the principle that bad employers must be brought up to the level of good employers. No one is here asking for a standard which is not very widely adopted already. We have had figures to show that it is indeed the standard of the great majority of employers. We have had legislation bringing up the standard of the lower grade employer to the standard of the better, the object being in part the benefit of the worker and in part to relieve the good employer from an intolerable competition. That is a very real point that we always have to face of the good employer being confronted with the worse conditions of the bad employer and having a competitor who imposes upon him hours that he himself wishes to resist and to amend. That is in strict harmony with a long series of Acts, and it is generally recognised by now as an old Conservative principle. I, therefore, hope that the Government will be able to indicate that in due course they will themselves deal with the matter on satisfactory lines.

I end as I began by suggesting that the question, in so far as it relates to juveniles, is extremely urgent. We have had pledges that the hours of work of juveniles in the unregulated trades shall be submitted to regulation, and the ex-Under-Secretary of State at the Home Office even gave us hope that it might be within a very few Sessions. Anyhow, I look to the present Government within their lifetime, and, if possible, in the next Session, to introduce legislation which shall once for all put an end to the gross scandal of the hours of labour which juveniles work in the shops and the distributive trades.

2.6 p.m.

Mr. BANFIELD: I have listened to a series of speeches from hon. Members, all directed to the one end of showing that a legal 48-hour week in the distributive trades would be harmful to these trades, and to everyone employed therein. I would point out to hon. Members, speaking from an experience as a negotiator in the trade union movement, ranging considerably over 30 years, that every argument used this morning, every doubt expressed, and every fear put forward has been put forward over and over again by all kinds of employers in all kinds of industries in opposition to the 48-hour week, but when a 48-hour week has, by negotiation, been brought into operation all doubts and difficulties have disappeared. The hon. Member for Harrow (Sir I. Salmon) will doubtless pay a little attention to this point as he and I are rather old comrades and also antagonists in this matter. You get a state of things where certain employers in an industry are prepared to say: "We agree that a 48-hour week is desirable, that it is a decent number of hours during which to work, and we want our people to have a 48-hour week, but our difficulty is that there are so many other people"—chiefly small employers, they will say, if they happen to be large employers themselves—"who will refuse to agree to any voluntary agreement as to a 48-hour week." It is within the knowledge of the hon. Member for Harrow that he and many large employers associated with him have from time to time declared in regard to the question of hours of labour that there can be no satisfactory conclusion except by way of legal enactment. I believe that to be so. I suggest to hon. Members who have held up their hands with horror at the idea of a 48-hour week for the distributive trades, that, if the question was more thoroughly examined, if there were not quite so much bitterness and bias, and an entirely wrong conception that the more hours people work the more you get out of them and the more profit in consequence, then, with organised efficiency in industry, a 48-hour week would be desirable in the interests of everybody concerned.

We have heard that the distributive trade is one of those trades which cannot very well carry on unless it is allowed to work its employés as many hours as may be necessary. I heard the very pathetic stories this morning of good employers working alongside their workpeople, and that they were a very happy family, calling one another Tom, Dick or Harry, and giving and taking, though who was doing the giving and who was doing the taking was not really explained. I am very pleased to see the hon. Member for South West St. Pancras (Mr. Mitcheson) in his place. The conception of business being a family concern has disappeared long ago. It may exist in certain isolated cases, but in the main business to-day is not run on the idea that a man comes into a draper's shop or a grocer's shop and that, as a result of hard work and diligent attention to his job, he eventually marries the employer's daughter and lives happy ever after. That conception is altogether wrong.

Emphasis has been laid upon the point that there is no demand for a legal 48-hour week as far as the distributive trades are concerned. The position has been put to us in this way, that if people were discontented and had reasonable grounds for complaint, surely, they would bring the matter to the attention of their trade union and that thereby the discontent would be removed. I say without fear of contradiction that in the distributive trades a dead set is made by a majority of the employers against allowing their employés even to belong to trade unions. That feeling has been expressed over and over again. Further, there has been built up a psychology that in some way or other the worker who serves behind the counter is in a better social position than the common or garden manual worker.

[Mr. Banfield.]

There is bitter discontent among shop assistants of all trades. There is a tremendous feeling that they do not get a square deal and that the machine of modern industry crushes and keeps them down. There is a struggle going on behind the scenes in the big stores in London day after day and week after week, in which men are fighting each other, struggling like crabs in a bucket in an endeavour to come to the top, as a result of the system imposed upon them by employers. They are afraid to express their discontent for fear of being discharged and flung upon the streets. The economic circumstances of the workers employed in the distributive trades are such that they have to keep quiet. Discontent does not make itself heard. They are in the position of the slave who is afraid to open his mouth. If there ever was a trade in which a legal 48-hour week was necessary, it is the distributive trade.

Let me add my voice to the very considerable volume in this House which has championed the cause of the juvenile worker. The report of the committee on the subject proves fairly conclusively that terribly long hours are worked by boys and girls between the ages of 14 and 18. There has been an attempt to suggest that these are isolated instances. From my own experience I can say that there is shameful overwork in the case of boys and girls between 14 and 18 years of age. I go so far as to say that, instead of these cases being isolated, they are the general rule and not the exception. There is no opportunity for these boys and girls to improve their position by education. I read interesting articles from time to time in the Press about the art of salesmanship. Very nice gentlemen give very nice lectures to very nice staffs, telling them how, if they do so-and-so, and study this and that, the road to prosperity to managerships and directorships is open to them. With all due respect, I say it is all bunkum.

The employers in the distributive trade have shown little or no disposition to help any kind of education so far as their juvenile workers are concerned. All that they are concerned about, until such time as they throw these boys and girls on to the street, is to get as much out of them as they possibly can with as little wages as they can possibly give. During the week-end a lady came to me to tell me about a girl 17½ years of age employed in a warehouse from 7.30 in the morning until 8.30 in the evening, and when the mother complained bitterly to the employer about the long hours, the employer discharged the girl. For all those hours that girl was paid 8s. 6d. a week. It is all very well for hon. Members to come here and theorise, and say that a 48 hour week is not necessary. I would like some of them to go to the homes of the people as I do where they have to put up with this kind of thing.

There is another point I want to put. There has been a tremendous increase in Sunday trading during the last few years. Surely there must be some legal restriction in the number of hours of labour in any particular work. Thousands are being employed on Sundays with no extra pay. It all comes in with the week's work. I have a leaflet here affecting my own industry, issued by a baker in Camberwell. It says:

> "New bread on Sundays. Why buy your week-end bread on Saturdays when you can obtain fresh bread of superior quality here on Sundays?"

It means that this man employs boys and girls to come along on Sundays, that he employs bakers to make bread to sell on Sundays. This question of Sunday baking is not confined to London. An ever-increasing number of hours are being worked in the distributing trade, and it does appear to me that a sufficient case has been made out for legal enactment. Surely no hon. Member would seriously argue that 48 hours' work is not a reasonable number of hours, fair to the man and to the employer? We have heard a good deal of talk about rush hours in the distributive trade, and that there is nothing to do at some other times. I have never been fortunate enough to experience it. Even when customers are not in the shop there is always found something to do. My own experience is that a 48-hour week—not an 8-hour day—is sufficient to satisfy the public. Surely this House is no longer going to be swayed by the argument that a man who comes in three minutes after the closing time, 8 o'clock, must be served. Hon. Members will remember when shops in London used to be open until 10, 11 and 12 o'clock at night, and I will assert that at that time some man or woman would come in three minutes after 12 o'clock and demand something, and, of course, the employer said, "We cannot turn customers away." After all, those who serve the country in this industry have some rights as well as the public. It is only fair that the shopkeeper and his assistants should have reasonable hours of labour in so far as the public generally demand reasonable hours of labour.

I know it is unlikely that the House will agree to the Second Reading of this Bill, but I do say that this question of the legal restriction of the hours of labour will have to be dealt with. I agree, possibly, with the hon. Member for Lowestoft (Sir G. Rentoul) when he said that this matter ought to be dealt with in a bigger way. But there has been an inquiry by Select Committee and all sorts of evidence called, and is it to be assumed that when a Committee has been appointed to deal with a subject, and it has been dealt with, the subject is to be buried altogether? If anything is meant by a Committee, it means that some legislation should follow, and I put it to the House that this Bill is the logical outcome of the Committee and the evidence given. Therefore, I support the Second Reading.

2.23 p.m.

Sir ISIDORE SALMON: In listening to the Mover of the Second Reading describing the objects which animated him in bringing forward such a Bill, I waited for him to give some justification on general grounds for the Bill. The major part of his speech, however, was devoted to a subject with which, I think, we all have sympathy, and I certainly have, for I do not believe in the exploitation of the young person. If the hon. Member had introduced a Bill of that character it would probably have received a different reception than this Bill has received up to now. Some hon. Members who are supporting the Bill argue that the big employers deprecate the idea of men and women joining the unions, and that that is a reason why very few join them. I would ask the House to consider the proposition that, in a number of distributive trades, the shops in this country owned by small traders are out of all proportion to those owned by large firms, or companies. Therefore it is absurd to give that as a reason why trade unions do not receive a larger membership than they do at the present time.

One must admit that there are certain employers who are not good employers, but they are a very small minority when you deal with the whole problem. I do not think any case has been made for proposing a rigid rule of 48 hours in the distributive trades. It is within the recollection of many Members of the House that some three or four Governments have considered the 48-hour week for industrial workers. They could not agree that 48 hours was desirable, or in the interests of the workers of the country. Not that I object to a person working only 48 hours. The great objection I see is that there should be rigidity—that you should be compelled to work only 48 hours. If there is any magic in the proposal that only 48 hours should be worked, why does the hon. Member who introduced the Bill say in another Clause that you may work overtime if you are paid for it? No supporter of this Bill has supplied the House with any real information as to the necessity for such legislation.

The hon. Member who introduced the Bill rather gave the impression that there was a majority in the Committee in favour of the main principle for which the Bill stands. I understood, on looking through the evidence, that there was a majority of one. It does appear to me that the great thing we have to consider is the question of the small shopkeeper of this country. Let me say right away that I am not speaking from any personal desire, or representing the views of any particular body of persons, but I do express the view, after careful consideration, that it is in the interests of this country that we should not kill the small shopkeeper. I see that my hon. Friend rather sneers at that observation of mine. I would assure him that, in my view, the whole structure of this country has been built up by the small shopkeeper, and I think it would be a great pity if we were to force the small shopkeeper out of business and have only large concerns. I say that quite sincerely.

The Bill before the House to-day would have the effect of closing a very large number of small shops. It has been said that the co-operative societies—and there are other people also—work an average of 48 hours a week. One week it may be 48, or 40 hours and the next week a little shorter or longer, but, on the average, it would probably be 48 hours a week. The hon. Gentleman will say that the co-operative societies are rigid, and do not have more than 48 hours. They can do that because they have large organisations. The point I want to make is that these facilities are not at the command of the small shopkeeper. He cannot organise his industry, shop, or business in the same way that a larger organisation can. You are, therefore, going to strike a very serious blow at the small shopkeeper in this country if you insist upon the rigid 48-hour week. I was rather surprised to hear the hon. Gentleman who spoke last suggest that I concur in the view that to carry out any sort of arrangement you must have a legal enactment. I do not agree. But what surprised me more was that he deprecated the idea of trying to create good fellowship with one's employés.

[Sir I. Salmon.]

Mr. BANFIELD: May I point out that I did nothing of the sort. I do not deprecate feelings of good fellowship; I do my best to cultivate them.

Sir I. SALMON: I am within the recollection of the House. The substance of his speech, if it meant anything, was that it was not honest and desirable that an employer should talk to his employés and try and see if a certain ideal could be obtained. I can understand the mentality of certain hon. Members, because it is only in times of trouble between employers and employés that they are concerned, and it cannot seem to them that there can be good fellowship between employers and employed. I would say, as one who has had as large experience, and more than most Members of this House, in dealing with large numbers of employés, that no business can get on unless good fellowship exists. It is unfortunate that an hon. Member occupying the position of my hon. Friend should rather create the impression that, because an employer is out to show his employés that if they do certain things they can make greater progress, it is not proper. That is a very unfortunate statement. I do not want to labour the point. The hon. Gentleman rather suggested that there was no regard paid to the general employés of this country, and that they worked scandalous hours.

I suggest that a 48-hour week proposed by this Bill really means only working 45 hours. The promoters of the Bill, if he gives a little thought to it will realise that the small shopkeeper will take half-an-hour to prepare and open his shop and half-an-hour to close it and, therefore, you are going to say that the small shopkeepers may open for business only for 45 hours per week. Consider the case of a country district or a seaside town where the trade for eight months in the year is rather quiet. The staff is kept on, but their hours of work are not long and the work itself is not arduous. For the other four months of the year they may have to work much longer hours. If this Bill ever became law the effect would be that staffs would be reduced to the minimum and the full staff taken on only for the busy period. It would have the effect, I am sure, of introducing a system which most people deprecate—casual employment. If you make conditions arduous for the employer you will introduce a system into the trade of this country which will mean that a large number of men will be added to the ranks of the unemployed. Mechanism has been the means in no small degree of creating unemployment, and if you make conditions such that an employer will have to look for other means of giving service to his customers it may mean that you will introduce into this country a system which has already been introduced into America, a system of self service, where people serve themselves. The consequence of such a system would be that less staff would be required and thus unemployment would become greater. No one doubts the sincerity of the hon. Member who introduced the Bill, although one may not always agree with his views, but I am afraid that his Bill would add to the amount of unemployment. I think he ought to have added a paragraph to the Bill and called it an Increase of Unemployment Bill, because the real effect of the Measure, if it became law, would be to increase unemployment, not to decrease it.

The amount of profit in the distributive trades owing to competition is cut to a very small figure. Every successful industry must give service if it is going to maintain its business and, therefore, the suggestion that you should limit the hours which employés shall work and have no regard to the fact that a large portion of the time is a slack period, if you are to have no regard to the slack periods of the year and the busy periods of the year, and say that the employé must be paid so much more for overtime it will mean, either that the basic wage of the employé must be less or that during the slack period fewer persons must be employed. If the same number of people are to be employed and paid extra money during the busy period someone will have to pay for it; and that someone is the public. If you charge extra to the public, if you charge higher prices, you lose customers and, consequently, there will be more unemployment. I cannot see any virtue in this Bill, nor can I see the necessity for it. It will increase the ranks of unemployment, it will not help industry, and, therefore, I am strongly opposed to it.

2.41 p.m.

Mr. HACKING: I interrupted the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Morgan Jones) when he was making his speech because I felt that quite unconsciously he was giving the impression to the House that the provisions of the Bill were based on a unanimous Report of the Committee which was set up in 1930, and I thought it right that the House should know the facts. The major provisions of the Bill are based upon the majority recommendations of the Select Committee on Shop Assistants which reported in 1931. There were 11 members on that Committee, which was appointed by the Labour Government, and five of those members disagreed with the two main provisions of this Bill. They disagreed with the possibility of having a 48-hour week, and with the recommendation that overtime should be paid at not less than one-and-a-quarter times the normal rate of employment. I emphasise that one-and-a-quarter times; for in the Bill it says that the hours of employment shall be paid at a rate of not less than one-and-a-half times the normal rate of employment. Those are the two main provisions of the Bill, and it should be remembered by the House that these two main provisions were not the unanimous recommendation of the Committee, but were only agreed to by a small majority.

What does the Bill seek to perform? The normal hours of employment are to be cut down to 48 hours per week. Overtime can only be worked if specially sanctioned by the local authority, in certain cases by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, and overtime so sanctioned must be paid for at one-and-a-half times the ordinary normal rate. Local authorities are able to fix closing hours earlier than 7 o'clock. I suppose that Clause 8 of the Bill means that a local authority could compel shops to close at any hour during the afternoon. And this is what the hon. Member for St. Rollox (Mr Leonard) calls protection! That may be protection for some people, but it is certainly not protection for the general public. The hon. Member for St. Rollox said that this was a Bill that was giving protection, and that he could not understand why we on these benches, who believe in protection, should oppose the Bill. My retort to him is that I am a little confused that his party which believes in the form of protection that is given in the Bill should in its turn oppose the form of protection in which we believe.

We had a very interesting speech from the hon. Member for Wednesbury (Mr. Banfield). He justified the Bill by asking what was the good of setting up a Committee and not acting upon its recommendations? I reply that the Labour Government themselves did not appear to be very anxious even to set up the Committee, for they gave a promise to appoint the Committee in March, 1930, and the Committee was not set up until November of that year. In any event, I disagree with the hon. Member's suggestion that in every case we on this side, although there has been a change of Government, should adopt the recommendations made by a Committee set up by the Labour Government. We are certainly not prepared to do that.

The provisions of the Bill may or may not be desirable from the shop assistants' point of view, but it is our duty also to consider the public. In theory, the hours of employment of adult shop assistants are unlimited. The Mover of the Second Reading inferred, I think, that the hours under the Acts now on the Statute Book were, in fact, the hours that are being worked to-day. He referred to 74 hours per week which could be worked by young people. He must admit that there are only very exceptional cases in which such hours are being worked. Because we have on the Statute Book an Act which limits the hours to 74 for young people, we must not consider that of necessity that is the time that is being worked by these people. Of course, that is not so.

[Mr. Hacking.]

Mr. MORGAN JONES: The only reference I made to the 74 hours was in a statement that 74 hours is the only statutory limitation of the hours of juvenile workers. I did not imply that all juvenile workers worked 74 hours.

Mr. HACKING: I quite agree, and I wish the House to realise that there are only very exceptional cases, if any, in which such hours are being worked. My point is that whatever theory we may deduce from an Act does not really matter. We have to look at what is happening in practice. If a person is allowed to work for 74 hours and is working for only 48, that ought to give us satisfaction. The statistics furnished in the Select Committee's Report prove that the majority of adults in shops are working between 48 and 60 hours a week, which is an average of approximately 54 hours a week. I repeat that we must consider the general public. But in saying that, I do not desire the House to imagine that the Government have no sympathy with shop assistants. We have. Everyone must have sympathy with every worker who is working unduly long hours.

Many shop assistants, and I suppose most shop assistants, might claim this Bill to be a good thing, but, even if it is a good thing, there are many good things which have to be rejected, especially at the present time, on the ground of expense alone. Even if this Bill were desirable on other grounds, it might still have to be opposed by the Government because it would entail on the part of both local authorities and the national Exchequer expenditure which cannot be afforded to-day. How would that extra expenditure be entailed? The hon. Member for Central Leeds (Mr. Denman) attempted to make the case that there would be very little, if any, extra expenditure if the Bill passed. I do not agree. I think there would be very considerable additional expenditure. Think of the elaborate machinery of national and local advisory boards. The enforcement of the limitation of hours clearly presents far greater difficulties than the enforcement of the present closing hours. Think of the inspection and the checking of registers. Think of the verifying of the hours worked by the individual members of the staff who happen to be on duty at any time. A large staff will obviously be required in order to carry out all this work of inspection.

One complaint that we frequently receive at the Home Office to-day is that the inspection under the existing Acts is insufficient. We are told that there is a non-enforcement of the existing Acts. The closing of a shop can be checked very easily from outside without going into the shop, but the restriction of hours in hundreds and thousands of shops would surely require an elaborate system of inspection and records. Look at Clause 4 of the Bill. There we see the revocation or amendment of a local Order by the Secretary of State. Surely the inquiry in connection with that alone would mean a great deal of extra staff at the Home Office. Clauses 5 and 6, dealing with the appointment of, and the consideration of recommendations by, the National Advisory Board, would also entail a great deal of extra work. Then there is Clause 11, dealing with the enforcement of the Shops Acts by the Secretary of State, to say nothing of the appointment of a factory inspector, whose qualifications would certainly not be suitable for enforcing this Bill. All these things must impose considerable burdens on the Home Office, and if they bring more work to the Home Office, it is obvious that that work would have to be paid for.

These are some instances of the extra expenditure which would be entailed by passing the Bill. But apart from the expense, which alone would make it difficult for us to accept the Bill, is the Bill really desirable? Let us ask ourselves some pertinent questions. Let us attempt to be practical. Putting the Bill to a certain test, in the first place will this Bill have the effect of increasing employment? I submit that it has little prospect in that direction. On the contrary Clause 1, by limiting the hours of employment and by creating the overtime system, and Clause 8 by indicating the possibility of shorter hours of opening, do one of two things. They either add to the cost of running the business or restrict the volume of business, and it is clear that additional costs or restriction of sales will not add to employment. Invariably these factors, far from creating employment, cause additional unemployment. Therefore, employment will not be helped if the Bill passes.

Another question which we may ask is: Will the Bill have the effect of reducing retail prices? If it does none of these things, there is not much use in attempting to put in on the Statute Book. As to its effect on retail prices, when you add something to the cost of running any business—everything else remaining the same—the additional cost has to be paid for by increasing the prices of the commodities for sale. This Bill cannot, then, reduce retail prices. Will it increase the wages of the shop assistants? Here again the answer must be in the negative. The employers might well have to meet the situation created under the proposals of the Bill by the payment of overtime rates. That is the only alternative for them, if they cannot work extra shifts. That, obviously, means additional expense, and a possible way of meeting that extra expense would be to reduce the basic rate of wages of the existing staff. There is nothing in the Bill which would prevent an employer from reducing the ordinary normal level of wages in order to make ends meet, if that should be the only way for him to achieve his purpose. I think I may fairly claim that the Bill will, certainly, not help to increase wages.

I hope I have convinced the House that the Bill has four consequences. It will cost additional money; it will not increase employment; it will not reduce retail prices and it will not increase the wages of shop assistants. I submit that by this Bill we might well be damaging, not only the taxpayer but the ratepayer, without, at the same time, conferring much, if any, benefit on the shop assistant. There is another question which we might ask ourselves before deciding how to vote on this Bill. Why should we, by Act of Parliament, distinguish shop workers from other workers in respect of the 48-hour week? Frankly, I cannot answer that question. The general policy of the Opposition surely is a little inconsistent. I understand from speeches which I have heard in the House and in the country from Members of the Opposition that they support the policy of the 40-hour week with the object, as I take it and has been frequently stated, of increasing employment. Yet they propose in this Bill a 48-hour week plus overtime for the same workers and it is difficult to see how we can increase the number to be employed by employing the same people for longer hours. When I first read the Bill I was surprised that there was no provision in it for fixing the ordinary rates of pay. I do not say that if there had been such a provision in it, that it would make the Bill any more acceptable, but I was a little surprised nevertheless that hon. Members had not gone the whole hog in that respect. We are told in Clause 7 (2):

> "It shall be an implied term of every contract for the employment of a shop assistant that where overtime is worked the shop assistant shall be entitled to receive additional payment at the following rates:—
>
> (a) for the first quarter-of-an-hour . . . not less than the ordinary rate . . . ;
>
> (b) for any further period or periods not less than one-and-a-half times such ordinary rates;
>
> (c) for time worked on Sunday . . . or for any statutory holiday or any customary public holiday not less than double the rate paid for normal working time."

Again, I draw attention to the fact that there is no provision for fixing the ordinary rates. We are simply told that the overtime rate shall be 25 per cent. or 50 per cent. over the ordinary rate. The ordinary rate not being fixed, I suggest that it could easily be juggled with and manipulated so that the total wages paid to any shop assistant, working even 60 hours, need not be any higher than the total wages at present being received. In fact the Bill is so loosely drawn that the whole provision for reckoning rates of overtime might be valueless and unenforceable.

I think I have said enough to show that at least this Bill has some weaknesses. I should like to close however on a rather more hopeful note. There have been many requests from all sides of the House that the Government should give some consideration or reconsideration to the position of the young shop assistant under 18 years of age. There have been many expressions of sympathy with these young persons and the Government do not desire to take up a completely non possumus attitude towards this whole question. The hon. Member for Caerphilly expressed his sympathy with these young persons as also did the hon. and learned Member for Lowestoft (Sir G. Rentoul) and the hon. Member for North Hammersmith (Miss Pickford) who said she hoped the House would be as unanimous in support of these young people as had been the Select Committee. The hon. Member for Central Leeds also supported this appeal. That was one point on which there was agreement in the Select Committee. I think they were unanimous in recommending a statutory limitation of the hours of employment of young persons as shop assistants. At present the maximum of 74 hours, including meal-times, under the provisions of a very old Act is certainly not applicable to the conditions of to-day. This old Act gives inadequate protection for the young person, and undoubtedly, as I have said, requires reconsideration. As a matter of fact, I am glad to be able to tell the House—and probably the hon. Member who, I believe, will follow me knows this already—we are at this moment giving close consideration to this aspect of the case. Discussions with trade organisations are at present proceeding and have, I understand, been proceeding for some little time past. I can, of course, give no pledge to-day in respect of legislation regarding these young persons. I can only say that this side of the question, which is a very important one, is receiving the active and sympathetic consideration of the Government.

[Mr. Hacking.]

The House realises, from the criticism that I have attempted to make in connection with the Bill, that the Government are going to oppose its Second Reading. During the debate on the Second Reading of a private Member's Bill only a fortnight ago, the hon. Member for Westhoughton (Mr. Rhys Davies) was good enough to congratulate me on the appointment which I had then only held for a few days, and he used some extraordinary language in his congratulatory remarks. I should like to give his exact words. He said:

> "I wish, however, that he was a Minister in a very much more intelligent Government, but of course that is not his fault. I hope that with his entry into it the Government will be less stupid than they have been in the past."—[OFFICIAL REPORT, 3rd March, 1933; col. 718; Vol. 275.]

With the Government's decision to oppose this Bill, I hope the hon. Member will realise fully that the Government are less stupid than they have been in the past, than at any rate a Government was which was in existence two years ago. I trust that he has already seen that great improvement which he obviously desired to witness, and I hope he will agree—in fact, I am sure he will, if he thinks this matter over with great care—that the decision which the Government has reached in connection with this Bill is, far from being stupid, an intelligent and a wise decision, and in reality the only possible decision that any sensible Government could take under the circumstances of to-day.

3.7 p.m.

Mr. RHYS DAVIES: My first obvious duty is to congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Morgan Jones) for implementing his luck in the ballot by adopting the principles of this Measure, and I venture to convey to him, on behalf of at least 200,000 shop assistants, organised in two trade unions, their thanks for his daring and for the very good piece of work that he has done to-day in helping them, at any rate in their propaganda work.

I hardly expected any other reply from the Government than the one to which we have just listened. If 2,000,000 or even 200,000 farmers, came to this Government and asked for anything to be done for them, there would be no argument about cost, no argument about intricacies of machinery, no argument about 3,000 inspectors, just as there has been no argument about the increase in staff to deal with tariffs on grapes and other foreign commodities. All these difficulties would be set aside at once, but when 2,000,000 shop assistants, the most helpless section of the working class—and they are the most helpless, as I will be able to show later on—come to them, as they do not belong to the class that makes up the Government, they find the door slammed in their faces. That is exactly the position.

Let me deal with one or two of the arguments that the right hon. Gentleman has employed in replying to the discussion. He criticised the provision in the Bill dealing with earlier closing than seven o'clock. Surely he must be wrongly advised in the criticism that he made, because all that this Bill would do would be to provide exactly the same procedure for closing at six or earlier as is now employed for closing at seven. The right hon. Gentleman knows very well the procedure at the moment, that the shopkeepers themselves, in conjunction with the local authorities, determine very largely the hour of closing. His criticism was a little unfair on that score.

Mr. HACKING: I think that the public ought to have consideration in that matter.

Mr. DAVIES: I worked in a shop when the public used to come in at 11 o'clock on Saturday nights. When the War came the public did not matter, and the shops were closed at 7 or earlier irrespective of their wishes. Now shops are closed at 6, and some at 1 o'clock on Saturdays, irrespective of the desires of the public, because the shopkeepers want them closed and the local authorities have issued orders to that effect. If shop workers are to have their conditions of labour determined always by what the public want, shops would be opened every week day and every night and on Sundays as well. If they were kept open even on Sunday nights there would be some members of the public who would go in just to have a look round. We must not view the subject from that point of view.

I will give the House a typical example. When I worked in a shop, we closed at 11 on Saturdays, and there were six old ladies who always came in at three minutes to 11. When we closed at 10 o'clock, they came in at three minutes before closing time. When we closed at 9, at 8, at 7 and at 6 they always came in three minutes before we closed. Twenty-five years afterwards I went down to see the shop and I inquired what had happened to the six old ladies, and I was told that they had departed this life and had landed in Paradise just three minutes before closing time.

There are some members of the community who always go into shops late, and whatever the closing time there will always be somebody there when the door is about to be closed. From Sir Charles Dilke to Lord Brentford every Home Secretary has taken a kindly, almost paternal interest in shop assistants, and I will tell the right hon. Gentleman now why I said that shop assistants were the most helpless section of the community. There are more young people being used up in the distributive trades than in any other industry. There are more women and young persons employed in the distributive trades at any given time proportionately to the whole than in any other industry and they are helpless. There are cases where, if a shop assistant dares to join a trade union he will be dismissed, not because the employers are more callous than in any other industry, but because there is a greater familiarity between shop assistants and their employers than there is in the factories and mines. In factories and coalmines the workers often do not know who their employers are, but in the shops the employer generally takes an intimate personal interest in his business.

Mr. HACKING: Is the hon. Gentleman inferring that everybody is helpless who does not happen to be a member of a trade union?

Mr. DAVIES: Definitely yes; and if the right hon. Gentleman does not believe me, I ask him why lawyers and doctors have joined a trade union.

Mr. HACKING: I am not a member of a trade union, and I am not helpless.

Mr. DAVIES: Of course, the right hon. Gentleman has got money. A man without riches must join a trade union if he wants to protect his interests. The right hon. Member mentioned the exceptional cases in this Report. I was a member of the Select Committee, and we had a great deal of evidence on this point. Let me say something about the argument that we should not pass this Bill because the cases quoted by my hon. Friend are exceptional. Who is to prove that they are exceptional? In view of the ramifications of the distributive trades there is not a man in this land who could say that those cases are exceptional. Whether they are exceptional or not, I think it can be proved very definitely that the conditions of employment in the distributive trades are worsening with the depression that is upon us. Further, Sunday trading is increasing all over the land, and in view of that factor, something ought to be done to deal with conditions of employment in shops.

On the question of the possibility of the Bill increasing employment, I believe it is open to argument as to whether a reduction of hours does actually increase employment or not, but my personal view is that unless the hours of labour are decreased proportionately to the advance of science and rationalisation we shall soon reach the stage in this country when one half of the population will be at work and the other half will be standing idly by looking on. I thought, when the right hon. Gentleman was taunting us with not having included Washington Hours Convention in one Bill, that he understood more about the terms of that Convention. The hon. Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Remer) rather implied that the Convention covered shop assistants. It does not. It deals simply with the industrial working population, and does not apply to domestic trades, and shop assistants are included in the domestic trades.

Mr. REMER: Can the hon. Gentleman tell us where the industrial system ends and where the distributive system begins?

Mr. DAVIES: I am sure it is well understood that the industrial population does not include those employed in shops and offices, anyhow.

Mr. REMER: Is the hon. Gentleman aware that in many shops people are employed in making garments of many descriptions?

Mr. DAVIES: Yes, and if the hon. Member were more enlightened on the subject he would know that those are covered by the Washington Hours Convention. Everybody employed in a factory or in the manufacture or repairing of clothing in a shop is covered by the Washington Hours Convention, but shop assistants have always belonged to the domestic service class, and are not covered at all by the Convention.

Mr. HERBERT WILLIAMS: Why?

Mr. DAVIES: I am not here to answer that question. The right hon. Gentleman made another remark about wages. I have never seen the wages problem work out as he indicated. I think it can be proved on inquiry that it is where the number of hours are shortest in the distributive trades that the wages are highest. I think that is always the case, paradoxical though it may appear. Let me make this observation in passing. This Bill would hardly affect at all the best employers in the distributive trades. I pay my tribute to those enlightened shopkeepers who have improved their organisation, because organisation has more to do with the wages bill in the end than anything else. They have done a tremendous amount of work not only in easing conditions and reducing the hours of labour but in keeping up the standard of wages as well. I do not know whether I am giving any information to the hon. Gentleman, but those employers who work their staff the least number of hours a week also pay the best wages and provide the best conditions for their employés.

Every piece of legislation which has been enacted by Parliament has been passed in order to safeguard the good employer against the irritations and unfair competition of the bad employer. That is exactly what we are doing here. The strangest argument that has been used to-day has been that about the poverty of the distributive trade. I would remind them that, when we were dealing with the farmers, the distributive trade was then said to exploit the producer unnecessarily, and that too much profit from the common pool was going to the distributor. That is the argument that is used when the Government are dealing with something in favour of the farmer. If there is one industry in this land that can afford decent conditions of employment and a maximum of 48 hours a week, it is the distributive trade. I am not speaking of the small shopkeeper, but of the large employer.

Mr. H. WILLIAMS: Who will not be affected by this Bill.

Mr. DAVIES: I am not sure about that.

Mr. WILLIAMS: You have said it.

Mr. DAVIES: If they are good employers they will not, but some large employers may be bad employers. Let me give figures in regard to some of the biggest distributive firms in the land, and let us see what they do. Marks and Spencers in 1931 paid a 30 per cent. dividend; in 1930 they paid 20 per cent. Take Woolworths: their profit last year was nearly £4,500,000 and their dividend was 70 per cent. Surely there can be no argument about the poor distributive trade not being able to meet the provisions of this Bill.

Mr. HACKING: Has the hon. Member got the turnover of those firms?

Mr. DAVIES: Surely the dividend paid on capital should have no relation to the volume of trade. Moreover, I know of no means whereby you can find out the trade of those firms. You can find out their profits and their dividends, but I know of no means of finding out their trade returns. If they exposed their trading returns they might not get any more capital—or some of them. The right hon. Gentleman will perhaps understand that. Take Lewis & Co. in Liverpool. They are very large employers of labour too, and they are doing well. I repeat that I very much doubt if the best employers in the distributive trade would oppose the main provisions of this Bill.

Let me come to the point raised by the right hon. Gentleman about children and young persons. I have heard that argument before, and I expected it to be trotted out to-day from every quarter of the House. Hon. Members have said to-day "If the Bill was drafted on different lines, we would willingly support it." If we had drafted it on the lines that they now suggest, hon. Members would still have argued that the time is not opportune. For some Members of the Tory party there is no opportune time to do anything for the working-class. There will, however, be an opportune time for the working-class to say something on this issue at the next Election. That will be a very opportune time. I was rather astonished to hear the hon. and learned Member for Lowestoft challenging some of the decisions of the Select Committee. He will find that he himself voted for some of them. He may have had qualifications and reservations in his mind, but, when the Vote was taken, he supported them. I am a little astonished that to-day he rather denounced the whole of the Report. He indicated in his speech that the Recommendations of that Committee were not based upon the evidence; that is exactly what everybody says when he puts his own case forward against any recommendation.

I am very anxious that the House should consider two factors in the situation. There is only so much distributive trade to be done, whatever the hours of labour in shops. The hon. Member for South Croydon (Mr. H. Williams) is a little too clever in his interruptions. Perhaps he will be able to explain to the House, when I sit down, how he can extend the volume of trade in this country by keeping shops open every hour of the day and night, because that is his suggestion. I repeat that there is only so much trade to be done in this country, and it can be done as effectively within a 48-hour week as it can within an 84-hour week. In fact, it is just a very bad habit to shop late.

No one can stand up in this House and say that the problem with which we are dealing to-day is affected by foreign competition. I cannot see any lady going down Bond Street and, if she cannot find what she wants in a shop window there, flying over to Paris. She must do her shopping, in the main, here. The goods may be purchased abroad, but they are sold retail here, anyhow. Consequently, that argument will not apply. The hon. Gentleman who moved the Amendment made one observation that I could not understand. He said that you cannot put employés on and off at your will. Surely, he has not seen very much of industry in this country if he believes that to be the case. As a matter of fact, in most industries in this country employés are put on and off at the will of the employer. I have been in it myself, and know something about it, and I am sure that the hon. Gentleman is not correct about industry in general.

I trust that the House will at any rate give consideration to what was said by the right hon. Gentleman in the last few words of his speech. Whatever we may think about this Bill, and I very keenly support its principles, I would like to see a start made with a 48-hour week, not only for the sake of shop assistants, but because I dread to see the years coming when, as I already indicated, unless we reduce the hours of labour to conform with the march of science and the introduction of machinery, we shall not stop at 3,000,000 unemployed. I should like therefore, in this most easy industry, the industry that can afford it best, to see the hours reduced to a limit of 48. I rather liked what the right hon. Gentleman said about children and young persons, and I hope that the Home Office will tackle that problem very soon, because no hon. Member who has criticised this Report can fail to come to the conclusion that that issue brooks no delay at all. We shall probably be beaten in the Lobby to-day, but, if we have done nothing else except to focus attention on these vital issues, we shall be satisfied with what we have done.

[Mr. Davies.]

3.29 p.m.

Mr. H. WILLIAMS: It is always a privilege and pleasure to be permitted to follow the hon. Member for Westhoughton (Mr. Rhys Davies). First of all, he always says what he has to say so pleasantly, and, also, he always affords whoever follows him suitable opportunities for comment and criticism. The hon. Member said that there were 2,000,000 shop assistants. I think he slightly overstates the figure, but it is not too far away from that total. He referred to them as a very helpless class, for whom the Government will do nothing because they do not belong to that class. For once the hon. Member was really not playing up to the best of his form. I am quite satisfied that a very large proportion of that class of people are to be counted among those who normally support the parties of which the present Government is composed. A very large proportion of the people with whom I have been actively associated in politics have been drawn from the shop assistant class. He was contrasting them with an unspecified number of farmers whose demands, he said, would be conceded at once. If he was addressing an agricultural audience, I do not think he would get that impression. He spoke as if the public was some mysterious body of people to which none of the working-classes belong. "Working-classes" is an unfortunate phrase, but we know what it means. Does he separate the public from the working-classes? He was speaking as if this evil community, known as the public, which creates these conditions, had nothing to do with the class that he was seeking to protect.

He went on to say that shop assistants are very poorly organised, which means that not many of them are trade unionists, and that, if a shop assistant wants to join a trade union, he is dismissed. He drew a picture of tyranny which had not the slightest foundation in fact, and he knows it has no foundation in fact. The ordinary shop assistant does not want to join a trade union because he does not see why he should waste his money in that direction. He would rather go to the pictures. That does not mean that trade unionism is not a valuable institution when it does its job properly. Let us see what has happened in the last 10 years. The number of unorganised shop assistants insured against unemployment increased by 58 per cent. between July, 1923, and July, 1932. What happened in the same period to the most highly organised trade, the coal miners. Have they increased their number of insured workers? No. If you want to find a declining industry, take one that is highly organised. If you want to throw your people out of work, organise the industry, and you will organise it out of existence. It is true that those districts from which migration is taking place are precisely the districts which the party opposite dominates. If you want to find where the march of human beings is going, it is from Socialist to Tory constituencies, because they think there is a better chance of getting a job.

We were threatened by the hon. Members with what would happen at the next election if we have the courage to speak against the Bill. That was rather a dangerous thing for him to raise, because this is the Report of the Select Committee. Charles Buxton, William Hirst, Philip Oliver, James Stewart, and Arthur Taylor were among the majority. The only one whose name I cannot read, because it would be breaking the rules of the House, and whom I must describe as the hon. Member for Westhoughton, is the only survivor. Where are all the others who signed the Majority Report on which the Bill is founded? It is a little rash to suggest that that is the proper test. Then the hon. Gentleman says there is only so much trade to be done. That is a defeatist doctrine that exists far to much throughout the world. I believe there is no reasonable limit to the quantity of goods to be produced, distributed and bought. You have at this moment restriction of consumption and a corresponding restriction of production and an apparent glut, because of a variety of causes which have checked the normal flow of commodities, but I hope the hon. Gentleman is not going to preach to us the defeatist doctrine that there is this limitation. I am satisfied that there is no such limitation. You only have to walk from here to Trafalgar Square, and most people you meet would like to buy a new suit of clothes if they had the money. It is no use saying there is a surplus of commodities.

Mr. DAVIES: Whatever sum of money is available for purchase, it can still be spent within the 48-hour week.

Mr. WILLIAMS: If you increase the relative cost of distribution, you may check consumption. You can examine the index numbers of wholesale prices. There is a variety to choose from—the "Economist," the "Statist" and the Board of Trade index numbers. See what happened to them between the maximum level in May, 1920, and the present day. Then examine the index number of retail prices. It is true that they are not strictly comparable, because they do not entirely relate to the same things. Everybody knows that there has been a very much more rapid fall in wholesale prices than in retail prices, partly because—we have to realise it—personal payments, whether wages or salaries, are more sticky than commodity prices and do not respond. The additions to primary commodities in process of manufacture make the wholesale prices of manufactured articles less liable to fluctuation, and, when you get distributive charges, you have that enormous spread between wholesale and retail prices, which, in the opinion of a great many people, is the oustanding cause of unemployment in the world to-day. If it is true—and I believe that it is—are we going to make things better or worse if we do anything to increase the spread between wholesale and retail prices.

Everyone knows that though this Bill might be a suitable Bill for prosperous times, at this time it would increase the cost of retail distribution, increase relative prices, and therefore throw more people out of work. It is the kind of Bill which the Socialists invariably support when in opposition and take the utmost care that they shall not pass into law when they are in office. On the 21st March, 1930, there was in charge of business, not my right hon. Friend who is there now, but an old friend of mine, Mr. Alfred Short. We were very good friends. He beat me twice at Wednesbury. He explained that the enforcement of the Bill placed upon the local authorities would involve a heavy burden of responsibility. How the tone changes when the seats are changed! And then he said that he was instructed on behalf of the Government to say that they would set up a Committee, which is always the way out when in doubt. He said:

> "I am specifically instructed to say that this suggestion, which is made on behalf of the Government, is not a device for delay."—[Official Report, 21st March, 1930; col. 2381, Vol. 236.]

On the 15th April they announced that the form of inquiry was to be by Select Committee. On the 8th May they appointed the Select Committee, and then the Committee got to work, and the hon. Gentleman the Member for Westhoughton was a member of it. They worked with such enthusiasm that they had not finshed the job when the Session came to an end, and they had to report that they had not been able to finish it. They begged to be reappointed and that what they had done might be resubmitted to them. They went on and on, and with good fortune reported on 18th September, 1931, when the majority knew that there was not a chance of legislation being based on their Report. Not to be a device for delay! If I believed in a thing I should work for it as if I believed that it would go through.

Their attitude is very similar to their attitude to the Washington Hours Convention. Since 1919 every successive Government has either said, "We will not ratify," or alternatively, "We will" and have taken care not to do so. That Convention would cover some of the people provided for in this Bill, but it would exclude most of them. The Washington Hours Convention relates to industrial undertakings, and they are defined in Article I. At that time they thought that it might be desirable to control the hours of employment in the rigid way of the Washington Hours Convention in respect of those people, and there was apparently complete unanimity that to apply the same principle to the distributive workers was impossible. The party opposite never had the determination even to give effect to the Washington Hours Convention. When they were in office in 1924 they introduced a Bill, and that was the end of it. In 1929, within three days of their taking office, and the hon. Gentleman opposite for the first time, I think, assuming office, their representative at Geneva was instructed to make the public announcement at the International Labour Conference that they would ratify that Convention, taking into account the London conversations of 1926, which involved an Amendment of the Convention, which meant that they could not ratify it.

[Mr. Williams.]

That is the kind of method the party opposite adopt with regard to these things. They introduce these Measures, tell their people that the purpose is to liberate them from the tyranny of the capitalist, and then when they get into office and discover the real problem with which they are faced, they dodge the issue and use this and that device to explain why this thing for which they sought election is in fact impossible; it would place a heavy responsibility on the local authority, the Bill would need Amendment, it was necessary to have an inquiry, it was not to be a device for delay, and then 18 months pass between the time of announcing the committee and the committee reporting, and within a few days the House has been dissolved, so that there is no danger of any trouble. I happen to represent, I suppose, more shopkeepers and shop assistants than the hon. Member for Westhoughton. I daresay he has occasionally visited my constituency, which contains some of the finest suburban shops you can find in any part of London, and some of those shops, I believe, employ 700 or 800 workers. One would think that if there were this burning and blazing enthusiasm for the Bill, I should have received a large number of communications from them. I have received none. I have had three or four from people who do not like the Bill.

I have in my constituency a very large branch of the South Suburban Co-operative Society who have been given to passing Resolutions on every conceivable subject under the sun, such as the export of arms to Japan and China. On every kind of trouble throughout the world, I get communications from the South Suburban Co-operative Society. I hope they are satisfied with my replies, but I should not think they are. There has not been a single communication on this subject.

Mr. RHYS DAVIES: Surely all the co-operative employés of this country work 48 hours a week or less?

Mr. WILLIAMS: And it is also true that the vast bulk of the capitalist employés normally work, roughly speaking, the same hours of labour. We are considering by this Bill whether we are to put people in a strait jacket—not whether the normal conditions which exist to-day in general are not reasonably satisfactory. The position is whether you are going to pass into law a Bill which might make the conduct of business nearly impossible, and I am amazed that the South Suburban Co-operative Society, who communicate with me with such frequency on every conceivable subject under the sun, which has no relation to them as co-operators but only as normal citizens, did not send to me a communication at all on this matter when they do not happen to be employés but employers.

Mr. LEONARD: It may be desirable on their part to exercise a little economy and save time.

Mr. WILLIAMS: But if a society never fails to send me, as I think, rather stupid Resolutions on every kind of subject outside their normal purview, I am a little surprised that they abstained from sending me a communication on something which really relates to their daily business. The implication is that the co-operative movement as a whole does not find any particular enthusiasm for this Bill. I think it was both the Under-Secretary of State and the hon. Member for Harrow (Sir I. Salmon) who pointed out one of the consequences of the Bill. This is not a Bill to limit hours to 48, but a Bill to provide for overtime at certain rates, because, obviously, in the long run, what would happen would be that in nearly every case the local advisory council to be set up under this Bill would authorise overtime in accordance with the overtime rates laid down in the Bill. What is the position? In the long run, the rates of pay of people in every occupation are to some extent determined by the efficiency of the average, and not by the very good establishment or the very bad establishment.

Obviously, if you impose these restrictions, the average shop is going to be put in a slightly worsened condition. You are going to bring about a reduction of the basic rate and so, in the long run, you get people back to where they are to-day. If that is not achieved, you will increase that gap between retail and wholesale prices, and you will aggravate the situation. Excessive hours are very stupid. I do not believe in working them myself, although we all work stupidly long hours in this House. I have never tried to impose stupidly long hours upon anyone. In the long run, I believe, long hours can be avoided by the exercise of common sense. But there are times of emergency when it would be intolerable if the only way to meet them was by someone having to seek permission of someone else outside his own business. That has always seemed to me quite intolerable.

Although strictly speaking the Bill is outside the scope of the Washington Hours Convention, it gives a picture of the mentality of those who favour this kind of legislation. A person may want permission to do an act which is a reasonable act, but which would be unlawful for anybody to do unless he got permission. It is quite obvious that if you proceed with this kind of legislation you will deprive a great number of people of the employment which they at present enjoy. The hon. Member for Westhoughton (Mr. Rhys Davies), in a recent Debate, stated that in distributive trades, customers are more exacting in their demands than they were, and that there was a greater demand for service, spelled with a capital "S"; that, as a result, of this increase of service the whole cost of distribution in this country had increased to a very substantial extent. I believe he was right. I believe that what he said explains to some extent why there has been in the last nine years this increase of 58 per cent. in the number of persons insured against unemployment.

It is also true that at this moment the distributive trades are suffering from a degree of unemployment which for them is unusual. I have not yet got figures up to the end of February, but at the end of January, there were 1,750,000 persons, or thereabouts, employed in the distributive trades. There would be a certain number covered by this Bill, but there are others who would fall into the category of insured domestic servants. Of the 1,750,000 insured persons in the distributive trades, 13.4 per cent. were unemployed at the end of January. That compares with 23.1 per cent. of persons unemployed in the whole range of industry, including those in the distributive trades. The distributive trades have been much more fortunately placed than the bulk of the other trades of the country.

It is also true that the enormous growth which has taken place in recent years, certainly between 1923 and 1931, has undergone a change. That rapid expansion of employment has come to an end and now, for the first time, there is a substantial measure of unemployment amongst shop assistants. Hon. Members have no doubt received letters from shop assistants, who are finding themselves out of employment for the first time, asking them to find them a job. That is a new phase. At a time when this extension of employment has undergone a check it would be unwise to pass a Measure which inevitably must have the effect of increasing the cost of distribution, hamper the conditions under which distribution is carried on, and, as a consequence, create more unemployment in a trade which for the first time is suffering from unemployment. I join with those who oppose the Bill and if we proceed to a Division I hope it will be defeated by a solid majority.

3.52 p.m.

Sir WILFRID SUGDEN: I have had the privilege of listening to the whole of this Debate, and have heard the various view points which have been put forward in respect to the application of the Bill. We must admit that the status and conditions of life which obtain in respect of shop assistants are certainly not ideal, and I regret that the contribution of the Bill to their status and to their future is such, in my judgment, as will not lead to their betterment; and, what is most essential, will not lead to the betterment of trading in the future throughout this country. Only one hon. Member this afternoon has said anything about the future system of trading. It has been suggested that the co-operative movement requires a certain amount of close scrutiny; and a sense of depreciation and disparagement in certain circles is often unwarranted. I stand self confessed, and without any shame, as a co-operator. I have been associated with the movement for more than 20 years and I do not find it necessary to apologise for my association with it.

[Sir W. Sugden.]

It has been suggested that the co-operative movement may be the last word in supplying the public with what it requires, in a retail sense, but I join with the hon. and gallant Member for Harrow (Sir I. Salmon) in believing that what we have to face, in respect of the retail supply of goods, is the American system: I say, however, a conjoint system of the American and German system is the future of retail trading, and to my mind it spells the elimination of the human employé, in respect of the supply of goods which the public require and desire. The Bill puts certain definite proposals before us in respect of the old-time system of trade and of supply, and if this was a suitable time and opportunity I could in the course of three quarters of an hour, or an hour, show—and I think it would have been admirable and useful if this House had had a correct survey of the methods of trading which have obtained from the fourth century in this country. But I do not think the present moment is opportune. I, like other members of my party, am neither retrogressive nor decadent in my viewpoint for the future of the British shop assistant. No hon. Member has discussed to-day the future method of supplying the man in the street with that which he requires. No one has mentioned the position that is now being assumed by this conjoint, automatic American-German system, under which a customer puts 6d. in a box, pulls a handle, and receives what he wants. The American-German method means simply walking into one of the large emporiums, passing the turnstile and taking what one wants. Under this American-German system 16 assistants are being discharged for every one where these automatic machines installed. The spread of such a system will have the effect of eliminating from our shops those men and women who in the past have so splendidly served us. And for what? A turnstile, with a gentleman in uniform covered with braid, who will check the material from a catalogue, pass a check and then another receives the money as per the amount shown upon the check.

I know that the hon. Member who introduced this Bill has mental efficiency and a trained brain for dealing with these matters. I regret that to-day some insidious influence seems to have been placed upon him so that he did not present a Bill to the best advantage of his ideal. Returning to the issue of the co-operative movement in relation to this Bill. When I think of the great and splendid groups of working men and women who, with savings from their hard-earned wages, have set up the system of co-operative shopkeeping, I feel I would have preferred to have supported a Bill which would have introduced the co-operative movement in its more idealistic form, so that there might be an opportunity for those who are employed, an opportunity to supply the people——

Mr. MORGAN JONES rose in his place, and claimed to move, "That the Question be now put."

Mr. SPEAKER proceeded to put the Question, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question."

Major COLFOX: On a point of Order. Did I not understand that the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Morgan Jones) rose to move that the Question be now put?

Mr. SPEAKER: That is so, but I understood that the hon. Member for West Leyton (Sir W. Sugden) had finished his speech.

Sir W. SUGDEN rose——

Question put, "That the Question be now put."

The House divided: Ayes, 38; Noes, 119.

Division No. 86.] AYES. [4.0 p.m.

Adams, D. M. (Poplar, South)
Attlee, Clement Richard
Banfield, John William
Batey, Joseph
Brown, C. W. E. (Notts., Mansfield)
Cayzer, Sir Charles (Chester, City)
Cocks, Frederick Seymour
Cove, William G.
Daggar, George
Davies, David L. (Pontypridd)
Davies, Rhys John (Westhoughton)
Dobbie, William
Edwards, Charles
Evans, Capt. Ernest (Welsh Univ.)
George, Megan A. Lloyd (Anglesea)
Gillett, Sir George Masterman
Greenwood, Rt. Hon. Arthur
Grenfell, David Rees (Glamorgan)
Grundy, Thomas W.
Hall, F. (York, W.R., Normanton)
Hall, George H. (Merthyr Tydvil)
Hirst, George Henry
Jenkins, Sir William
Jones, J. J. (West Ham, Silvertown)

Jones, Morgan (Caerphilly)
Lansbury, Rt. Hon. George
Leonard, William
Lunn, William
McEntee, Valentine L.
Nicholson, Godfrey (Morpeth)
Parkinson, John Allen
Price, Gabriel
Thorne, William James
Tinker, John Joseph
Wallhead, Richard C.
Williams, David (Swansea, East)
Williams, Dr. John H. (Llanelly)
Williams, Thomas (York, Don Valley)

TELLERS FOR THE AYES.—Mr. G. Macdonald and Mr. Groves.

NOES.

Albery, Irving James
Applin, Lieut.-Col. Reginald V. K.
Atholl, Duchess of
Balfour, Capt. Harold (I. of Thanet)
Betterton, Rt. Hon. Sir Henry B.
Bossom, A. C.
Bracken, Brendan
Briscoe, Capt. Richard George
Brocklebank, C. E. R.
Brown, Brig.-Gen. H. C. (Berks., Newb'y)
Burghley, Lord
Cadogan, Hon. Edward
Campbell, Edward Taswell (Bromley)
Campbell, Vice-Admiral G. (Burnley)
Campbell-Johnston, Malcolm
Caporn, Arthur Cecil
Carver, Major William H.
Castlereagh, Viscount
Cautley, Sir Henry S.
Cazalet, Thelma (Islington, E.)
Clayton, Dr. George C.
Colfox, Major William Philip
Cooke, Douglas
Cooper, A. Duff
Craddock, Sir Reginald Henry
Davison, Sir William Henry
Duggan, Hubert John
Duncan, James A. L. (Kensington, N.)
Eastwood, John Francis
Emmott, Charles E. G. C.
Entwistle, Cyril Fullard
Erskine, Lord (Weston-super-Mare)
Fox, Sir Gifford
Fuller, Captain A. G.
Gluckstein, Louis Halle
Goff, Sir Park
Goodman, Colonel Albert W.
Grattan-Doyle, Sir Nicholas
Grimston, R. V.
Gritten, W. G. Howard
Guinness, Thomas L. E. B.
Hacking, Rt. Hon. Douglas H.
Hanbury, Cecil
Hannon, Patrick Joseph Henry
Headlam, Lieut.-Col. Cuthbert M.
Henderson, Sir Vivian L. (Chelmsf'd)
Hope, Capt. Hon. A. O. J. (Aston)
Hornby, Frank
Howitt, Dr. Alfred B.
Hudson, Capt. A. U. M. (Hackney, N.)
Hume, Sir George Hopwood
Hunter, Dr. Joseph (Dumfries)
Hurst, Sir Gerald B.
Joel, Dudley J. Barnato
Kerr, Lieut.-Col. Charles (Montrose)
Kirkpatrick, William M.
Lindsay, Noel Ker
Lister, Rt. Hon. Sir Philip Cunliffe-
Lockwood, John C. (Hackney, C.)
Lumley, Captain Lawrence R.
McCorquodale, M. S.
McKie, John Hamilton
Maitland, Adam
Margesson, Capt. Rt. Hon. H. D. R.
Marsden, Commander Arthur
Mayhew, Lieut.-Colonel John
Meller, Richard James
Mitchell, Harold P. (Br'tf'd & Chisw'k)
Moore, Lt.-Col. Thomas C. R. (Ayr)
Moreing, Adrian C.
Morrison, William Shepherd
Nall-Cain, Hon. Ronald
Nation, Brigadier-General J. J. H.
Nunn, William
O'Connor, Terence James
O'Donovan, Dr. William James
Ormsby-Gore, Rt. Hon. William G. A.
Penny, Sir George
Petherick, M.
Pickford, Hon. Mary Ada
Pownall, Sir Assheton
Ray, Sir William
Reid, David D. (County Down)
Reid, William Allan (Derby)
Rentoul, Sir Gervais S.
Rhys, Hon. Charles Arthur U.
Ross, Ronald D.
Runge, Norah Cecil
Russell, Alexander West (Tynemouth)
Salmon, Sir Isidore
Samuel, Sir Arthur Michael (F'nham)
Sandeman, Sir A. N. Stewart
Savery, Samuel Servington
Shaw, Helen B. (Lanark, Bothwell)
Slater, John
Smiles, Lieut.-Col. Sir Walter D.
Smith-Carington, Neville W.
Smithers, Waldron
Somerville, Annesley A. (Windsor)
Southby, Commander Archibald R. J.
Stanley, Lord (Lancaster, Fylde)
Stanley, Hon. O. F. G. (Westmorland)
Stuart, Hon. J. (Moray and Nairn)
Sugden, Sir Wilfrid Hart
Summersby, Charles H.
Tate, Mavis Constance
Thomson, Sir Frederick Charles
Todd, Capt. A. J. K. (B'wick-on-T.)
Wallace, Captain D. E. (Hornsey)
Ward, Lt.-Col. Sir A. L. (Hull)
Warrender, Sir Victor A. G.
Watt, Captain George Steven H.
Wedderburn, Henry James Scrymgeour-
Whiteside, Borras Noel H.
Williams, Herbert G. (Croydon, S.)
Wise, Alfred R.
Worthington, Dr. John V.
Young, Ernest J. (Middlesbrough, E.)

TELLERS FOR THE NOES.—Mr. Mitcheson and Mr. Remer.

It being after Four of the Clock, the Debate stood adjourned.

Debate to be resumed upon Monday next.

The remaining Orders were read, and postponed.

Whereupon MR. SPEAKER adjourned the House without Question put, pursuant to Standing Order No. 3.

Adjourned at Eight Minutes after Four o'Clock until Monday next, 20th March.

INDEX

TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

FIFTH SERIES—VOLUME 275

FOURTH VOLUME OF SESSION, 1932-33

27 FEBRUARY—17 MARCH

EXPLANATION OF ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS.

Bills: Read First, Second or Third Time = 1R, 2R, 3R. Amendt. = Amendment. Com. = Committee. Cons. = Consideration. Rep. = Report.

Where in the Index * is added with Reading of a Bill, or a Vote in Committee of Supply, it indicates that no Debate took place on that stage of the Bill, or on that Vote.

Subjects discussed in Committee of Supply are entered under their headings, and also under Members Names, without reference to the actual Vote before the Committee.

Aberavon division,
- number of unemployed persons having received training in residential centres, and number having secured jobs after, information to be supplied, 2113.

Acland, Sir Francis Dyke:
- Agricultural Marketing Bill, 2R, 1655-64.
- Benefices (Purchase of Rights of Patronage) Measure, 1933, Debate on Motion for presentation for Royal Assent, 1148-9.
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 240-1; 3R, 903-4.

Acland-Troyte, Lieut.-Colonel G. J.:
- Civil Service, clerical classes, suspension of recruitment from open competition until question of pay and status of new special class settled, and review of complements to afford promotion for existing members of new special class, 994.
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, 3R, 891.
- Meat import restrictions:
  - Effect on home producer, 988.
  - Evasion, prevention of, 987, 988.
- Telegraph and telephone poles, replacement of foreign poles by English made poles of steel or iron, 365, 366.

Acton Borough,
- Order for extension of section one of Sunday Entertainments Act to, approved, 345.

Adams, Mr. D. M.:
- India, trade commissionerships in Europe and elsewhere, question of further appointments, 785.

Adams, Mr. D. M.:—cont.
- Indians, repatriated from South Africa, total number during 1932, and question as to provision for under assisted emigration scheme, 785.
- Palestine, preferential tariff rates to, 829.
- Poor law, casual wards, London, number of men, women and children having passed through, November and December, 1932, and January, 1933, and corresponding periods for 1931-32, 550.
- Unemployment, ex-service men, posting of particulars of special campaign pension in all employment exchanges, 531.

Adams, Mr. S. V. T:
- Arms and munitions of war, export to China and Japan:
  - Embargo, approval of, 131-2, 134-5.
  - Extent, character and value of existing contracts, 1155.
  - Particulars of licences up to 27th February, 1933, and of applications made since, 1590.
- China and Japan:
  - Debate in Committee on Supply, 130-5.
  - Economic boycott of Japan, objections to, 133.
- Defence, Ministry of, advocated, 2224.
- Disarmament, naval, arguments for, 2220-3, 2225.
- Navy:
  - Battleships, reduction in size advocated, 2223.
  - Estimates, increase, criticism, 2224-5.
- Supply:
  - Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 130-5.
  - Navy Estimates, Sir Bolton Eyres Monsell's statement, 2220-5.

Addison Gardens Committee,
holding of National Savings Certificates, decision re, 810-1.

Administration of Justice (Scotland) Bill,
*Intro., 2149.

Admiralty:
Accountant-General's and Secretary's Departments, merging of, and saving from, 2162-3.
Board of, membership of Engineer-in-Chief of the Fleet, advocated, 2194.
Co-operation with Air Ministry, 2183-5, 2234-5.
Staff:
  Civilian, increase in proportion to active personnel, 2242-3.
  Increase in, since July, 1914, and decrease in personnel of Navy, 2182-3.
  Naval, excessive, 2192-3.
  Naval and Marine officers employed at, numbers on 1st January, 1914 and 1933, and numbers of personnel on same dates, 1951.
  Number compared with Navy personnel, Memorandum of Secretary of the Admiralty referred to, for justification, 2234.

Aerial warfare:
Allocation of civil areas, suggestion, 1832.
Civil machines, possibility of military use, 1831, 1832-3, 1850, 1856, 1869-70.
Possibilities of, 1827-8, 1847-8, 1880-1.
Possibilities of, and question of protection of civil population, 1820-4.

Aeroplanes, see Aircraft.

Afforestation,
percentage of trees planted by Commission that have lived, and over-all average cost per living tree, 183.

Afghanistan,
fresh trade negotiations with, by Government of India, no present intention of, 1589.

Agnew, Lieut.-Commander P. G.:
Benefices (Purchase of Rights of Patronage) Measure, 1933, Debate on Motion for presentation for Royal Assent, 1136.
India, Joint Select Committee, constitution, 996.
Royal Marines, numbers of officers and men in sea-going ships of Royal Navy and serving in shore establishments and barracks, 1952.

Agricultural Marketing Act, 1931:
Hops, estimated annual value of crop during last five years, 1603-4.
Schemes in operation, submitted, in course of preparation, etc., 1603.

Agricultural Marketing Bill:
*Intro., 823; 2R, 1623-1749.
Discussion facilities, 1353-6.

Agriculture:
Allotments for unemployed, and seed, etc., supplies, no funds available for operating sections 14 and 16 of Agricultural Land (Utilisation) Act, 1931, but grant made from Development Fund to Society of Friends, 2120.
Bankruptcies among farmers occupying 50 acres or more and less than 50 acres, during each of last five years, information not available, 162.
Barley, areas under, in 1914, 1930 and 1932, 26.
Crown lands, abatements of rents in 1931-32 and 1932-33, 989.
Eggs and poultry, value of production in 1931-32, 2137-8.
Horses, no reason to suppose supply likely to prove inadequate, 808.
Imports:
  Cattle, store:
    Canadian, position re, 1969-70.
    Decrease, during period July, 1932, to date as compared with previous corresponding period, 1969-70.
  Dairy produce:
    from Australia and New Zealand, previous reply referred to, 1617.
    Restrictions, previous reply referred to, 806.
  Eggs:
    from Australia and South Africa, marking of, and no special precautions against sale as fresh eggs necessary, 541-2.
    Marking of, 806-7.
  Oats:
    1932, shown as consigned from Germany, not of German origin, 161.
    from Argentina, negotiations in progress but details cannot be given, 160.
    Prohibition or control, no power of, 160-1.
  Potatoes:
    Duties on, position re, 564-5.
    Irish, sale governed by Wart Disease of Potatoes Order of 1923, and no reason to question efficacy of, but evidence to contrary would be considered, 808.
    temporary Prohibition, no power for, 807.
  Poultry, marking of, consideration by Standing Committee under Merchandise Marks Act, 807.
Irish store cattle, complaints received as to shortage in Northumberland, 1969-70.
Milch cattle, disease among, committee, progress, 539-40.
Pig industry schemes, negotiations re, and progress, 26.
Poultry, bacillary white diarrhoea.
  not Notifiable, and no figures available as to incidence, 540.
  Precautions against, 540.
Prices, no broadcast in respect of any Lincolnshire market, but any suggestion for, would be considered, 540-1.
Sugar-beet industry, see that title.

[cont.

griculture :—cont.
- Unemployment, position in certain counties, 200.
- Wheat:
  - Area under, 4th June, 1931 and in 1932, and estimate for present year, 1604-5.
  - Deficiency payments:
    - Advances:
      - Amount paid to date, and amount in Oxfordshire, 2138.
      - Amount of wheat on which payments made and to be made in December, 1932, and up to 28th February, 1180-2.
      - to Norfolk farmers, amount and amount of assignments, 808.
    - Amount of wheat for which applications for certificates refused on ground of not being of millable quality, 1182.
    - Date of next payment, and total amount paid to date, 365.
    - Essex, 1602-3.
  - Prices in local currency and in terms of gold at latest available date, in Great Britain, Belgium, France, Germany and Italy, 1782-4.
- Wheat, barley and oats, value of production in 1931-32, 2137-8.

griculture, Scotland :
- Credits, terms of loans under Act, not yet announced, but representations would be made to corporation re, 364, 365.
- Imports, oats, oatmeal and other oat products, question under consideration, 159-60.
- Land settlement:
  - Ayrshire, of unemployed men, position re, 159.
  - Harris, applications received for land in Borve deer forest, and negotiations proceeding re acquisition of forest, 1344-5.
- Oats:
  - German, prices in Germany and in Scotland and seriousness of situation appreciated, 364.
  - no Information possible as to prospects of statement of Government policy re, 364.
  - Measures for assistance of growers, statement issued to the Press referred to, 971.
  - Prices, Debate on Motion for Adjournment, 1307-14.
- married Shepherds and ploughmen, wages of, 1769-70.
- Smallholdings, Berwickshire and East Lothian, position re revision of rents, 970.

Air Estimates, 1933 :
- Sir Philip Sassoon's statement, 1795-896.
  - Amateur flying, Amendment (withdrawn), 1896-913.
- Com., 1915-39.
- Inadequacy of, as compared with estimates for Army and Navy, 1866-8.
- Reduction, 1795.
  - Criticism, 1866-7.

Air Force :
- Accountant Branch, commissions, age limits, 831.
- Amphibian aircraft, development advocated, 1830-1.
- Aviation petrol from British coal, price, contrary to practice to disclose, 1968.
- Bombing and machine gun practice, Lincolnshire coast:
  - Appeal for extension of restriction in holiday period, 1936.
  - Hardships to inhabitants, and proposals re, 1930-2.
  - Position re, and further concessions to be considered, 1936-7.
- Chief of the Air Staff, resignation of Sir John Salmond, 1799.
- Co-operation with the Army, 1894.
- more Co-operation with Army in peace time manoeuvres advocated, 1836.
- increased Expenditure on, as compared with Army and Navy advocated, 1872-3, 1877-81.
- Expenditure, decrease in, and increase in other countries, 1796.
- Flying boats, desirability of development, 1893.
- Flying training schools, closure of one, 1795.
- Gypsy I engines, sale of, 1938-9.
- Hampstead, Health Brow, buildings to be erected at:
  - another Design to be prepared for approval of London County Council and Borough Council, 1937-8.
  - Negotiations still in progress, 814.
  - Terms of town planning scheme should be observed, 1934-6.
- Harlescot Mechancial Transport Repair Depot, position re disposal and use of, 1932-4, 1937.
- Home Defence Force, strength of, and no provision for increase, 1795-6.
- Indian Wing, Risalpur to Gilgit flight, 1801.
- in Iraq, see under Iraq.
- Lighter for bulk storage of petrol at Mount Batten, provision of, and provision of storage tanks ashore, Report of Comptroller and Auditor-General, and statement re, before examination by Public Accounts Committee contrary to custom, 1958.
- Long distance flights, 1802, 1804-5.
- Manning system, changes in, 1798-9.
- Marine craft, 1813, 1892.
- Middle East air stations, tour by Secretary of State for Air, 1800.
- Number of Royal Air Force, Estimate, Com., 1915-30.
- Officers, possibility of living on pay, 1814, 1893.
- One-power standard advocated, 1868, 1872, 1873.
- Parachutes, types of, 1938, 1939.
- Pay, etc., Estimate, Resolution, 1929.
- Police and protective etc. work of, 1807-8.
- Promotion, position re, 1813-4, 1892-3.
- Recruiting, number of application forms completed, number of applications taken up and number of rejections, 1931 and 1932, 178.

[cont.

Air Force:—cont.
Reduction:
  Advocated, 1915-22, 1922-5, 1925-8.
  Proposals not agreed with, 1928.
Short service commission system, 1893-4.
Strength, comparison with other Powers, 1796.
Supplies, obtaining through agency of other Departments, 1767-8.
Taking over of certain work done by Army and Navy, suggestions, 1828-9, 1859.
Technical and Warlike Stores, Estimate, Com., 1938-9.
in Transjordan, see under Transjordan.
Transport of British infantry battalion by air from Egypt to Iraq, 1801-2.
Work during past year, review of, 1799-804.
Works and buildings, 1798, 1814.
Works, Buildings and Lands, Estimate, Com., 1930-8.

Aircraft:
Exports of, and parts:
  during 1932, value of, 1759.
  without Licence, permitted to all countries other than Abyssinia, 1156.
Factories, situation of, 1846.

Airships:
Cardington works, skeleton staff, and work of, 1805, 1893.
Question as to future policy re, 1814.

Aitchison, Rt. Hon. C. M., Lord Advocate,
Criminal prosecutions, Scotland, arrest and discharge of men turning King's evidence in case of Miss Catherine Hamilton Wilson Craig, 557.

Albany Street barracks:
Future of, question as to, 1401.
Taking over of buildings in neighbourhood of, to serve as married quarters, 1480-1.

Albery, Mr. I. J.:
Companies Act, 1929, Departmental Committee, Debate on Motion, 2106.
Entertainments duty, from cinema and part-cinema entertainments and from theatrical performances, receipts from, for last three years, 28.
Germany, situation in, 376-7.

Aliens:
Admission, no racial or religious discrimination, and each case considered on its merits, 1351-2.
Bankruptcies, during each of past 10 years, information not available, 1763.
in Beet-sugar factories:
  Condition of permits, 2143.
  Number, and number employed for more than six years, 2142-3.
  no Permits issued since July, 1929, 2143.
French citizens registered with police in Great Britain and in City and Metropolitan Police Districts, numbers, 1622.

Aliens:—cont.
Jews from Germany, no discrimination on grounds of religious belief or racial origin, but powers to protect country from any undesirable influx, 1351-2.

Allahabad, see under India.

Allen, Sir John Sandeman:
Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 241-2.
Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill, 2R, 1044-5.
World Economic Conference, Debate on Motion, 2042-5.

Allen, Mr. W.,
Stoke-on-Trent, road service licences, inspection of books of certain companies by Corporation before inquiry, 1005.

Alwar State, see under India.

Amery, Rt. Hon. L. C. M. S.:
Arms and munitions of war, exports to China and Japan, embargo, criticisms of policy, 79-84.
Aviation, International control, criticism of proposals, 1843-5.
China and Japan, Debate in Committee on Supply, 79-84, 93.
Disarmament, aerial, British Government proposals, criticism of, 1838-46.
Supply:
  Air Estimates, Sir Philip Sassoon's statement, 1838-46.
  Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 79-84, 93.
Wholesale prices, Debate on Motion, 1258-70, 1279, 1301.

Anglo-Persian Oil Company, dispute, position of, 799.

Animals, cruelty to, convictions, number of, 1930 and 1931, 536-7.

Anstruther-Gray, Mr. W. J.:
Housing, Scotland, State-aided houses, reservation as far as possible for working classes, local authorities having adopted schemes re, 1363.
Taximeter cabs, proposed increase in fares, 991.

Apsley, Lord:
Aerial warfare, commercial aircraft, potential bombers, 1832-3.
Air Force:
  more Co-operation with Army in peace time manoeuvres advocated, 1836.
  Short service commissions, question of, 1834-5.
Aviation:
  Aerodromes, round London, need for central aerodrome or speedy communications with outlying aerodromes, 1837-8.
  Control by Ministry of Transport and Communications, suggestion, 1836.
Defence Forces, training of officers, certain amalgamation, suggestion, 1835-6.
Defence, Ministry of, desirability of, 1836.

[cont.

psley, Lord:—cont.
- Disarmament, aerial, Government proposals, 1833-4.
- Meteorological Office, room for development and improvement, 1837.
- Post Office, provision for air mail letters weighing less than quarter-ounce, 23.
- Supply, Air Estimates, Sir Philip Sassoon's statement, 1832-8.

rgentina:
- adverse Balance of trade with, for 1932, amount due to interest payments on investments in, and for shipping and banking services, information not available, 1947.
- Commercial negotiations with, proceeding, 171.
- Exchange difficulties, negotiations proceeding with trade delegation but statement not possible at present, 171-2, 977.
- Linseed from, duty on, 977-8.
- Meat imports from, 1931 and 1932, percentage in jute wrappers manufactured in United Kingdom, information not available, 8.
- Oats imports from, negotiations in progress, but details cannot be given, 160.
- Railways:
  - British investors and debts due to railways by national and provincial authorities, intervention by British Government not proposed, 1594-5.
  - British owned:
    - Account current, negotiations regarding state of, proceeding in satisfactory manner, 791.
    - Purchase of greatest part of requirements in United Kingdom, 1791.
    - Safeguarding of interests, position re, 830.
- Trade delegation from, results, statement to be made in due course, 977.

rmistice day,
- poppy sales, banning of, in Barnsley and Hull, no power to interfere with, 538-9.

rms and munitions of war:
- Exports:
  - to All countries, excluding China and Japan, 1932 and January and February, 1933, required information to be supplied, 554-5.
  - to Bolivia and Paraguay, embargo on:
    - Memorandum to the League of Nations and consideration of question by, and position as to, 1155.
    - Suggestions made to League of Nations Council as to type of arms, and would no doubt be borne in mind if any indication of general agreement as to embargo on export to China and Japan, 1156-7.
  - to China and Japan:
    - existing Contracts:
      - Extent, character and value, information not available, 1155-6.

Arms and Munitions of War:—cont.
- Exports:—cont.
  - to China and Japan:—cont.
    - existing contracts:—cont.
      - Information as to period of, desired, 78-9.
      - Renewable clauses which could defeat aims of embargo, no knowledge of, 797.
    - Embargo on:
      - Action not taken by any other country, 1591.
      - Aircraft not included, 1156.
      - Approval of policy, 77-8, 93-4, 95, 100, 111-2, 119-20, 122-3, 131-2, 134-5, 135-6.
      - Approval of, but action should have been taken earlier, 146-7.
      - Approval of policy, and desire for international action, 69-71, 113-6.
      - British Government policy, 55-9, 67, 155-6.
      - Criticism of, 79-84, 108-10, 141-4.
      - Doubts in connection with, and embargo against Japan only preferable, 124-7.
      - no Indication of universal agreement with policy of, consequent position of Great Britain, and proposed discussion at Geneva, 794-5.
      - International agreement, nature of British Government efforts in connection with, 1949.
      - Question of, 62-6.
      - Removal of, as no prospect of similar action by any other country, 1592-4.
      - probable Results, 140-1.
    - Material in respect of which applications for licences made since 27th February, 1933, 1590-1.
    - Material covered by licences issued 1st to 27th February, 1933, 1590-1.
    - Survey of export licences which are still valid, being made, 367.
  - to Japan, embargo:
    - Advocated, 45-9, 108-10.
    - by International agreement hoped for, 147-8.
    - Question of, 46.
  - Licence system, not in force in any other country, 796.
  - to Peru and Colombia, embargo, no question of, owing to cessation of hostilities, 1155.
  - to South American states, embargo question, 114-5.
- Factories abroad owned by British firms, sale of arms and munitions to China and Japan, not included in control exercised by Great Britain, 797.

Army:
- Administration of justice, system and criticism, 1424.
- Arming of, 1402, 1421, 1439.
- Catterick Camp, see that title.
- Cavalry:
  - Household Cavalry regiments:
    - Cost of, 1351, 1397, 1418, 1435.
    - not for Show only, 1436.

[cont.

Army:—cont.
  Cavalry:—cont.
    Regiments, increase in number of troop horses desirable, 1405.
    Value of, 1404-5.
  Cerebro-spinal meningitis cases, and measures re, 1477, 1478-9.
  Changes of station, too frequent, 1399-400.
  Civil Superannuation, Compensation and Gratuities, Estimate, Com., 1482.
  Clothing:
    Full dress uniform, to be obtained from the trade in future, 1374.
    Pimlico Factory, closing of, 1374, 1392-3, 1414-6, 1434-5.
    Reform, suggestions, 1395-6.
    new Uniform, 1373-4, 1401, 1417, 1435.
  Departmental economies, 1375.
  Distiguished and Meritorious Service Fund, names of officers in receipt of grants from, publication of names:
    Advocated, 1423.
    Discontinuance in 1925 and restoration, not proposed, 1768.
  Economies, criticism of non-carrying out of suggestions, 1427.
  Educational service, value of, 1416.
  Estimates, 1933:
    Mr. Cooper's statement, 1367-474.
      Territorial Army, Amendment (withdrawn), 1439-72.
    Com., 1473-82.
    Increase:
      Criticism, 1379-86, 1413-4, 1417, 1450-2, 1455-63.
      Explanation, 1367-71.
      Further explanation desired, 1396.
  Field Marshals:
    Abolition of post, undesirability, 1377-8.
    Deaths among, and tributes to, 1377.
  Food supplies, fish, position re, and substitution of, for meat in standard ration not proposed, 351.
  Guns and carriages and gun ammunition, increase in estimate, 1382-3.
  Half-pay, Retired pay, and other non-effective charges, Estimate, Com., 1481.
  Horses:
    Remounts, purchases:
      1932, number and value of remounts purchased in Irish Free State, Northern Ireland, Scotland and England and Wales, 176-7.
      in England and Scotland, quality compared to Irish, 177.
      in England and Wales, policy re, previous reply referred to, 177.
    Supply in event of mobilisation, position re, 1399, 1438.
  Housing conditions, 1373.
  Infantry, question of protection against mechanised vehicles, 1421.
  Land forces, number of, Estimate, Com., 1473-9.
  Land purchase, 1383, 1408, 1433.
  Mechanical convoy experiment in North Africa, 1372.
  Mechanical transport subsidy, 1417, 1439.
  Mechanisation, 968, 1371-2, 1407, 1420, 1430, 1457-9.
    Demechanisation of one experimental mechanised brigade, 967-8.

Army:—cont.
  Medical service officers, shortage of, 1473-6, 1478.
  Men leaving, and entering Government civil employment, pension question, 1402-3.
  Miscellaneous Effective Services, Estimate, Com., 1481.
  Motor vehicles, cost of repair compared with outside concerns, 1393-4.
  Movements of troops, reduction of expenditure on, 1407, 1408, 1438.
  Officers:
    Half-pay system:
      Abolition not possible, 1437.
      Abolition or reduction advocated, 1409-11.
    Number not excessive, 1419.
    Promotion, criticism of working of, and need for improvement, 1411.
    Proportion to men, 1384-5, 1437.
    Restoration of titles of cornet and ensign, advocated, 1404.
    in Senior ranks, excessive number, 1409-10.
  Officers Training Corps:
    Strength of, 1st October, 1932, and in 1931, 1930 and 1929, 2156.
    Value of, 1369.
  Organisation, question as to suitability of Cardwell system and need for consideration, 1419-20.
  Pay, etc., Estimate, *Com., 1479.
  Pensions, age given on attestation as age for, alteration of rule not proposed, 175-6.
  Pensions and other Non-effective charges, Estimate, Com., 1481-2.
  Recruiting:
    Number of men served with notice papers and number rejected, 1930-31 and 1931-32, 177, 178.
    Position, 1371.
    Rejections, increase in number of, 1396.
  Reserve, reduction in strength and need for keeping up, 1418-9.
  Reserve pay:
    Basis of calculation, 968.
    Monthly payment not possible, 1767-8.
    Treatment of, in connection with means test, see under Unemployment benefit.
    Weekly payment instead of quarterly, impracticable, 569.
  Royal Artillery, promotion, 197.
  Royal Military Academy and Royal Military College, amalgamation:
    Advocated, 1387-9, 1400-1, 1404, 1409.
    Difficulties in connection with, but consideration to be given to, 1433.
  St. John's Wood Artillery Barracks, provision of married quarters, 1479-80.
  Scottish Command, paymaster, retirement of Colonel Watkins at own request, 25th January, 1933, 569.
  Special awards, officers drawing, reason for non-publication of names, 1438.
  Stationery, expenditure on, 1427.
  Strength, deficiency, 1407.
  Supplementary Reserve, officers, doubt as to adequacy of number, 1419.
  Technical appointments, scales of remuneration and conditions of appointment, 568-9.

[cont.

rmy:—cont.
- Training, restoration of full and normal training, 1371.
- Vocational training, 1402.
  - Centres:
    - Attendances and position re subsequent employment, 1374-5.
    - Decrease in number of men passing through, 1396.
- Warlike stores, increase in estimate, reason for, 1433.
- Works, Buildings and Lands, Estimate, Com., 1479-81.

rmy Council,
- composition, change in, and tribute to Lord Milne, 1376.

ske, Sir Robert W.,
- Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill, 2R, 1054-6.

ssam, see under India.

ssurance Companies (Winding up) Bill [Lords],
- Message from the Lords, 193; 1R*, 193; 2R*, 965.

stor, Viscountess:
- Army, recruiting, rejections for ill-health would be reduced by policy of open-air nursery schools, 178.
- Beer v. milk consumption, 180.
- Canada, deportations from, 186.
- Political Honours Scrutiny Committee, 179.

tholl, Duchess of:
- Coupon trading, departmental committee, terms of reference, 2135.
- India, Royal Engineers, number of officers and men trained in handling of railway locomotives in 1929, 1930, 1931 and 1932, 828.

Atkinson, Mr. C.:
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 258-60.
- Rural industries, Debate on Motion, 2090-1.

Attlee, Major C. R.:
- Agriculture:
  - Egg imports, marking of, 806.
  - Poultry imports, marking of, 807.
- Army:
  - Estimates, increase, criticism of, 1379-86.
  - Guns and carriages and gun ammunition, increase in estimate, 1382-3.
  - Land, purchase of, increase in estimate for, 1383.
  - Officers, proportion to men, 1384-5.
  - Reserve pay, basis of calculation, 968.
- Catterick camp, increase in estimate, and question of total cost, 1383-4.
- Defence, discussion of question as a whole, desired, 1385-6.
- Germany, British Indian subjects, Mr. Naidu and Mr. Nambian, arrest of, 1352.
- Municipal Corporations Audit Bill, 2R, 1561-3.

Attlee, Major C. R.:—cont.
- Singapore base, military expenditure, 1383.
- Supply, Army estimates, Mr. Cooper's statement, 1378-86, 1432, 1433.
- Territorial Army Camps, holding of, in 1933, criticism of, 1380-1.
- Unemployment benefit, transitional, means test, Army Reservists' pay, 968.
- War Office, staff, 1384-5.
- World Economic Conference, Debate on Motion, 2017.

Australia:
- Air service to, position re, 1806.
- British deportees, 1931 and 1932, 1002.
- Dairy produce imports from, position, previous reply referred to, 1617.
- Eggs from, marking of, 541-2.
- Felt hat hoods, import prohibition, report of Tariff Board under consideration by Australian Government, 25.

Austrian Loan Guarantee Bill,
- Message from the Lords, 1178.

Aviation:
- A.I.D. Inspection, relaxation suggested, 1860.
- Aerodromes and landing grounds:
  - increased Facilities advocated, 1897, 1903.
  - round London, need for central aerodrome or speedy communications with outlying aerodromes, 1837-8.
  - Municipal, acquisition of land and works in connection with, position re loans for, 20.
  - Particulars re, 355-6.
  - Provision for, in town and country planning bills suggested, 1862.
- Air Ministry control: 1895.
  - Committee to investigate question of, suggestion to be conveyed to Secretary of State for Air, 1912.
  - Relaxation advocated, 1860, 1883-8, 1903-6, 1908-9.
- Air reports from Heston aerodrome, continuance desired, 1875.
- Bomb-proof shelters, provision of, not a function of local authorities, and approval of loans for, would not be warranted at present time, 20.
- British machines, pushing of, by Consuls advocated, 1862.
- Cape to Cairo route, surveys of ground organisation, and publication not proposed, 378.
- Control by Ministry of Transport and Communications, suggestion, 1836.
- Development of air routes, need for increased expenditure, 1870-1.
- Development and encouragement advocated, 1896-902.
- Development of, and value of subsidy, 1874-5.
- England and Australian service, position re, 1806.
- Estimate, Resolution, 1939.
- Flying rights over other countries:
  - Italy, position re, 1891.
  - Permit system and position as regards Turkey, 1876.

[cont.

Aviation :—cont.
- Flying rights over other countries :—cont.
  - Reciprocal abolition of requirements of permits, etc., suggested, 1911.
- Freedom of the air over other countries, inclusion in commercial agreements advocated, 1862.
- complete Freedom of passage desirable, 1890-1.
- Fuel, supply of, to commercial machines without duty, reciprocity advocated, 1890.
- Ice on wings and fuselages, formation, 1892, 1896.
- Imperial Airways, Limited :
  - African service, 1888-9.
  - British staff in Egypt and elsewhere, rank and file, treatment of, 1866.
  - Subsidy to, and question as to control in connection with, 1865-6.
  - Tribute to, 1882-3.
- Importance of commercial aircraft if fighting aircraft seriously reduced, 1873.
- International air force under League, impracticability of, 1856-8, 1868-9.
- International control :
  - Advocated, 1851-5.
  - Criticism of proposals, 1843-5.
  - thorough Examination of practicability of, proposed, and attitude of British Government in connection with, 1607.
  - Impracticability of, 1858.
- International control and abolition of military and naval air forces :
  - Advocated, 1809-13, 1814-5, 1824-6.
  - Criticisms of proposals, 1848-9, 1869-70.
- Irish Free State, no direct communication, but establishment of service would be a matter for private enterprise, 356-7.
- Licensing, reconsideration of methods suggested, 1875-6.
- Light aeroplane clubs :
  - Encouragement of movement, measures re, 1911-2.
  - further Encouragement by extension of subsidy and freeing of private flying from certain restrictions advocated, 1903-6.
  - Growth of movement, and value of, 1902-3.
  - Information requested, 1814.
  - Subsidies, increase unjustified and unnecessary, 1906-10.
- Mail services, see under Post Office.
- Military psychology in connection with, and results, 1855.
- National Flying Services :
  - Clubs affiliated to, subsidy advocated, 1877.
  - non-Fulfilment of contract and question of future of clubs, 1898-9.
- Noise :
  - Importance of reducing and question of prospects, 1891-2.
  - Reduction, 1895-6.
- as Power for peace, 1859-60, 1861-2, 1910-1.
- Private owners, 1909-10.
- Progress during past year, 1805-7.
- Propaganda work, suggestion, 1864-5.

Aviation :—cont.
- Reserve of trained pilots, importance of, 1896, 1899-900, 1902.
- Route to Canada, advocated, 1830.
- Subsidies :
  - Comparison with other countries, 1889.
  - Limitation and final abolition advocated, 1862.
- University air squadrons, 1800-2.

Ayrshire :
- Coal, sales in Liverpool, 1771-2.
- Land settlement of unemployed men, position re, 159.

Bacon, see under Meat.

Baillie, Sir Adrian W. M.,
- Coal mining industry, Debate on Motion, 478-84.

Baldwin, Rt. Hon. S., Lord President of the Council and Lord Privy Seal:
- Argentine Railways, British investors and debts due to railways by national and provincial authorities, intervention by British Government not proposed, 1594-5.
- Arms and munitions, exports to China and Japan, embargo on :
  - Action not taken by any other country, 1591.
  - International agreement, nature of British Government efforts in connection with, 1949.
  - Removal of, as no prospect of similar action by any other country, 1592-4.
- Aviation, International control, thorough examination of practicability of, proposed, and attitude of British Government in connection with, 1607.
- Brazil, British investors in defaulted obligations of provincial and municipal authorities, negotiations re, position of investors, and directions to British Ambassador to be present not proposed, 1594.
- Budget, date, 2144.
- Business of the House, course of, 190, 1353-6, 2144-6.
- China :
  - British subjects, taxation of, 1946.
  - Hankow, business tax on foreigners, 1946.
  - London Purchasing Commission, no information of purchases by, of British aircraft, but action taken to bring merits to notice, 1598.
- Cinematograph Fund, receipts, previous reply referred to, 27.
- Czechoslovakia, Rumania and Yugoslavia, pact, no occasion for action by British Government, 1597.
- Defence of country from invasion, a matter of co-operation between three services and kept constantly under review, 1781.
- Distressed areas, position in, being closely watched, 1769.
- Dogs, inoculation treatment for distemper, publicity to, and availability of preparations used, 1607-8.
- Europe, promotion of peace in, position as to Debate, 2141.

[cont.

dwin, Rt. Hon. S.:—cont.
- ermany:
  - Actions alleged to be inconsistent with Treaty of Versailles, matters under consideration, 2141.
  - British Indian subjects, arrest of Mr. Naidu and Mr. Nambian and release of Mr. Naidu, 1352-3, 2155.
  - British subjects, safety of, previous replies referred to, 2155.
- ndia, future Constitution:
  - Setting up of Joint Select Committee, procedure, and opportunities for discussion, 1588.
  - White Paper, discussion, opportunity for, 1588.
- taly, Vatican:
  - British Minister, appointment of, 1366.
  - Relations with, 1366.
- apan, aircraft manufacture in, not affected by arms embargo, 1351.
- eague of Nations:
  - Commission on Polish Corridor problem, suggestion to set up, not to be made, 1944.
  - Disarmament Conference:
    - Air Force, British Government policy, 1606-7.
    - Questionnaire on private manufacture of arms:
      - British Government reply sent and circulated, publication not proposed, but copy would be placed in Library, 1948-9.
      - List of nations replying to, resumé of replies not possible in answer to question in the House, 1948.
- ocarno treaties, no consultations between British military, naval and air force staffs with view to putting into operation of, when necessary, 1964.
- Manchukuo, import duties on fruit, alteration of, but no evidence of discriminatory action in favour of Japanese, 2136.
- assports, visas, list of countries whose nationals not required to obtain, to enter Great Britain, 1943.
- olish Corridor problem, position, 1944.
- olitical Honours Scrutiny Committee:
  - Constitution, 179.
  - regular Consultation of, and date of last meeting, 179.
- ussia:
  - Lena Goldfields, Limited, history of case since arbitral award, present position and attitude of British Government, 1595-7.
  - Metropolitan Vickers Company, arrest of officials, and representations re, 1597, 1944-6.
- axation, excessive, Debate on Motion, 435-46.
- Unemployment, work schemes, electric lighting, water and sewage schemes, proposals dealt with by appropriate Government Departments, and consultation of business men not found necessary, 2119.
- Unemployment Insurance, Royal Commission, recommendations, under consideration, but date of introducing legislation cannot yet be stated, 1769.

Baldwin, Rt. Hon. S.:—cont.
- World Economic Conference:
  - British representatives and experts to be attached to, no statement possible at present, 1364.
  - previous Statements referred to, 2128.

Baldwin-Webb, Colonel J.:
- Rail and road transport, allocation of road costs to passenger vehicles, statement requested, 1325-6.
- Supply, Army Estimates, Mr. Cooper's statement, 1447-50.
- Territorial Army, encouragement and maintenance and increase of efficiency advocated, and suggested measures, 1447-50.

Balfour, Captain H. H.:
- Aviation:
  - Air Ministry control, relaxation advocated, 1903-6.
  - Government proposals as laid down in White Paper of November, 1932, question re, 1607.
  - Landing grounds, increased facilities advocated, 1903.
  - Light aeroplane clubs:
    - further Encouragement by extension of subsidy and freeing of private flying from certain restrictions advocated, 1903-6.
    - Growth of movement, and value of, 1902-3.
- Disarmament Conference, Air Force, assurance requested as to Government policy, 1606-7.
- Employment Exchanges, Managers, facilities for guidance and assistance of men, suggestion, 634.
- International Labour Office, 40-hour week proposals, approval of British Government attitude, 631-2.
- Iraq, Hinaidi Aerodrome, Bagdad, abandonment of, and question as to expenditure on, etc., 1957.
- Post Office telegraph poles, substitution of steel for wooden, saving in unemployment benefit, 366.
- Supply:
  - Air Estimates, Sir Philip Sassoon's statement, 1902-6.
  - Civil Estimates, Vote on Account, Rep., 630-4.
- Unemployment, Debate on Vote on Account, 630-4.
- Unemployment Insurance:
  - Seasonal workers, position re, and proposals, 632-4.
  - Substitution work, suggestion re, 632.

Banfield, Mr. J. W.:
- Agriculture, wheat deficiency payments, 365.
- Employment, total number of workpeople employed in 1920 and 1930, 2141-2.
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 221-4; Cons., 849-51.
- Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill, 2R, 1041-4.
- Motor drivers' hours, measures to enable operation of law re, 1959.

[cont.

Banfield, Mr. J. W.:—cont.
- National Health Insurance, unemployed persons, position of, in June and question of action re, 2119, 2120.
- Shops Acts (1912 to 1928) Amendment Bill, 2R, 2321-5, 2327.
- Trade unions, registered and unregistered, numbers and membership in 1920 and 1930, 2142.
- Unemployment, relief schemes, Black Country, land reclamation, suggestion, 367.

Bangalore, see under India.

Bank of England:
- Gold, recent purchases, 573.
- Gold held by Issue Department, weekly returns, 573.

Bankruptcies:
- of Aliens, during each of past 10 years, information not available, 1763.
- among Farmers occupying 50 acres or more and less than 50 acres, during each of last five years, information not available, 162.

Banks,
- Nationalisation, drawing up of schemes for, similar to that approved by landtag of Bavaria not proposed, 181.

Banks, Sir Reginald M.:
- Supply, Civil Estimates, Debate on Vote on Account, Rep., 684.
- Unemployment, Debate on Vote on Account, 684.
- Unemployment benefit, transitional, personal hearing of applicants, 684.

Barbados,
- cotton growing, measures re, 1173.

Barclay-Harvey, Mr. C. M.:
- Argentina, oats imports from, discussion of reduction, 160.
- British Industries Fair, notices advertising, in foreign countries, use of language of country in which exhibited suggested in future, 8.
- Germany, oat products exports, Government assistance, question of prohibition of import, 161-2.

Barley, see under Agriculture.

Barmen and barmaids,
- unemployment, separate statistics not available, 25.

Barnsley:
- Armistice Day, banning of poppy sales, no power to interfere, 538-9.
- Unemployment, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, no information as to number not registered, 527.

Barrie, Sir Charles C.,
- Municipal Corporations Audit Bill, 2R, 1514-15.

Batey, Mr. J.:
- Cinemas, action under Sunday Entertainments Act, 819.
- Coal mining industry, Debate on Motion, 451, 459.
- Durham:
  - Coal mines, overtime, 164, 165.
  - Colliery regulations, 1004-5.
  - Public assistance commissioners:
    - total Cost of, and of staff, and amount of money saved, 2108.
    - Disability and widows' pensions, treatment of, 2109.
    - Reduction of benefit where miners living in colliery houses and not paying rent, 2108.
    - Resolutions and letters from miners' lodges in Seaham division protesting against means test administered by, and action re, 1315, 1316.
  - Supplementary benefit, number of cases of reduction and of abolition up to latest available date, 2108, 2109.
- Easington Rural District Council, work schemes put forward by, question of sanctioning, 803.
- Horden, Durham:
  - Disabled ex-service men living in huts, and question of housing scheme, 998.
  - Wooden huts, notice to tenants to leave, and non-provision of other accommodation, 1962.
- Lincoln, percentage of inhabitants in receipt of public assistance, measure for dealing with situation, 1335.
- Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill, 2R, 1045-51, 1090, 2263-4.
- Sedgefield unemployment centre, contract for cupboards for Public Assistance Committee, competition with commercial firms, 1319.
- Sidcup Urban District, Sunday cinemas, Order rejected by the House, renewal question, 991, 992.
- Supply, Civil Estimates, Vote on Account, Rep., 593, 594-5.
- Unemployment:
  - Debate on Vote on Account, 593, 594-5.
  - Government schemes for alleviation of, issue of White Paper and information requested, 532, 802, 803.
  - Work schemes, Government policy, 2121.
- Unemployment benefit, transitional:
  - Adjustment of payment to recipient owing to drop in family income, retrospective payment from time of changed circumstances advocated, 1317.
  - Commissioners, granting of personal interview to aggrieved applicant, 524-5.
- Unemployment Insurance Bill, prospects, 2121.

Beaumont, Mr. M. W.:
- Germany, situation in, 376.
- House of Commons, proposed memorial to Sir John Eliot, 1174.
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 218, 224-5, 237, 263-4.

[cont.

eaumont, Mr. M. W.:—cont.
- Supply, Army Estimates, Mr. Cooper's statement, 1452-5, 1459.
- Territorial Army, encouragement and building up, advocated, and suggested measures, 1452-5, 1459.

eaumont, Hon. R. E. B. (Portsmouth Central):
- Navy:
  - Construction programme, approval, 2208.
  - Dockyards, reduction in number of workers, 2206.
  - Repair work and refitting, accumulation, 2207.
- Portsmouth dockyard, electrical fitters, discharges, 2207.
- Supply, Navy Estimates, Sir Bolton Eyres Monsell's statement, 2206-8.

ed coverings,
- imports, during each quarter of 1932, values, 9.

eer:
- Duty:
  - Budget statement not to be anticipated, 1781, 2131.
  - Reduction of, to enable price to be reduced by 2d. a pint, brewers bearing 25 per cent. of loss of revenue, suggestion noted, 1781-2.
  - Revenue derived from:
    - 1932, 696.
    - 1st April, 1932, to 31st January, 1933, and estimate for 1932-33, 180-1.
    - in nine months ended 31st December, 1930 and 1932, 551-2.
    - during 11 months ended February, 1932 and 1933, 1338, 2130-1.
- Imported, number of barrels in respect of which rebate granted in 1932, 695.
- Number of bulk barrels brewed during year ended 30th September, 1932, 695.

eit, Sir Alfred L.:
- Aviation:
  - Flying rights over other countries, Italy, position re, 1891.
  - complete Freedom of passage desirable, 1890-1.
  - Fuel, supply of, to commercial machines without duty, reciprocity advocated, 1890.
  - Imperial Airways, African service, 1888-9.
  - Mail services, Post Office attitude, 1889-90.
  - Subsidies, comparison with other countries, 1889.
- Supply, Air Estimates, Sir Philip Sassoon's statement, 1888-91.

elgian Settlement of 1839,
- treaties, and signatories, 793.

elgium,
- wheat prices, 1782-4.

elisha, Mr. L. Hore-, see Hore-Belisha, Mr. L.

Bembridge, Isle of Wight,
- coast erosion, 1611.

Benares, see under India.

Benefices (Purchase of Rights of Patronage) Measure, 1933,
- Motion for presentation for Royal Assent, 1129-54.

Bennett, Captain Sir Ernest N., Assistant Postmaster-General:
- British Broadcasting Corporation, annual report for 1932 submitted and to be presented to Parliament at early date, 382.
- Broadcasting:
  - Empire station, Daventry:
    - Contribution from Colonies, hoped for, in future, 993.
    - whole Cost at present being borne by British Broadcasting Corporation, and no information re, 993.
  - Receiving licences, remission of duty in case of wireless sets provided free for occupational centres not considered justified, 2121.
- House of Commons, telephone kiosks, reconstruction of 18 during Christmas Recess, and cost of, 1349.
- Post Office:
  - Stamp-cancelling machines, origin of, previous reply referred to, 366-7.
  - Telegraph poles:
    - Damage during recent blizzard:
      - main Cause of, 366.
      - Estimate of, not possible at present, 1168.
      - in South Wales, repair of, progress, 1168.
    - Wooden, replacement by steel, reasons against, 366.
  - Telephone trunk lines, proportion of, underground, and progress re substitution of underground for overhead lines, 992-3.

Bentley area, floods:
- Expenses incurred by urban district council and expenditure on public assistance, 1335.
- Legislation under consideration, 1336.
- no National funds available for assistance of tenants of houses, but needs being met locally, 1335-6.

Berar, see under India.

Bernays, Mr. R. H.:
- "Royal Ransom," racehorse, customs duty on, 186, 187, 1340.
- Shipbreaking, effect of duty on ships imported for, and proposed action re, 1767.

Berwickshire,
- smallholdings, revision of rents, position re, 970.

Betterton, Rt. Hon. Sir Henry B., Minister of Labour:
Aberavon division, number of unemployed persons having received training in residential centres, and number having secured jobs after, information to be supplied, 2113.
Aliens in beet-sugar factories:
  Condition of permits, 2143.
  Number, and number employed for more than six years, 2143.
  no Permits issued since July, 1929, 2143.
Barmen and barmaids, unemployment, separate statistics not available, 25.
Barnsley, unemployment, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, no information as to number not registered, 527.
Birmingham county borough, transitional payments, determinations by public assistance committee between 5th December, 1932, and 4th February, 1933, 522.
Bradford, unemployment, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, no information as to number of unemployed persons not registered, 525.
Breconshire, unemployment, 17th August, 1931, and 23rd January, 1933, 568.
Brixton, unemployment, statistics for men, boys, women and girls and classification of industries, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 529-30.
Carmarthenshire:
  Transitional payments, applications and determinations by public assistance committee, between 12th November, 1931, and 7th January, 1933, 524.
  Unemployment, 17th August, 1931, and 23rd January, 1933, 568.
Chester-le-Street, unemployment, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 528.
Darlington, unemployment, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, no information as to number not registered, 567.
Dewsbury, unemployment, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 518-9.
Distributive trades, insured persons and unemployment, statistics, 1929, 1930, 1931, 1932, 18.
Don Valley area, transitional payments, number of claims considered and number refused during last two months of 1932 and first two months of 1933, information will be supplied if obtainable, 2111.
Dorking, industrial analysis of persons recorded as unemployed at 20th February, 1933, 1618.
Durham, Public assistance commissioners:
  total Cost of, and staff, to 31st January, 1933, 2108.
  Determinations by, previous reply referred to, 2108-9.
  Disability pensions, treatment of, 2109.

Betterton, Rt. Hon. Sir Henry B.:—cont.
Durham, Public assistance commissioners:—cont.
  Meetings of, and officers, with accredited representatives of applicants, 1317.
  Protests received from miners' lodges, as to administration of transitional payments by, and previous statement referred to, as to action re, 1315-6.
  Reduction of benefit where miners living in colliery houses and not paying rent, previous reply referred to, a matter within discretion of commissioners, 2108.
  Saving from, 2108.
  Widows' pensions, treatment of, 2109.
Employment, statistics, 1921 and 1930, 2142.
Employment Exchanges:
  Green card procedure, 519-22.
  Work of, 588-90.
Ex-service men, special campaign pension, publicity to, through employment exchanges, under consideration, 532.
Fifeshire, unemployment benefit, expenditure on, 1931, and 1932, 698.
Flax and hemp trades, new rates of wages, statutory notice of proposal of Trade Board supplied, 2107.
Gateshead, unemployment, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 518-9.
Glamorganshire:
  Unemployment, 17th August, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 568.
  Women, unemployment, statistics and industry classifications, 23rd January, 1933, 531.
Glasgow, Courts of Referees, Chairmen, changes in, no reason known for, at present, 567.
Hop pickers, numbers employed in certain years, information not available, 26.
Hours of work:
  Reduction, consultation of various organisations re, 535-6.
  Washington Convention, ratification position, 535.
International Labour Office:
  40-hour week proposals, British Government attitude, 603-5.
  Night work for women Convention, position re, 199-200, 534.
Iron and steel and tinplate industries, numbers of insured female workers and percentages unemployed as compared with other industries, reference to Ministry of Labour Gazette, 2114.
Italian agreement, non-delivery of third million tons of coal under, effect on employment, 1322.
Jersey, potato picking, supply of workers for, 589.
Juveniles and young persons:
  Instruction centres and classes, particulars re, attendances, etc., 1361.
  whole Question under consideration, 2116.

[cont.

etterton, Rt. Hon. Sir Henry B.:—cont.
Juveniles and young persons:—cont.
  Unemployed, number of, 16 and 17 years, never having had employment since reaching insurable age, information not available but sample case might be obtained, 2115.
  Unemployment, 566, 1320-1, 1361.
Mercantile marine, unemployment:
  at 23rd January, 1933, and 25th July, 1932, 2116.
  Matter constantly under review, 2117.
Midlothian, expenditure on unemployment benefit, 1931 and 1932, 698.
Monmouthshire, unemployment, 17th August, 1931, and 23rd August, 1933, 568.
National Council of Social Service, grant to, 593-4.
Neath, numbers wholly unemployed, temporarily stopped and in casual employment, in February, 1929, 1930, 1931, 1932, 1933, 2158.
Newcastle-on-Tyne, unemployment, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 518-9.
Northumberland, residential instructional centre to be established on Kielder Estate, 1319-20.
Old age pensions, number of persons in receipt of, continuing to work, previous reply referred to, 566.
Pontardawe, numbers wholly unemployed and temporarily stopped, February, 1929, 1930, 1931, 1932 and 1933, 2158.
Port Talbot, juveniles, unemployment, 23rd January, 1933, 531.
Redhill, industrial analysis of persons recorded as unemployed at 20th February, 1933, 1618.
Road workers, position re unemployment benefit for compulsory unemployment owing to bad weather, 1320.
Romford Employment Exchange, finding of employment for Irishmen, 526-7.
Rother Valley area, transitional payments, number of claims considered during last two months of 1932 and first two months of 1933, information to be supplied if obtainable, 2111.
Rotherham, transitional payments:
  Administration by public assistance committee, examples of, 608-10.
  Public Assistance Commissioner:
    Appointment of, reasons for and particulars of administration, 608-11.
    Name, 518.
    Salary, previous reply referred to, 518.
Sedgefield unemployment centre, contract for cupboards for public assistance committee, further inquiries being made, 1319.
South Wales:
  Coal mining industry, unemployment, 530, 699.
  Mining, iron and steel and tinplate etc. industries, insured persons, employment and unemployment in certain years, 698, 1324, 1620.
  Unemployment, average numbers in 1921 and 1932, 1323.

Betterton, Rt. Hon. Sir Henry B.:—cont.
Supply:
  Civil Estimates, Vote on Account, Rep., 588-95, 600, 602, 603-12, 659, 675.
  Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 75.
Swansea, unemployment, 13th January, 1930, 12th January, 1931, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 568.
Trade Unions:
  total Membership at end of 1920 and at end of 1930, 1605-6.
  Registered and unregistered, numbers and membership, 1920 and 1930, 2142.
Unemployment:
  Debate on Vote on Account, 588-95, 600, 602, 603-12, 659, 675.
  Estimate of, on which estimate of cost of Ministry for 1933-34 based, 526.
  Instructional centre, cost of training at, and proportions of trainees finding employment on leaving, 2114.
  Number of persons having ceased to register as result of recent legislative changes, previous reply referred to, 566.
  Reduction of registered employed owing to legislative and administrative changes, previous reply referred to, 1321.
  State-assisted schemes:
    Average number of persons directly employed on, over period October, 1931, to January, 1933, and number directly employed at end of January, 1933, 2113.
    total Value of, at end of January, 1933, not readily available, 2113.
  Statistics:
    Comparison of various periods, and decrease anticipated for February, 611-2.
    Wholly unemployed and temporarily stopped, numbers 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 532.
  Training centres:
    Instructors, conditions of service, 567.
    Refusal to attend, provision in Act for refusal of benefit, but little made use of, 591-2.
  Training and instructional centres, review of work of, 590-8.
  Voluntary provision of occupation for unemployed persons, 592-4.
  Women, training of, 592.
  Work schemes:
    Government policy, statement in Debate referred to, 2121.
    Use of unemployment pay as subsidy to wages, danger of, but whole matter being again examined, 1619-20, 2107-8.
Unemployment benefit:
  Anomalies Act, no changes recently made in working of, and not the function of Advisory Committee to make requests for, 566-7.

[cont.

Betterton, Rt. Hon. Sir Henry B.:—cont.
- Unemployment benefit:—cont.
  - Married women in receipt of, whose husbands working, statistics not available, 566.
  - Persons of ages 18 to 20, number having had applications authorised for transitional payments, at 20th February, 1933, 2112.
  - Public Assistance Commissioners:
    - Payments out of moneys provided by Parliament in respect of remuneration and expenses of, 517-8.
    - Personal interviews with, right of applicants, 524-5, 525.
  - Seasonal workers refused benefit under Anomalies Act, provision to allow benefit to, suggestion not possible, 566.
  - Transitional payments:
    - Amount included in Estimates for 1932-33 in respect of, and reference to previous reply for cost of, from 30th June, 1933, to 31st March, 1934, 25.
    - Applicants for, number at 23rd January, 1933, and 25th January, 1932, 379.
    - Determinations, retrospective effect, provision for, 1317.
    - Disabled men receiving, no separate statistics of, 2110.
    - Heads of families having had payment reduced on account of wages of children, information not available, 2111.
    - Needs test:
      - Allowances for payment of premiums on endowment policies, a matter for authority concerned, 2110.
      - Army reserve pay, previous reply referred to, 1316.
      - Ex-service men, allowances for dependents, 532.
      - Family income, system, 607, 1318.
    - Persons of ages 18 to 20 having had payment reduced on account of family income, information not available, 2111.
    - Recipients, number 23rd January, 1933, 568.
    - Unofficial estimates of sum necessary to provide for hypothetical standards of living, but no value in connection with, 2112.
- Unemployment benefit, Scotland, expenditure in counties of Dumbarton, Renfrew and Lanark, in 1931 and 1932, 1794.
- Unemployment Insurance, Royal Commission, legislation for carrying out recommendations of, prospects, previous reply referred to, 2121.
- Wages and salaries:
  - actual Amounts paid in 1924 and 1932, information not available, 199.
  - average Level in 1932 compared with 1924, 199.

Betterton, Rt. Hon. Sir Henry B.:—cont.
- Wales:
  - Insured persons under 21, numbers unemployed, at 20th February, 1933, percentage unemployed and numbers with applications authorised for transitional payments, 2116.
  - State assisted work schemes, expenditure on, for each of last five years, and number of people directly employed, inquiries being made, 2113.
  - Training camps, establishment under similar conditions as on Kielder estate under consideration, 2117.
  - Transfers from, since 1921, statistics not available. 1323.
  - Transitional benefit:
    - Difference between money value of determinations of claims for, from November, 1931, to latest available date, and amount which would have been paid at ordinary rate of benefit, possibility of supply of information to be considered, 1323.
    - Number of applications and determinations by public assistance authorities between 12th November, 1931, and 7th January, 1933, 523-4.
  - Unemployment:
    - Increase in number of wholly unemployed persons from January, 1932, to January, 1933, principally due to reduction of employment in coal mining industry, 1322.
    - in Iron and steel, tinplate, engineering and coal-mining industries, required information being obtained, 530.
    - Numbers of wholly unemployed and temporarily stopped, 25th January, 1932 and 1933, 530-1.
- West Ham, unemployment, numbers on registers of Canning Town and Stratford Exchanges, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 19.
- West Lothian, expenditure in unemployment benefit, 1931 and 1932, 698.
- West Riding, transitional payments:
  - Assessment of gross or nett earnings of family, a matter for authority concerned, and basis under review by, 2111.
  - Means test, administration of, 605-8.
- Wigan:
  - Transitional payments, determinations by public assistance committee between 25th January, 1932, and 4th February, 1933, 522.
  - Unemployment, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 529.
- Woollen and worsted industry:
  - Insured persons in, decrease in number in June, 1923, to June, 1932, 1321.
  - Numbers of insured persons and of unemployed, 25th June, 1923, 22nd June, 1931, and 27th June, 1932, 520.
  - Unemployment, decrease in, 1321-2.

[cont.

Betterton, Rt. Hon. Sir Henry B.:—cont.
Woolwich, unemployment, statistics for men, boys, women and girls, and classification of industries, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 528.

Bevan, Mr. A.:
Agricultural Marketing Bill, 2R, 1670-80, 1683.
Dartmouth College, fees, scales of, and numbers being educated at various scales, 1950-1.
French citizens domiciled in Great Britain and in London, numbers, 1622.
Navy:
- Commissioned rank, number of seamen and engine-room ratings taking higher educational test for, in October, 1932, under new regulations, and number passing, 1955.
- Promotion, lower deck, training, 1955-6.

Supply, Civil Estimates, Vote on Account, Rep., 591, 596, 602, 603, 609, 664-5.
Taxation, excessive, Debate on Motion, 410, 413.
Unemployment:
- Debate on Vote on Account, 591, 596, 602, 603, 609, 664-5.
- State-assisted schemes, number of persons directly engaged on, and cost involved, 2112-3.

Unemployment benefit, transitional:
- Heads of families having had payment reduced on account of wages earned by children, number, 2111.
- Number of persons of ages 18 to 20 having had payment reduced on account of family income, 2111.

World Economic Conference, Debate on Motion, 2013, 2018.

Birds, wild, in cages,
convictions for cruelty to, information not available, 536.

Birmingham:
Highbury hospital, closure, 1599.
Transitional payments, determinations by public assistance committee between 5th December, 1932, and 4th February, 1933, 522.

Black country,
land reclamation schemes, loans for, Government policy re, 367.

Blaker, Sir Reginald:
Assessment committees, hardship caused by high costs of appeal from, 547.
Supply, Army Estimates, Mr. Cooper's statement, 1463-6.
Territorial Army:
- Encouragement and maintenance advocated, and suggested measures, 1463-6.
- forthcoming Review, 1466.

Blanefield, Stirlingshire:
Basement houses, no information regarding, but inquiries being made, 558.
Housing, requests for public inquiry, 558.

Blind Voters Bill,
2R*, 693-4.

Bolivia:
Arms export to, see under Arms and munitions of war.
and Paraguay, dispute, position in, 10-11.

Bolton, scheme under Union of Benefices Measure, position re, 817-8, 818.

Boothby, Mr. R. J. G.:
Agriculture:
- Imports, oats, prohibition or control, 161, 162.
- Scotland:
  - Credits, rate of interest charged by corporation, 364, 365.
  - Oats:
    - Prices, Debate on Motion for Adjournment, 1307-10.
    - Statement of policy re, prospects, 364.

Army, fish supplies, 351.
Edinburgh, official residence for Secretary of State for Scotland, provision question, 361.
Germany:
- Oats and oat products exports, Government assistance, 161.
- Oats, wholesale price in Germany during 1932 and in England and question of action re, 364.
- Situation in, and position as to security of British lives and property, 375, 376.

Housing (Rural Workers) Act, 1926, Scotland, encouragement of larger use of, 15.
Oats, oatmeal, etc., imports, Scotland, 160.
World Economic Conference, Debate on Motion, 2005-15.

Boots and shoes, rubber:
Import duty on, action re, 980.
Imports from Japan, 1931 and 1932, 979-80.

Borstal Institutions, promotion system, previous reply referred to, 2143.

Borve deer forest, see under Harris.

Boulton, Mr. W. W.,
taxation, excessive, Motion, 383-91, 430.

Bower, Lieut.-Commander R. T.,
Civil Service, ex-service "P" class clerks in tax inspectorate, withholding from promotion to established class, 995.

Boyce, Mr. H. L.,
motor lorries, accidents, case of, where driver having worked excessive hours, and measures re, 2123.

Boyd, Mr. A. T. Lennox-, see Lennox-Boyd, Mr. A T

Brabazon, Lieut.-Colonel J. T. C. Moore-, see Moore-Brabazon, Lieut.-Colonel J. T. C.

Bracken, Mr. B.:
Coroners, appointment of Departmental Committee to review powers and functions of, suggestion, 574.
Income tax, companies' reserves, 201.
Unemployment insurance, uninsured classes, provision for, 17.

Bradford,
unemployment, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, no information as to number of unemployed persons not registered, 525.

Braithwaite, Mr. J. G.:
Doncaster Area Drainage Bill, Com., 958-9, 960.
Municipal Corporations Audit Bill, 2R, 1532.

Brass, Captain Sir William:
Arms and munitions of war, exports to China and Japan, embargo, 795.
Cotton industry, recent dispute, refusal of unemployment benefit to workers unable to work owing to closing of mills as result of intimidation, 617-8.
Great Harwood, Lancashire, unemployment, September, 1931, and at latest available date, 804.
International Labour Office, Hours of Work resolutions, 816.
Lancashire, transitional payments, administration, 614-7.
Motor coaches, long-distance, average number entering and leaving Metropolis from distance exceeding 30 miles daily, 538.
Motor drivers' licences, knowledge of code of the road as condition of, 820, 1326, 1327.
Poor law and transitional benefit, abolition of dual control and administration of both by Ministry of Labour advocated, 615-6.
Post Office telephone service, automatic dialling, inefficiency, 813.
Roads, pedestrians' paths across London streets, marking of, by metal studs, 1326.
Supply:
  Civil Estimates, Vote on Account, Rep., 614-8, 689.
  Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 47.
Taximeter-cabs, numbers licensed to ply for hire in London over 20 years old and over 10 years and under 20 years old, 537.
Unemployment, Debate on Vote on Account, 614-8, 689.
Unemployment benefit, transitional, lack of uniformity in rates, 614-7.

Brazil:
British investors:
  in Defaulted obligations of provincial and municipal authorities, negotiations re, 1172, 1594.

Brazil:—cont.
British investors:—cont.
  in Leopoldina Railroad Company and Leopoldina Railroad Terminal Company, position, 1172, 1173.

Breconshire,
unemployment, 17th August, 1931, and 23rd January, 1933, 568.

Brewing,
hops used in, quantities in years ending 30th September, 1914, 1930 and 1932, particulars for British hops not available, 201-2.

Brewing industry, profits, reduction, 2131.

British Broadcasting Corporation, see under Broadcasting.

British Industries Fair:
Advertisements and posters abroad, language of, 8.
Clocks and watches, regulations re extent of foreign manufacture, and position to be reviewed, 1764-5.
Entrance fee, no harm believed to have been done by charge of, and Fair made self-supporting, 790.
alleged Foreign exhibits, 1764-5.
alleged Paper specimen exhibited at, advertising American product, explanation, 1765.
Results and statistics of attendances and comparison with previous year as far as possible, 194-5, 788-90.

British Museum,
Entomological Department, staffing of, 181-2.

Brixton,
unemployment, statistics for men, boys, women and girls and classification of industries, 25th January, 1932 and 23rd January, 1933, 527-30.

Broadbent, Colonel J.,
Municipal Corporations Audit Bill, 2R, 1539-40.

Broadcasting:
British Broadcasting Corporation:
  Accounts, examination of, 1609-10.
  Annual report for 1932 submitted and to be presented to Parliament at early date, 381-2.
  Contribution by, in respect of coming financial year, 1774.
Empire station:
  Contribution from Colonies, hoped for, in future, 993.
  whole Cost at present being borne by British Broadcasting Corporation, and no information re, 993.
Receiving licences:
  Number issued during 1932, number of prosecutions for use of unlicensed sets and total amount of fines and costs, 811.

[cont.

roadcasting :—cont.
- Receiving licences :—cont.
  - Remission of duty in case of wireless sets provided free for occupational centres not considered justified, 2120-1.

rocklebank, Mr. C. E. R. :
- Liverpool :
  - Hospitals, accommodation, 802.
  - Mental cases, under Ministry of Pensions, policy as to treatment of, 800.

rown, Mr. A. E., Parliamentary Secretary, Mines Deparment :
- Aldwarke Colliery, Rotherham, accident, 1610.
- Argentina, meat imports from, 1931 and 1932. percentage in jute wrappers manufactured in United Kingdom, information not available, 8.
- Ayrshire coal, sales in Liverpool, 1771-2.
- British Industries Fair, advertisements and posters abroad, language of, 8.
- Coal mining industry :
  - Debate on Motion, 464, 471, 494-506.
  - Hours of work, proceedings against one colliery in 1932 for breaches of law re, and conviction, 1770.
  - Low-temperature carbonisation, position re scheme, 168.
  - Overtime :
    - Breaches of the law re, inquiries would be made on receipt of definite facts, 1770-1.
    - Details of individual undertakings to be made public, 1349.
    - Investigation of cases of, but any particular cases would be looked into, 163-4, 1349-50.
    - Legitimate, 163.
  - Pithead baths, particulars, 162-3.
  - Quotas and output for each district in certain periods, information to be supplied and copies placed in Library, 169.
  - Ringrose alarms, trials, reports :
    - Availability of, question cannot be answered at present, 973-4.
    - Prospects of, 973-4.
  - Wages :
    - Difficulties not anticipated in July, 166.
    - National agreement, Government policy, 167.
- Don Valley floods, working days lost in Wath Main and Bentley collieries, during 1931 and 1932, and total loss of wages incurred, information cannot be given without permission of owners, but permission would be applied for, if desired, 1169.
- Durham, coal mines :
  - Overtime, required particulars not available, but cases of alleged illegal overtime would be inquired into, on receipt of particulars, 164.
  - Royalty owners, names of, and respective amounts drawn by, 1932, information not available, 571.
  - Royalty and wayleave payments, 1932, 571.

Brown, Mr. A. E. :—cont.
- Durham, coal mines :—cont.
  - Sanitary conveniences, provision of, 1005.
- Holland, milk products, surcharges on, for home consumption, system and effect on exports, 7-8.
- League of Nations, Convention for the Limitation of Miners' Hours :
  - British Government policy, 165-6.
  - Germany, declaration re, 166.
- Municipal Corporations Audit Bill, 2R, 1541.
- Wemyss Coal Company, complaint by Hawick Co-operative Society against standard tonnage allotted to, finding of Scottish Committee of Investigation, and members of Committee, 2139-40.

Brown, Mr. C. :
- Agricultural Marketing Bill, 2R, 1712-7.
- Coal mining industry, hours, 164.
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 261-5, 269, 296, 301, 329-30; Cons., 873-4.
- Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill, 2R, 1011-9.
- Navy :
  - increased Expenditure, undesirability, 2250-2.
  - Personnel, reduction in, partly due to technical changes, 2249-50.
- Supply, Navy Estimates, Sir Bolton Eyres Monsell's statement, 2249-52.
- World Economic Conference, Debate on Motion, 2003-6.

Brown, Colonel D. Clifton :
- Kielder, telephone service for, 1792.
- Northumberland, residential instructional centre for, 1319.

Brown, Brigadier-General H. Clifton :
- Agriculture, wheat, acreage, 1604.
- Crown lands, agriculture, rent abatements in 1932, 989.
- Imported Foodstuffs (Marking) Bill, reconsideration of Government attitude towards, 807.
- India, future Constitution :
  - Joint Select Committee, Motion for setting up of, procedure, 1588.
  - White Paper, discussion opportunity, 1588.
- Rural industries, Motion, 2049-58.
- Sutton Bridge Farm Settlement, financial position, 989, 990.

Buchanan, Mr. G. :
- Air Force, reduction advocated, 1922-5.
- Aliens, Jews from Germany, 1351, 1352.
- Cardonald, near Glasgow, subsidised housing scheme, non-payment of wages of workmen for two weeks, and failure to stamp insurance cards, 972-3.
- Co-operative societies, Committee, evidence, availability to Members of the House requested, 1171.
- Coupon trading, 2135.
- Ecclesiastical Commissioners, abolition question, 995.

Buchanan, Mr. G.:—cont.
Entertainments duty, revenue derived from entertainments up to and included 6d. admission, and from admission to cinemas, 375.
Glasgow, Courts of Referees, chairmen, 567.
Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 270-3, 274, 275.
Montrose, test work, 158, 159.
Newfoundland, grant-in-aid, 1100-2.
Poverty, widespread, Debate on Motion, 1236, 1245-6.
Road workers, circumstances such as refusal to work on account of weather, position re unemployment benefit, 1320.
"Royal Ransom," racehorse, Customs duty on, 187.
Rubber footwear, imports from Japan, 980.
Supply:
  Air Estimates:
    Sir Philip Sassoon's statement, 1842, 1884, 1885.
    Number of Royal Air Force, Com., 1922-5.
  Civil Estimates, Vote on Account, Rep., 592, 607, 610, 615, 642, 658.
  Dominion Services, Supplementary Estimate, Com., 1100-2.
  Navy Estimates, Sir Bolton Eyres Monsell's statement, 2214.
Unemployment, Debate on Vote on Account, 592, 607, 610, 615, 642, 646, 658.
Unemployment benefit:
  Anomalies Act, changes in working of, 566.
  Seasonal workers refused benefit under Anomalies Act, and provision for, 566.
  Transitional, assessment of family income, 607.

Budget,
date, 2144.

Burgin, Dr. E. L., Parliamentary Secretary, Board of Trade:
Agricultural Marketing Bill, 2R, 1741-9.
Argentina, adverse balance of trade with, for 1932, amount due to interest payments on investments in, and for shipping and banking services, information not available, 1947.
Bed coverings, imports, during each quarter of 1932, values, 9.
Coupon trading, Departmental Committee to be appointed to inquire into question, but full discretion retained by Government in regard to any recommendations made by, 1601-2.
Denmark:
  Imports from, and exports to, 1932, 1342-3.
  Trade negotiations with, with view of correcting adverse balance of trade, 1343.
Flour, standard grade, selling prices, and effect of wheat quota payment, 1963.

Burgin, Dr. E. L.:—cont.
Imports, analysis of, in connection with starting of industries in United Kingdom, present sources of information re, and issue of statement not considered necessary, 1600-1.
Mattresses, wire, imports during years ended January, 1930, 1931 and 1932, 1343.
Russia:
  Imports from, and exports to, 1932, 829.
  Imports from, during 1922 to 1932, excess over exports to, 829.
Shipping, obsolete tonnage:
  Question of disposal of, constantly under consideration, 791.
  Sold to foreign owners, tonnage at present in existence, information not available, 790.
Trade, adverse balance of, less in 1932 than in 1931, other information desired not available, 1947.

Burma:
Future of, decision a matter for Legislative Council, and case not to be dealt with specifically in White Paper on Indian Reforms, 787.
Government:
  Annual migration to Maymyo, suspension of, a matter for Government of Burma, and no information as to intentions, 6.
  Loan operations, dependent on future developments, 1585.
  Revenue receipts in excess of expenditure charged to revenue, 1931-32, 1585.
Separation from India, Round Table Conference for discussion of, not proposed, 787.

Burnett, Mr. J. G.:
Army:
  Attestation, statement of age on, 175.
  Food supplies, British-caught fish, encouragement of, 351.
Fish, salted, drawback on re-export of, 982.
Navy, food supplies, British-caught fish, instructions for purchase of reasonable quantity, for ships, etc., victualled on general mess system, 350, 351.

Business of Courts Committee, legislation to carry out recommendations in interim report under consideration, and immediate action to be taken to carry out recommendations not requiring legislation, 1963-4.

Business of the House:
Course of, 189-90, 560-1, 823-4, 1353-6, 1501-2, 2144-6.
Exemption from Standing Order, 190-2, 824-8, 1356-60, 1786-90, 2146-8.

tler, Mr. R. A., Under-Secretary of State for India:
- Burma, Government, annual migration to Maymyo, suspension of, a matter for Government of Burma, and no information as to intentions, 6.
- ndia:
  - All-India Medical Council Bill, already introduced, 6.
  - Alwar State:
    - Meo movement, no mention of arrests in British India in connection with, in reports, but any persons arrested would be tried by ordinary courts, 4.
    - Prime Minister and Revenue Minister, member of Indian Political Department being lent to hold appointment of, and duties of, 4.
  - Bangalore civil and military station, Mysore durbar's case for retrocession of, not yet considered by His Majesty's Government, and no further statement possible, 5.
  - Berar, constitutional future of, consideration of wishes of the people, previous reply referred to, 6.
  - Commodity prices, question of raising level of, 4.
  - Communal representation, position re, 3-4.
  - Military Academy, number of nominations of non-commissioned Indian soldiers for admission to, during past year, no details of communities from which drawn, 3.
  - Provincial Legislative Council, Legislatures passing resolutions in favour of, and resolutions against, Upper Chamber, 5-6
  - Railway Board:
    - Members, one Indian, 2.
    - Secretary, appointment within discretion of Government of India, 2.
  - Railways:
    - Contracts under rupee tender system, and previous reply referred to, 2135-6.
    - Stores orders, placing of, 1-2.
  - Raiya riot case, strictures passed by High Court on administration of justice in lower courts, Press information only, at present, but official notice would receive earnest consideration, 3.
  - Reserve Bank:
    - Bill for setting up, 5.
    - Indian opinion to be consulted in connection with proposals, 5.

utter:
- Blending and misdescriptions as to country of origin, powers for dealing with, 13.
- Empire," sale of blends of foreign and Empire butter as, a contravention of Butter Marking Order, and any information as to would be passed to local authority concerned, 2152-3.

Cadet Corps:
- Policy re, 1437.
- Question of holding of camps, 1408.

Cain, Mr. A. R. N. Nall-, see Nall-Cain, Mr. A. R. N.

Caine, Mr. G. R. Hall-, see Hall-Caine, Mr. G. R.

Cambridge and Isle of Ely,
- agricultural workers, unemployment position, 200.

Campbell, Mr. E. T.:
- Imports, retained manufactured, comparison of volume in 1923 and 1924 with 1932, 1762.
- Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill, 2R, 1079.
- Malaya, Sir Samuel Wilson's report, publication prospects, 1161.
- Straits Settlements, Chinese custom of cracker firing during New Year festival, restriction, 1956.
- Supply, Civil Estimates, Vote on Account, Rep., 648.

Campbell, Vice-Admiral G. (Burnley):
- Admiralty:
  - Board of, membership of Engineer-in-Chief of the Fleet, advocated, 2194.
  - Naval staff, excessive, 2192-3.
  - Number of officers of Royal Navy and Marines employed at, and borne on books of His Majesty's Ship "President" on 1st January, 1914 and 1933, and personnel of Royal Navy at same dates, 1951.
- Dartmouth College, advantages of special entry system as compared with, and abolition of college suggested, 2194-6.
- Defence forces, Estimates, presentation together desired, 2190.
- Defence, Ministry of, advocated, 2190-1.
- Navy:
  - Battleships, abolition desired, 2192.
  - Cost to State of officer entered as cadet at Dartmouth College and as special entry cadet, till age of 20, 1950.
  - Cruisers:
    - Cost of, 2191.
    - Fitting out of, 2191.
    - Position, 2191-2.
  - Flying boats, doubt as to value of, compared with cruisers, 2191.
  - Officers, proportion to men excessive, 2196.
  - Retirement of officers at top of Navy List, 2196-7.
- Supply, Navy Estimates, Sir Bolton Eyres Monsell's statement, 2190-7.

Canada:
- Air route to, advocated, 1830.
- British deportees, numbers 1930-31 and 1931-32, 185-6, 1002.
- Deportees, percentages of, deported owing to becoming charge on public funds, 1930-31 and 1931-32, 185-6.

[cont.

Canada:—cont.
  Exchange dumping duties:
    on French goods, non-imposition of, 169.
    on United Kingdom goods, undertaking as to reduction and ultimate abolition of, 169-70.
  Exports to, increase in, since grant of preferences arising out of Ottawa Agreements, 170.
  Imports of store cattle from, position re, 1969-70.
  Ottawa Agreement with, Great Britain to carry out, 974.
  Trade reciprocity with United States of America, negotiations, no communication received from Canadian Government and statement not possible, 974.

Cape, Mr. T.:
  Cumberland:
    Casual wards, number of persons passing through, 1930, 1931 and 1932, and question of opening of more wards, 184.
    Number of persons in receipt of relief in 1931 and 1932, and total amounts, 1790.
  Post Office Savings Bank, depositors, deposits and withdrawals, 1929, 1930, 1931 and 1932, 202.
  Unemployment, number of juveniles between ages of 14 and 18 now unemployed, 1320.

Cardington airship works, see under Airships.

Cardonald,
  housing scheme, sub-contractor, non-payment of wages by, and failure to stamp insurance cards, and payment of subsidy not affected by, 972-3.

Carlton House Terrace,
  Debate, personal explanation in connection with (Sir Arthur Steel-Maitland), 1786.

Carmarthenshire:
  Transitional payments, applications and determinations by public assistance committee, between 12th November, 1931, and 7th January, 1933, 523-4.
  Unemployment, 17th August, 1931, and 23rd January, 1933, 568.

Cape to Cairo air route, see under Aviation.

Carver, Major W. H.:
  Crown lands, agriculture, rent abatements in 1932, 989.
  Sutton Bridge Farm Settlement, financial position, 989.
  Yorkshire, East Riding, progress re supply of electricity, 1341.

Catterick Camp:
  Completion and cost, question, 1417.
  Increase in estimate, and question of total cost, 1383-4.

Cautley, Sir Henry S.:
  Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 245, 247-8.
  India, future Constitution, Joint Select Committee, setting up of, discussion facilities, 1588.

Cayzer, Sir Charles:
  Cheese, measures for dealing with imports, 541.
  Police, staff organisation in detection of crime, 536.

Cazalet, Miss T.:
  Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, 3R, 914-5.
  Juveniles, number aged between 16 and 18 unemployed, and pariculars re instruction centres and courses, 1361.

Cazalet, Captain V. A.:
  Housing, working-class houses, Committee, composition and terms of reference, 814.
  Russia, diplomatic representatives in, rights and privileges to import articles for own personal use, negotiations re, 791-2.

Cecil, Rt. Hon. Lord Hugh,
  Benefices (Purchase of Rights of Patronage) Measure, 1933, Motion for presentation for Royal Assent, 1129-34, 1137, 1142, 1151-2.

Census returns, publication prospects, and no delay, 546-7.

Ceylon:
  Cotton imports from United Kingdom, non-inclusion in preference proposals, and representations made re, 1343-4.
  Unification with future Government of India:
    Attitude of inhabitants, question should be addressed to Secretary of State for the Colonies, 781.
    no Steps for, under consideration, 781.

Chairman and Deputy Chairman, Rulings of:
  Doncaster Area Drainage Bill, Com., 960, 961.
  Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 230, 232, 237, 241, 245, 246, 269-70, 276, 280, 284, 285, 304, 314, 320, 324-5, 326, 331, 332, 344.
  Parliamentary procedure:
    Committee, Merits or demerits of Bill cannot be debated, 960, 961.
    Supply, Committee, matters requiring legislation cannot be discussed, 1104, 1106.
  Supply:
    Air Estimates, Com., 1933.
    Army Estimates:
      Number of land forces, Com., 1476, 1477.
      Pensions and other non-effective charges, 1482.
    Dominion Services supplementary estimates, Com., 1104, 1106.

Chairmen's Panel,
  Report from, 1789.

hamberlain, Rt. Hon. Sir J. Austen:
- Arms and munitions of war, export to China and Japan, embargo, approval of policy and desire for international action, 69-71.
- China and Japan:
  - Debate in Committee on Supply, 67-71, 76-7, 78, 146.
  - League decision, value of, 68.
- Supply, Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 67-71, 76-7, 78, 146.

Chamberlain, Rt. Hon. N., Chancellor of the Exchequer:
- Bank of England:
  - Gold, recent purchases, 573.
  - Gold held by Issue Department, weekly returns, 573.
- Banks, Nationalisation, drawing up of schemes for, similar to that approved by landtag of Bavaria not proposed, 181.
- Beer duty:
  - Budget statement not to be anticipated, 2131.
  - Revenue from:
    - in nine months ended 31st December, 1930 and 1932, 551-2.
    - during 11 months ended February, 1932 and 1933, 2130-1.
    - 1st April, 1932 to 31st January, 1933, and estimate for 1932-33, 180-1.
    - for 11 months to 28th February, 1933, 1338.
- Brewing industry, profits, reduction, 2131.
- China, disorders in, total expenditure incurred by British taxpayer owing to, during last 6 years, information not obtainable, 1338-9.
- Co-operative societies, interest paid by, and membership, reference to report of Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies for 1931, 1340.
- Customs duty, on works of art loaned for exhibition, inquiry being made, 2133.
- Entertainments duty:
  - on Admission prices of 6d. and under, falling off in attendances and loss of revenue, no means of obtaining information, 2154.
  - Amounts collected at various prices of admission not available, 2154.
  - net Amounts collected during years ended 31st October, 1931 and 1932, 2154.
- Exchange Equalisation Account:
  - Holdings, publication of particulars not proposed, 573.
  - Particulars not to be disclosed, 553.
- Income Tax:
  - Companies' reserves, 201.
  - Reduction, estimated cost, previous reply referred to, 2131.
  - Shareholders in limited companies and members of co-operative societies, required statistics not available, 1339-40.
- Machinery, import duties, refund of, on certain machinery imported between 1st March and 16th June, 1931, impossibility, 552.
- Motor vehicles, taxation, American Reports known of, and Budget statement to be awaited for policy re, 1365.

Chamberlain, Rt. Hon. N.:—cont.
- Musicians, orchestral, taxation of mechanical music apparatus to ensure abandonment in favour of employment of, not considered practicable, 201.
- National finance, sterling:
  - Budgetary steps for reduction in value of, no intention of, 1339.
  - Rise in value of, effect on export trade, situation being closely watched, 1339.
- Newfoundland, advance to Government of, 179.
- Price level, internal, position re increase in, 553.
- Spirits, duties, rates of, and revenue received, 1920 and 1932, 180.
- Sugar-beet industry, proposals submitted by beet-sugar and sugar refining industries and under consideration, and appointment of committee deferred, 2132-3.
- Wholesale prices, Debate on Motion, 1295-304.

Chapman, Colonel R.:
- Durham County, new schools on road between Curley Crooks and Boldon colliery, 1362.
- Education, teachers:
  - approved Establishment of, for each Part III authority for 1933-34 and number of children in average attendance, 2149-50.
  - Salaries, elementary, increased charge for 1933-34 in Grade IV areas in consequence of number of annual increments under Burnham scale being greater than number under Scale III, 1328, 1329.
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Cons., 838-9.

Chapman, Sir Samuel:
- Edinburgh, new Government offices, action re, 360-1, 361.
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 267.

Cheese,
- position under consideration and no statement possible at present, 541.

Chepping Wycombe borough,
- extension, position re, 380.

Chester-le-Street,
- unemployment, 25th January, 1932 and 23rd January, 1933, 527-8.

China:
- Arms export to, see under Arms and munitions of war.
- British subjects, taxation of, 1946.
- Disorders in, total expenditure incurred by British taxpayer owing to, during last 6 years, information not obtainable, 1338-9.
- Government, efforts to develop use of aircraft, and no opportunity lost of bringing superior quality of British aircraft to notice of, 1598.
- Hankow, business tax on foreigners, 1946.

[cont.

China:—cont.
- Imports from Japan, January and February, 1930, 1931 and 1932, 1761.
- and Japan:
  - Application of Article 16 of Covenant against Japan advocated, 148-9.
  - British Government attitude, 50-9, 155-6.
  - British interests in North China, communications to Japanese Government re, 796.
  - Debate in Committee of Supply, 34-156.
  - Economic boycott of Japan:
    - Advocated, 45-7, 66-7, 109-10, 128-30, 142-4, 146.
    - Consideration advocated, 116-9.
    - Objections to, 133.
    - Question of, 8.
  - Japanese ultimatum of February 23rd, 796.
  - Jehol, military situation in, 9.
  - League of Nations decision re, 37-42, 44-6, 54, 60-1, 68, 144-5.
  - Lytton Report, 51-4, 60, 75-6.
- London Purchasing Commission, no information of purchases by, of British aircraft, but action taken to bring merits to notice, 1597-8.
- Shanghai, withdrawal of battalion from, question to be discussed with Foreign Office in all its bearing before decision taken, 968-9.

Chingford,
- town planning scheme, laundry extension, 2153.

Chiswick sewage works,
- complaints as to odour from, being investigated, 1965.

Chittagong, see under India.

Chocolate, milk,
- nutritive value of, from different classes of imported milk, question of action re, 174.

Chorlton, Mr. A. E. L.:
- Cotton industry, Japanese competition, 791, 975.
- Imports, analysed statement, with recommendations as to taking up of new industries, suggestion, 1600-1.
- Japan, imports into Empire countries, compensating bounty to United Kingdom industries, 1760.
- Trade, exchange restrictions in foreign countries, arrangements for overcoming effect of, 1767.

Christie, Mr. J. A.,
- Norfolk, road maintenance grant, and comparison with Monmouthshire, 1164, 1165.

Churchill, Rt. Hon. W. S.:
- Aerial warfare, possibilities of, and question of protection of civil population, 1820-4.
- Disarmament, aerial, British proposals, comments on, 1817-20.
- Europe, promotion of peace in, prospect of Debate, 2141.

Churchill, Rt. Hon. W. S.:—cont.
- India:
  - Joint Select Committee:
    - Participation of Committee of Indians in work of, 995-6, 997.
    - Question as to reason for disallowance as Private Notice question, 561, 562.
  - Railways, contracts with continental firms, 2135.
- Irish Free State, total amount of payments for which, in default, total amount received from duties on Irish imports, and steps proposed to secure British taxpayer against loss, 983.
- Supply:
  - Air Estimates, Sir Philip Sassoon's statement, 1815-24.
  - Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 46.

Cinemas, Sunday opening, see Sunday Entertainments Act.

Cinematograph films,
- marking of country of creation or origin, legislation not proposed at present, but suggestion noted, 982.

Cinematograph Fund and Film Institute:
- Amount of money available for, no information available until first quarterly payments made by licensing authorities after end of March, 1610.
- Receipts, previous reply referred to, 27.

Civil Service:
- Accounting duties, recruitment for, 830-1.
- Clerical classes:
  - Complements cannot be specially increased to provide additional promotions, 984.
  - P, PU and S clerks whose promotion to, authorised during 12 months ending on 31st March, 1933, information to be supplied when available, 1621.
  - P-class and S-class men promoted to, information to be supplied for 12 months ending 31st March, 1933, when available, 2154.
  - Recruitment:
    - Open competition, suspension not in public interest, 994.
    - by Promotion, 984.
- Ex-service men:
  - Establishment, position re, 363, 556, 1622.
  - Retention until age of 65, provision for, not possible, 1621-2.
- Hours of duty, considered by Royal Commission and no comparison recently made or proposed, with those worked under London County Council at County Hall, 555-6.
- "P" class men, promotion position, 995.

Civil Estimates, see under Supply.

Clarry, Mr. R. G.:
- Civil Service, ex-service men, grant of pensionable status to, 363.
- Coal mining industry, Debate on Motion, 464-7, 473, 478.

[cont.

arry, Mr. R. G.:—cont.
- Rail and road transport:
  - Committee on railway economies, setting up of, before implementing Salter Report, 1165-6.
  - Consultation of Report of American National Transportation Committee before taking action on Salter Report, 1165.
- Severn Barrage scheme, consideration of committee's report and steps in connection with, 2157-8.
- Sweepstakes:
  - Dishonest promoters, question of legislation for infliction of more severe penalties on, 1608.
  - in aid of Humanitarian Rescue Workers' Organisation, 1608.
- World Economic Conference, Debate on Motion, 2039.

live, Lieut.-Colonel G. Windsor-, see Windsor-Clive, Lieut.-Colonel G.

oal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act (1912) Amendment Bill,
- 2R, 758-78.

oal mining industry:
- Accidents, Aldwarke Colliery, Rotherham, 1610.
- Durham, see under Durham.
- Hours of work, proceedings against one colliery in 1932 for breaches of law re, and conviction, 1770.
- Low-temperature carbonisation scheme, position re, 167-8.
- Motion (Mr. Dickie), 447-506.
- Overtime:
  - Breaches of the law re, inquiries would be made on receipt of definite facts, 1349-50, 1770-1.
  - Details of individual undertakings cannot be made public, 1349.
  - Investigation of cases of, but any particular cases would be looked into, 163-4.
  - Legitimate, 163.
- Pithead baths, particulars, 162-3.
- Quotas and output for each district in certain periods, information to be supplied and copies placed in Library, 168-9.
- Ringrose alarms, trials, reports:
  - Availability of, question cannot be answered at present, 973-4.
  - Prospects of, 973-4.
- South Wales, see under South Wales.
- Wages:
  - Difficulties not anticipated in July, 166.
  - National agreement, Government policy, 167.

ochrane, Commander A. D.:
- Poverty, widespread, Debate on Motion, 1230-3.
- Rural industries, Debate on Motion, 2074-6.

Cocks, Mr. F. S.:
- Arms and munitions of war, export to China and Japan, embargo:
  - Criticisms of policy, and embargo against Japan only desired, 108-10.
  - Question of international agreement, 1593.
- China and Japan:
  - Debate in Committee on Supply, 101-10.
  - Loans, etc., to Japan, embargo advocated, 109-10.
- Dartmouth College, abolition advocated, 2211-2.
- Disarmament Conference, naval proposals of Japan, 2210-1.
- Foreign embassies and legations, diplomatic immunity, 12.
- Honours (Prevention of Abuses) Act:
  - Complaints made to police, 543.
  - Proceedings against Mr. J. Maundy Gregory, 543.
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 273-6.
- International law, development of, the best security for peace and steps towards disarmament, 2209-10.
- Japan:
  - Emperor, memorial of General Tanaka to, 105-6.
  - Relations with Great Britain, question of observance of Washington Treaty and Anglo-Japanese Agreement, 10.
- Manchukuo, Japanese recognition of, British protest, 9, 10.
- Navy:
  - Commander, numbers of ex-mates and ex-mates (E) and ex-special entry cadets promoted to, or to equivalent rank and years, 1953.
  - Executive and engineering branches:
    - Number of cadets entered in, under special entry scheme each year since introduction, 1953.
    - Number of Dartmouth and special entry cadets to be entered in, during 1933, and number of commissions available for lower-deck ratings, 1952-3.
    - Promotions from lower deck, 1932, 1953.
  - Mate and mate (E) schemes, number of commissions awarded under, each year between 1913 and 1932, 1953.
  - Officers, increase in, and decrease in personnel, criticism, 2213.
  - Pay cuts:
    - Comparison of position of officers and men, 2213-4.
    - Restoration of some, advocated, 2214.
  - Promotion from lower deck, increase advocated, 2213.
- “Scientific” expansion, 553.
- Stoke-on-Trent Corporation, position as to raising of loan by, 1965.
- Supply:
  - Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 101-10.
  - Navy Estimates, Sir Bolton Eyres Monsell's statement, 2208-14.
- Unemployment, loss in national income and national wealth in 1932 due to, 1002.

Coke oven industry,
- required information not available, 196.

Colchester,
- stamp machines, extent of installation and extension under consideration, 811-2.

Colfox, Major W. P.:
- Bentley area, floods, houses affected by, 1336.
- Shops Acts (1912 to 1928) Amendment Bill, 2R, 2352.

Collins, Rt. Hon. Sir Godfrey, Secretary of State for Scotland:
- Agriculture, Scotland:
  - Credits, terms of loans under Act, not yet announced, but representations would be made to corporation re, 364, 365.
  - Imports, oats, oatmeal and other oat products, question under consideration, 159-60.
  - Oats:
    - German, prices in Germany and in Scotland and seriousness of situation appreciated, 364.
    - no Information possible as to prospects of statement of Government policy re, 364.
    - Measure for assistance of growers, statement issued to the Press referred to, 971.
    - Prices, Debate on Motion for Adjournment, 1311-4.
  - married Shepherds and ploughmen, wages of, 1769-70.
  - Smallholdings, Berwickshire and East Lothian, revision of rents, position re, 970.
- Ayrshire, land settlement of unemployed men, position re, 159.
- Dumbartonshire, able-bodied relief, expenditure on, in 12 months ended 15th May, 1930, 1931 and 1932, 1794.
- Edinburgh:
  - Able-bodied relief, expenditure on, 1930, 1931 and 1932, 1006.
  - Advocate's Close, not affected by City Chambers alterations and to be re-opened, 557-8.
- Fifeshire, able-bodied relief, expenditure on, 1930, 1931 and 1932, 1006.
- Fishing industry, Scotland, artificial hatching of salmon in rivers, experiments not possible at present for financial reasons, 1348.
- Glasgow:
  - Corporation, allegations of corruption in connection with administration of affairs by, inquiry to be made under Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) Act, 1921, 1345-7.
  - Housing, Sandyhills, particulars as to cost of construction, subsidy, loans, etc., 1923-24, and at present, 194.
  - Magistrate's conviction, setting up of judicial inquiry, decision not yet made, but statement to be made shortly, 971.
  - National Health Insurance Panel Committee, members, increase in number and reason, 193-4.

Collins, Rt. Hon. Sir Godfrey:—cont.
- Glasgow:—cont.
  - Public assistance committee, Lennox Castle scheme, alleged use of foreign nails, inquiries being made, 559.
- Harris.
  - Applications received for land in Borve deer forest, and negotiations proceeding re acquisition of forest, 1344-5.
  - Land seizures in, Press statements seen, 1345.
- Housing, Scotland:
  - Construction, statistics and particulars of houses, last available 12 months, 1612-3.
  - Numbers of houses under construction, and approved but not begun, 1st October, 1930, 1931 and 1932, and on 1st of each month since, 1614-5.
  - Rural Housing Act, 1931, particulars as to number of houses approved under, and subsidies, 1615-6.
  - Rural Workers Act:
    - List of county councils not operating schemes under, at 1st March, 1932 and 1933, 1616.
    - Numbers of houses in respect of which loans and grants approved during each of three latest quarters for which information available, 1617.
  - Slum clearance houses, number in course of construction on 1st January each year, 1925 to 1932, and on 1st of each month since January, 1932, 1614.
  - State-aided houses, reservation as far as possible for working classes, position re, 1363.
- Lanarkshire and certain burghs, able-bodied relief, expenditure on in 12 months ended 15th May, 1930, 1931 and 1932, 1794.
- Midlothian County, able-bodied relief, expenditure on, 1930, 1931 and 1932, 1006.
- Renfrewshire, able-bodied relief, expenditure on, in 12 months ended 15th May, 1930, 1931 and 1932, 1794.
- Scotland, St. Andrew's Cross and Lion flag, display of, 1792.
- West Lothian, able-bodied relief, expenditure on, 1930, 1931 and 1932, 1006.

Colombia:
- Arms export to, see under Arms and munitions of war.
- and Peru, dispute position, 10-11, 1155.

Colonial Administrative Service:
- Appointments Board, constitution of, 352.
- Candidates, qualifications required, 352.

Colonial sugar industry:
- Effect of increased preferences in West Indies, 1174.
- no substantial Expansion expected in near future, 1174.

Colville, Lieut.-Colonel J., Parliamentary Secretary, Department of Overseas Trade:
- Aircraft, export without licence permitted to all countries other than Abyssinia, 1156.
- Arms and munitions of war:
  - Exports to China and Japan:
    - existing Contracts, extent, character and value, information not available, 1156.
    - Contracts, renewable clauses which could defeat aims of embargo, no knowledge of, 797.
    - Embargo, aircraft not included, 1156.
    - Material in respect of which applications for licences made since 27th February, 1933, 1590-1.
    - Materials covered by licences issued 1st to 27th February, 1933, 1590-1.
    - Survey of export licences which are still valid, being made, 367.
  - Factories abroad owned by British firms, sale of arms and munitions to China and Japan, not included in control exercised by Great Britain, 797.
- British Industries Fair:
  - Clocks and watches, regulations re extent of foreign manufacture, and position to be reviewed, 1764-5.
  - Entrance fee, no harm believed to have been done by charge of, and Fair made self-supporting, 790.
  - alleged Paper specimen exhibited at, advertising American product, explanation, 1765.
  - Results and statistics of attendances, and comparison with previous year as far as possible, 195, 789-90.
- Canada:
  - British deportees, numbers, 1930-31 and 1931-32, 186.
  - Deportees, percentages of, deported owing to becoming charge on public funds, 1930-31 and 1931-32, 186.
- China, Government, efforts to develop use of aircraft, and no opportunity lost of bringing superior quality of British aircraft to notice of, 1598.
- Commercial Diplomatic and Trade Commercial Services:
  - under Department of Overseas Trade, 1600.
  - Senior posts:
    - Appointment method, 1600.
    - Qualifications required, 1600.
- Cotton industry, Japanese competition, question under consideration, and no further statement possible at present, 791.
- Denmark, Falster Zealand bridge, position re contract provisionally secured by Messrs. Dorman Long for erection of, 1601.
- Export subsidies, in foreign countries and British Dominions, supply of desired information not possible, 1006.

Colville, Lieut.-Colonel J.:—cont.
- Glove industry, decision on recommendation of Import Duties Advisory Committee:
  - Debate on Motion for Adjournment, 512-6.
  - Position re, 349.
- Import Duties Act, Debate on Motion for Adjournment, 512-6.
- Import Duties Advisory Committee, Reports and action on, position re, Debate on Motion for Adjournment, 512-6.
- Russia:
  - Soviet trading organisations, record being kept and available for consultation and revised information to be published as soon as practicable, 790.
  - Trade with, balance of:
    - during past 11 years, and corresponding figures for trade of U.S.A. with Russia, 348.
    - Improvement in, aim in present trade negotiations, 348.
  - Trade agreement with:
    - Expiry, date of, 349.
    - New, negotiations continuing, but no statement possible, 349.
- Switzerland, woollen and worsted tissues, restrictions on imports, representations received re, and report being called for, 1601.

Commercial Diplomatic and Trade Commercial Services:
- under Department of Overseas Trade, 1600.
- Senior posts:
  - Appointment method, 1600.
  - Qualifications required, 1599-600.

Commercial treaties, most-favoured-nation clause:
- Infringements by foreign countries, no important cases of kind mentioned known of, during last three years, 1762.
- Value of, to United Kingdom, 1762-3.

Companies Act, 1929,
- Departmental Committee, Motion (Sir Arthur M. Samuel), 2106.

Conant, Mr. R. J. E.,
- bankruptcies among farmers, during each of last 5 years, occupying 50 acres or more and occupying less than 50 acres, 162.

Consolidation Bills, Joint Committee:
- Message from the Lords, 1002; *Cons. of Lords Message, 1306; Select Committee, appointment, 1307; Meeting, Message from the Lords, 1967; *Cons. of Lords Message, 1967; Message from the Lords, 1967.

Cook, Mr. T. A.:
- Animals, cruelty to, number of convictions for, 1930, 1931 and 1932, 536-7.
- Birds, wild, in cages, number of convictions for cruelty to, in 1932, 536.

Cooper, Mr. A. Duff, Financial Secretary, War Office:
- Albany Barracks, taking over of buildings in neighbourhood of, to serve as married quarters, 1480-1.
- Army:
  - Arming of, 1439.
  - Cerebro-spinal meningitis cases, and measures re, 1478-9.
  - Clothing:
    - Full dress uniform, to be obtained from the trade in future, 1374.
    - Pimlico factory, closing of, 1374, 1434-5.
    - new Uniform, 1373-4, 1435.
  - Departmental economies, 1375.
  - Distinguished and Meritorious Service Fund, names of officers in receipt of grants from, publication of in 1925 and continuance not proposed, 1768.
  - Estimates, increase, explanation, 1367-71.
  - Field Marshals:
    - Abolition of post of, undesirability, 1377-8.
    - Deaths among, and tributes to, 1377.
  - Food supplies, position re fish, and substitution of, for meat in standard ration not proposed, 351.
  - Horses:
    - Remounts, purchases:
      - 1932, number and value of remounts purchased in Irish Free State, Northern Ireland, Scotland and England and Wales, 177.
      - in England and Scotland, quality compared to Irish, 177.
      - in England and Wales, policy re, previous reply referred to, 177.
    - Supply in event of mobilisation, position re, 1438.
  - Household Cavalry regiments:
    - Cost of, 1351, 1435.
    - not for Show only, 1436.
  - Housing conditions, 1373.
  - Land purchase, 1433.
  - Mechanical convoy experiment in North Africa, 1372.
  - Mechanical transport subsidies, 1439.
  - Mechanisation:
    - Demechanisation of one experimental mechanised brigade, 968.
    - Policy, 968, 1439.
    - Progress, 1371-2.
  - Medical services, officers, shortage, and consideration of question, 1478.
  - Movements of troops, reduction of expenditure on, 1438.
  - Officers:
    - Half-pay system, abolition not possible, 1437.
    - Justification for number of, in proportion to men, 1437.
  - Officers Training Corps:
    - Strength of, 1st October, 1932 and in 1931, 1930 and 1929, 2156.
    - Value of, 1369.
  - Pensions, age given on attestation as age for, alteration of rule not proposed, 175-6.

Cooper, Mr. A. Duff:—cont.
- Army:—cont.
  - Recruiting:
    - Number of men served with notice papers and number rejected, 1930-31 and 1931-32, 177, 178.
    - Position, 1371.
  - Reserve pay:
    - Basis of calculation, 968.
    - Monthly payment not possible, 1767-8.
    - Treatment of, by public assistance committees in connection with means test, 968.
    - Weekly payment instead of quarterly, impracticable, 569.
  - Royal Artillery, promotion, 197.
  - Royal Military Academy and Royal Military College, amalgamation, difficulties in connection with, but consideration to be given to, 1433.
  - Scottish Command, paymaster, retirement of Colonel Watkins at own request, 25th January, 1933, 569.
  - Special awards, officers drawing, reason for non-publication of names, 1438.
  - Technical appointments, scales of remuneration and conditions of appointment, 569.
  - Training, restoration of full and normal training, 1371.
  - Vocational training centres, Attendances and position re subsequent employment, 1374-5.
  - Warlike stores, increase in estimate, reason for, 1433.
- Army Council, composition, change in, and tribute to Lord Milne, 1376.
- Cadet Corps, policy re, 1437.
- China, Shanghai, withdrawal of battalion from, question to be discussed with Foreign Office in all its bearing before decision taken, 969.
- Defence, Imperial, discussion of, a matter for the Opposition, 1432.
- Fighting forces, co-ordination of services, 1375-6.
- Jersey:
  - Military personnel, need for, 969.
  - Regular troops in, number, and number of staff officers, Army Estimates referred to, for information as to pay, 175.
- National finance:
  - Estimates, suggestions re examination, difficulties of carrying out, 1430-1.
  - Expenditure, investigation by Public Accounts Committee, 1430.
- Supply, Army Estimates:
  - Statement, 1367-78, 1429-39, 1466-72.
  - Number of land forces, Com., 1477-9.
  - Works, Buildings and Lands, Com., 1480-1.
- Territorial Army:
  - Camps:
    - 1932:
      - non-Holding of, and tribute to attitude of force, 1368.
      - Voluntary camps, and success of, 1368-9.
    - 1933, provision for, 1368, 1469-70.
    - Value of, 1431-2.

[cont.

Cooper, Mr. A. Duff:—cont.
  Territorial Army:—cont.
    Coast defence duties, 1468.
    Nature of, 1471.
    Pledge, 1468-9.
    Recruiting:
      Appeal to employers, 1370.
      Decline, 1369-70.
      Special campaign, 1370, 1768-9.
    Representation of, at the War Office, 1467-8.
    forthcoming Review in London, 176, 1370, 1467.
    Shortage, measures for making good, previous reply referred to, 96.
  Tower, officer under arrest in:
    Communication with solicitors, 370.
    Information given to, of charges, 370.
    Transfer to Aldershot not considered desirable for preparation of defence, 369.
    Treatment of, 370.
  Unemployment, ex-service men and Territorials, position re pressing claims of, upon employers, 1768-9.
  War Department, Ministers, number of, reply to criticism, 1436-7.
  War Office:
    Financial staff, total civilian personnel in 1933, and information as to number having had actual experience in out-stations not available at short notice, 1350.
    total Personnel, 1933 and 1914, 1350.
    Regimental pay offices at home and overseas, machines used by, 1350.
    Staff, increase, justification, 1433-4.

Co-operative societies:
  Committee:
    Evidence, publication not proposed at present, owing to expense, 1170-2.
    List of witnesses to be found in appendix to report, 1170.
    Report:
      Conference of Prime Minister with representatives of societies, 19.
      to be Presented as White Paper, 19.
  Income tax, adoption of recommendations of Committee, Budget statement cannot be anticipated, 1782.
  Interest paid by, and membership, reference to report of Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies for 1931, 1340.

Copeland, Mrs. I.:
  Japan, china:
    Competition with English pottery, 1761.
    Imports from, value during January and February, 1933, and comparison with 1930-31, 1761.
  Poverty, widespread, Debate on Motion, 1188.

Cornwall,
  maternity and child welfare services, staff, inquiries being made, 551.

Coroners:
  Legislation for revision of powers of, not proposed, 381.

Coroners:—cont.
  Powers and functions, appointment of Departmental Committee not considered necessary, 574.

Cotton goods:
  Efforts to secure increased preference for, within the Empire, previous reply referred to, 348.
  Exports to Ceylon, non-inclusion in preference proposals, and representations made re, 1343-4.
  increased Sale within the Empire, no chance of providing opportunities to be neglected, 169.

Cotton industry:
  Dispute, position re unemployment benefit, 617-8, 690.
  Japanese competition:
    Consideration of question, and previous reply referred to, 975, 976.
    Deputation received from Manchester Board of Commerce, 976.
    Question under consideration, and no further statement possible at present, 791.

Coupon trading, Departmental Committee: to be Appointed to inquire into question, but full discretion retained by Government in regard to any recommendations made by, 1601-2.
  Composition and terms of reference under consideration, 2134-5.

Courthope, Colonel Sir George L., Forestry Commissioner, percentage of trees planted by Commission that have lived, and over-all average cost per living tree, 183.

Courts of summary jurisdiction, appeals from:
  to Court of Criminal Appeal, during 1931, particulars, 373.
  to Courts of quarter sessions in 1931, particulars re, 372.
  to High Court during 1932, particulars, 372.

Cove, Mr. W. G.:
  Aberavon division, unemployment residential training centres, number of persons having received training, and number having secured jobs after, 2113.
  Education:
    Continuation schools, 2126.
    School-leaving age, raising of, 2116.
  Glamorganshire, unemployed women, number and industries, 531.
  Juveniles, unemployed, number of 16 and 17 years never having had employment since reaching insurable age, 2115.
  Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill, 2R, 1025, 1032.
  Meat imports, 2137.
  Port Talbot, juveniles, unemployment, January, 1933, 531.

Cove, Mr. W. G.:—cont.
- Supply:
  - Civil Estimates, Vote on Account, Rep., 664.
  - Navy Estimates, Sir Bolton Eyres Monsell's statement, 2164.
- Taxation, excessive, Debate on Motion, 401-8, 410, 441.
- Unemployment, State-assisted schemes, number of persons directly employed on, since October, 1931, 2112.
- Unemployment benefit, transitional:
  - Heads of families having had payment reduced on account of wages earned by children, number, 2111.
  - Number of persons of ages 18 to 20 having had payment reduced on account of family income, 2111.
- Wales, number of persons wholly unemployed and partially unemployed, 20th January, 1932 and 1933, 530.

Craddock, Sir Reginald H.,
- Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Bill, 2R, 746-7.

Cranborne, Viscount:
- Housing, reconditioning, committee, prospects of report, 545.
- Taxation, excessive, Debate on Motion, 431-4.

Crediton Rural District Electricity Special Order,
- approved, 1500.

Crewe, justices of the peace:
- Advisory Committee, date of last meeting, no information, 1002-3.
- Additional appointments, meeting of Advisory Committee to be held shortly to consider, 1003.
- Women, attention of Advisory Committee drawn to non-appointment of, 1003.

Crime:
- Highway thefts, South Kensington, cases during last 6 months, one arrest and conviction, and decrease in, 1169-70.
- Holding up of residents in private houses by armed men, 1324.
- Loitering with intent to commit felony:
  - Convictions of persons under 21, during 1931, information not available but particulars for persons charged with frequenting, 542.
  - Number of persons sent to Wormwood Scrubbs committed for, during 1931, information not available and collection of, not justifiable, 542.
- Shop thefts, London, no case of non-disclosure of name of shop in court known of, names may sometimes be omitted in Press reports, 1791-2.

Criminal prosecutions, Scotland,
- arrest and discharge of men turning King's evidence in case of Miss Catherine Hamilton Wilson Craig, 557.

Cripps, Hon. Sir Richard Stafford:
- Arms and munitions of war, export:
  - to China and Japan, embargo, approval of, but action should have been taken earlier, 146-7.
  - to Japan, embargo on, by international agreement hoped for, 147-8.
- China and Japan:
  - Application of Article 16 of Covenant against Japan advocated, 148-9.
  - Credits for Japan, embargo advocated, 146.
  - Debate in Committee on Supply, 144-50.
  - League of Nations decision, 144-5.
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 315-6, 317, 318.
- Supply:
  - Civil Estimates, Vote on Account, Rep., 651, 654.
  - Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 144-50.
- Unemployment, Debate on Vote on Account, 651, 654.
- Unemployment benefit, transitional, means test, abolition of, the policy of the Labour party, 651.
- Visiting Forces (British Commonwealth) Bill, Cons., 1109-13; 3R, 1483-7, 1492.
- World Economic Conference, Debate on Motion, 2025-8.

Croft, Brig.-General Sir Henry:
- Agriculture, wheat, increase in acreage, 1604.
- Barmen and barmaids, number having lost employment during 1932, 25.
- Beer duty, receipts from, 1338, 2130.
- Brewing industry, profits, reduction in, and relief of industry from burden of recent taxation, 2131.
- China, disorders in, total expenditure incurred by British taxpayer owing to, during last six years, 1338-9.
- Cider, Somerset, 2140-1.
- Hop-picking, numbers employed in, in 1914, 1930 and 1932, 25.
- India:
  - future Constitution, Joint Select Committee, setting up of, discussion facilities, 1588.
  - Grant of provincial autonomy and central responsibility simultaneously, statement of Lieutenant-Governor of Madras, 1586-7.
  - Railways, contracts with Continental firms, and measures to prevent underselling of British manufacturers, 2135.
- Sugar-beet industry, future of, 2133.
- Supply, Army Estimates, Mr. Cooper's statements, 1462.
  - Territorial Army, 1932, camps, voluntary, 1462.
- World Economic Conference, Debate on Motion, 1985-93, 2021, 2031, 2032.

Crooke, Mr. J. Smedley:
- Army reservists, monthly payment suggested, 1767.
- Birmingham, transitional payments, cases dealt with and determinations by public assistance committee since 1st December, 1932, 522.

[cont.

rooke, Mr. J. Smedley:—cont.
- Cinematograph films, marking of country of creation or origin, 982.
- Employment Exchanges, green card procedure, 519, 520, 521.
- Hull and Barnsley, banning of poppy day, 539.
- Local Government Officers, remuneration for insurance work, 997.
- Pensions:
  - Case of H. Crabtree, 29-30.
  - Seven years' limit, number of cases recognised outside, during 1932, actually granted pension, 363.
- Road workers, unemployment benefit for compulsory unemployment owing to bad weather, 1320.
- Unemployment:
  - Ex-service men and Territorials, recommendation to employers to give preference to, in offering employment, 1768, 1769.
  - Provision of work on national basis, scheme initiated by Sir Harold Bowden, 1619.
- Unemployment benefit, transitional, disabled men receiving, number at last convenient date, and number in receipt of disability pension of 70 per cent. or under, 2110.
- Wire mattresses, imports in certain years, 1343.

rookshank, Colonel C. de Windt,
- Benefices (Purchase of Rights of Patronage) Measure, 1933, Debate on Motion for presentation for Royal Assent, 1137.

rookshank, Captain H. F. C.:
- League of Nations, new buildings, 375.
- Municipal Corporations Audit Bill, 2R, 1542, 1548-52.
- Supply, Army Estimates, number of land forces, Com., 1476.
- Unemployment benefit, Public Assistance Commissioners, payments from national funds towards salaries, allowances and expenses of, 517, 518.
- Vatican, relations with, 1366.
- Visiting Forces (British Commonwealth) Bill, 3R, 1490.

Cross, Mr. R. H.,
- bed coverings, imports in each quarter of 1932, 9.

Crossley, Mr. A. C.:
- Hours of work, reduction, need for industrial survey in England and international inquiry, 668-9.
- Housing, working-class houses, Committee, composition, 815.
- Public assistance committees, tribute to, 664.
- Rural industries, Debate on Motion, 2077-80.
- Supply, Civil Estimates, Vote on Account, Rep., 663-9.
- Unemployment:
  - Craft industries, question as to position re unemployment benefit in event of starting of, 668.

Crossley, Mr. A. C.:—cont.
- Unemployment:—cont.
  - Debate on Vote on Account, 663-9.
  - Employment Exchanges and unemployment insurance, German system, 666.
  - Meals, provision of, by Employment Exchanges at cost price, suggestion, 666.
  - Voluntary schemes for occupation of unemployed, 667-8.
- Unemployment benefit:
  - Supply of land and materials for building house in place of some of payments, suggestion, 666-7.
  - Transitional, administration, cost should be borne by Government, 665.
- Unemployment insurance, extension of scheme advocated, 665-6.

Crown lands:
- Agricultural land, abatements of rents in 1931-32 and 1932-33, 989.
- Cumberland market, see that title.
- London property, applications for reduction of rents, and results, 1617-8.

Cumberland:
- Casual wards, highest number of persons counted in, 1930, 1931 and 1932, and increase in number of wards, 1929, 184-5.
- Out-relief, numbers of persons, including dependants, in receipt of, 1930-31 and 1931-32, and cost of, 1790-1.

Cumberland Market, Crown Estate,
- flats, total number, and number unoccupied and retention of, for tenants displaced in building scheme, 1961.

Cunliffe-Lister, Rt. Hon. Sir Philip, Secretary of State for the Colonies:
- Barbados, cotton growing, 1173.
- Ceylon, cotton imports from United Kingdom, non-inclusion in preference proposals, and representations made re, 1344.
- Colonial Administrative Service:
  - Appointments Board, constitution of, 352.
  - Candidates, qualifications required, 352.
- Colonial sugar industry:
  - Effect of increased preferences in West Indies, 1174.
  - no substantial Expansion expected in near future, 1174.
- Cotton goods, efforts to secure increased preference for, within the Empire, previous reply referred to, 348.
- East Africa:
  - Government Departments, opportunity for appointment of Indians to superior posts but special allocation of posts to, undesirable, 1159.
  - Railway rates and finance, Mr. Gibbs's Report, under consideration by Governors Conference, and opinion of, awaited before taking action, 1159.
- Federated Malay States:
  - Sir Samuel Wilson's Report, publication prospects, and to be issued simultaneously in England and Malaya, 1161.
  - Workmen's Compensation Act, position re putting into force of, inquiry being made, 351-2.

[cont.

Cunliffe-Lister, Rt. Hon. Sir Philip:— cont.
- Hong Kong, Mui-tsai, half-yearly reports from Governor based on information collected by inspectors, placed in Library, 1160.
- Jamaica, Japanese imports, competition with Empire products, question under consideration, 1174.
- Japan, commercial competition, subject under consideration, and statement to be made when possible, 1174; 1946-7.
- Kenya:
  - Gold, discoveries by prospectors in areas at present closed to prospecting made before areas closed, 1160.
  - Goldfield:
    - Compensation to natives for disturbance, 1000.
    - Land leased for mining, exclusion from Reserve in exchange for alternative land or money payment to local native council of full capital value, 353.
    - Land not required for gold winning and restored to natives, provision for repair of surface disturbance not necessary as full compensation already paid, 353-4.
    - Natives employed in gold winning, provision for compensation for death, serious injury or occupational diseases, 354.
  - Indian police officers, appointment in white settled areas, no protests by white settlers against, known of, 24.
  - Kakamega area, not known to have been formally declared open to prospecting, as formality unnecessary, 1180.
  - Kavirondo Reserve, area in, closed to prospecting, 1180.
  - Land Commission, prospects of report, interim report not proposed, 556.
  - Leasing of any particular piece of land, Native Council of North Kavirondo Reserve not an appropriate body for consultation, but provision for expression of native view, 353.
  - Mining claims:
    - Registration of, ownership of land not affected by, 1161.
    - Registered in Kavirondo Reserve, 1161.
    - Rights of holders over, and compensation payable by, 1161.
  - Mining Ordinance, 1931, amendment re prospecting in native reserves, 1179-80.
  - Natives, rights as regards land purchase, 1160.
- Kenya-Uganda Railways and Harbours Administration, number of Asiatics employed by, 31st December, 1931, and information for 1921 would be inquired for, if desired, 1180.
- Malayan Civil Service:
  - Personnel selected under general system for Colonial Administrative Service, 352.
  - Recruitment, selection system, 352-3.

Cunliffe-Lister, Rt. Hon. Sir Philip:— cont.
- Palestine:
  - Imperial preference to products of, considered but not found possible, 379.
  - Jewish watchman, Joseph Benjamini, death of, particulars of circumstances, 354-5.
  - Products, preferential duty on, previous reply referred to, 829.
- Straits Settlements:
  - Cracker firing by Chinese during New Year festival, restriction, and inquiry will be made, 1956.
  - Sir Samuel Wilson's Report, publication prospects, and to be issued simultaneous in England and Malaya, 1161.
  - Workmen's Compensation Act, position re putting into force, inquiry being made, 351-2.

Cunningham-Reid, Captain A. S.:
- Aerial warfare, possibilities of, 1880-1.
- Air Force, increased expenditure on, as compared with Army and Navy, advocated, 1877-81.
- Motor cars, dazzle in head lights, measures for overcoming, 990.
- Police, Poller casts and moulds, process, 990.
- St. John's Wood Artillery Barracks, provision of married quarters, 1479-80.
- Stationery Office, invitation of tenders for appointment of agency for advertising in newspapers and periodicals on behalf of Government Departments in Scotland, 1966.
- Supply:
  - Air Estimates, Sir Philip Sassoon's statement, 1877-81.
  - Army Estimates, Works, Buildings and Lands, Com., 1479-80.

Curry, Mr. A. C.:
- Coal mining industry, Debate on Motion, 453, 492-4.
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 316-7.
- Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill, 2R, 1067-3.

Customs duties:
- "Royal Ransom" racehorse, 186-7, 1340-1.
- on Works of art loaned for exhibition, inquiry being made, 2133.

Customs and Excise Department:
- Staff:
  - Increase since October, 1931, and approximate annual cost, 27.
  - requested Particulars to be supplied, 380.

Czechoslovakia, Rumania and Yugoslavia,
- Pact, 1157-8, 1597.

Daggar, Mr. G.,
- gas and electricity undertakings and coke production, profits of, and prices paid for coke, 1929, 1930, 1931 and 1932, 195-6.

alkeith, Earl of,
- timber-growing industry, safeguarding of, in trade negotiations with foreign countries, 979.

arlington,
- unemployment, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, no information as to number not registered, 567.

artmoor Prison:
- Farm bailiff, position re temporary employment of officers as, and forthcoming permanent appointment, 2143-4.
- Officers passed over for promotion, but promotion by merit, and final responsibility rests with Prison Commissioners, 1327-8.

artmouth College:
- Abolition advocated, 2194-6, 2211-2.
- Continuance, desirability, 2258.
- Cost:
  - per Cadet, compared with special entry system, 1950, 2212.
  - Reduction, 2163-4, 2242.
- Fees:
  - Numbers of cadets being educated at different scales of, 1950-1.
  - System, 2212.
- Opening of, to boys not intending to make Navy a career, under consideration, 2164-5.

avies, Mr. D. L.:
- Navy, development of colloidal fuel, desirable, 2198-201.
- Supply, Navy Estimates, Sir Bolton Eyres Monsell's statement, 2197-201.

avies, Mr. R. J.:
- Afghanistan, embargo on foreign-made matches and soap, and question of negotiating trade agreement between India and, 1589.
- Civil Service Accountants, recruitment, 830.
- Clerical classes, number of ex-service P-class, PU-class and S-class, whose promotion to, authorised from 17th February, 1932, to 28th February, 1933, 1621.
- Crewe, Justices of the Peace:
  - Advisory Committee, date of last meeting, 1002-3.
  - Vacancies, question as to filling of, 1003.
  - Women, question as to appointment of, 1003.
- Import Duties Act, 1932, increase in number of staff necessitated by, and annual increase in salaries, 27.
- India:
  - Bangalore civil and military station, Mysore durbar's case for retrocession of, consideration by Governments of United Kingdom and India, and decision, 5.
  - raw Cinema films, import duty on, 788.
  - Concession passages, nationality of ships, 780.
  - Film industry, steps for encouragement of, 788.

Davies, Mr. R. J.:—cont.
- India:—cont.
  - Import duty on non-Empire cotton, question as to, 1590.
  - Labour, deductions from wages of Indian workers, proposals of Government of India for carrying out recommendations of Royal Commission re control of, 780.
  - Medical Council Bill, exclusion of Indian medical licentiates from provisions of, 780.
  - Military Academy, nominations of non-commissioned Indian soldiers for admission to, and communities from which drawn, 3.
  - Tariff Board, prospects of issue of report, with view to closure of cotton mills, 1589.
- Insurance policies, lapsing of, amendment of law in favour of policy holders, 22.
- Municipal Corporations Audit Bill, 2R, 1515-9, 1520.
- Poverty, widespread, Debate on Motion, 1242.
- Registrar-General's Office, checking of certificates issued by, 572.
- Shop thefts, London, growing practice of withholding names of certain West End shops when prosecuting, and alteration advocated, 1791.
- Shops Acts (1912 to 1928) Amendment Bill, 2R, 2305, 2336-43, 2345, 2348.
- Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Bill, 2R, 715-8.

Davison, Sir William H.:
- Arms and munitions of war, exports to China and Japan, embargo on, 796.
- Beer duty, total amount raised by, in current financial year, and comparison with estimates, 180, 181.
- Co-operative societies:
  - Committee, Report, publication prospects, and question of precedents for communication to one of interested parties before submission to the House, 19.
  - Deputation to Prime Minister, 19.
- Customs duty, on works of art loaned for exhibition, 2133.
- Death duties, insurance to meet, encouragement of, by non-inclusion of amount in valuation of estate for duties, 1608-9.
- India:
  - Joint Select Committee, power to confer with Indian representatives, 996.
  - Legislative Assembly, general election, postponement, 1587.
  - Railways:
    - Contracts to continental firms, 2136.
    - Stores, measures to secure placing of orders in United Kingdom, 1, 2.
- Italy, officials, prohibition against travelling in British ships, 779-80.
- Kensington Gardens, planting of shrubs on garden side of public lavatory recently erected requested, 1167, 1168.
- League of Nations, contributions, arrears due from China, 797, 798.

[cont.

Davison, Sir William H.:—cont.
National Savings Certificates, held by nominees of Committee of Addison Gardens, prospects of decision re, and question re payment of income tax, 810-1.
Post office, "Buy British" stamp cancelling machines, origin of, 14.
Russia:
  British subjects, arrest, 1946.
  Lena Goldfields, Limited, arbitral award, action taken to secure payment of, and result, 1595.
  Timber, contract of Timber Distributors, Ltd., question in relation to Ottawa Agreements, 978.
  Trading agreement with, assurance requested against entering into, before draft seen by House and approval expressed, 6-7.
South Kensington, highway thefts, 1169.
Spirit duty, amount of, and revenue from, in 1920 and 1932, 179-80.
Waterloo Bridge, reconditioning, commencement prospects, 1163.

Death duties,
insurance to meet, non-inclusion of amount in valuation of estate for duties, question frequently considered and reasons against, 1608-9.

Defence: of Country from invasion, a matter of co-operation between three services and kept constantly under review, 1781.
Discussion of question as a whole, desired, 1385-6.
Imperial:
  Committee of inquiry into question of, advocated, 1417-8, 1422-3, 1427-8.
  Discussion of, a matter for the Opposition, 1432.

Defence forces:
Amalgamation of certain services, inquiry desirable, 1422-3.
Co-ordination, 1375-6.
  Advocated, 1397-8.
  Discussion desired, 1389-90.
Estimates:
  Increase, criticism, 2171-3.
  Presentation and consideration together desired, 1418, 1851, 2190.
Training of officers, certain amalgamation, suggestion, 1835-6.

Defence, Ministry of:
Advocated, 2190-1, 2224.
Desirability of, 1836.

Delhi, see under India.

Denman, Hon. R. D., Second Church Estates Commissioner:
Bolton, scheme under Union of Benefices Measure, position re, 817-8, 818.
Ecclesiastical Commissioners:
  Building leases in South Shields area, parties interested invited to conference, 995.
  no Expenditure involved on State, 995.

Denman, Hon. R. D.:—cont.
Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 246, 247, 248.
Shops Acts (1912 to 1928) Amendment Bill, 2R, 2317-21.
Taxation, excessive, Debate on Motion, 434-5.

Denmark:
Anglo-Danish Exhibition, subsequent imports of British goods, position re, 172-3.
Falster Zealand Bridge contract, 1601, 1765-6.
Imports from, and exports to, 1932, 1342-3.
Trade negotiations with, 171, 1343, 1762, 2138-9.

Denville, Mr. A.:
Chester-le-Street, unemployment, 25th January, 1932 and 1933, 527-8.
Coal mining industry, Debate on Motion, 486.
Tyne Fishery Board, joint committee of local authorities and, action on report of, 1617.

Dewsbury,
unemployment, 25th January, 1932 and 23rd January, 1933, 518-9.

Dickie, Mr. J. P.:
Coal mining industry, Motion, 447-64, 467-8, 469, 489.
Distributive trades, insured persons, number at present, and in January, 1930, 1931 and 1932, and unemployment, 16-17.

Disarmament:
Conference, see under League of Nations.
Naval:
  Arguments for, 2220-3, 2225.
  Hoover proposals, 2175-6, 2176.
  Hoover v. British proposals, 2228-9.

Distilling, quantities of various materials used in, and number of proof gallons distilled in year ended 30th September, 1932, 695-6.

Distressed areas,
position in, being closely watched, 1769.

Distributive trades,
insured persons and unemployment, statistics, 1929, 1930, 1931, 1932, 16-18.

Dobbie, Mr. W.:
Rotherham:
  Aldwarke Colliery, disaster, 1610.
  Transitional payments, administration by commissioner, criticism, 612-4.
Supply, Civil Estimates, Vote on Account, Rep., 612-4.
Unemployment, Debate on Vote on Account, 612-4.
Unemployment benefit, transitional, means test, abolition advocated, 613-4.

Dogs, inoculation treatment for distemper, publicity to, and availability of preparations used, 1607-8.

Dollis Hill, Post Office Research Station, cinema apparatus, contract given to American company, question as to condition that British labour and material to be used, inquiry being made, 24.

Dominion Services,
Supplementary Estimate, Com., 1097-109; Resolution reported and agreed to, 1482.

Dominions, .
British deportees, 1931 and 1932, 1002.

Don Valley area:
Floods:
Communications received from Bentley-with-Arksey urban district council and reply, 1780.
State financial assistance to farmers and others, not possible, 1361-2.
Working days lost in Wath Main and Bentley collieries, during 1931 and 1932, and total loss of wages incurred, information cannot be given without permission of owners, but permission would be applied for, if desired, 1169.
Transitional payments, number of claims considered and number refused during last two months of 1932 and first two months of 1933, information will be supplied if obtainable, 2111.

Doncaster Area Drainage Bill,
Reported, 23; Re-committed to Committee of the Whole House, 23; Com., 957-62; 3R, 962-5.
to be Passed into law with as little delay as possible, 1780.

Doncaster drainage area, floods:
Position re, 188.
Warning of residents in event of danger, 188-9.

Donner, Mr. P. W.:
Cape to Cairo air route, survey of ground organisation by Lieut. G. B. Brylls, prospects of availability of report, 378.
China and Japan, situation in Manchukuo and Jehol, 9.
Maghull hospital, near Liverpool, Government intentions re, 801.
Navy, cruisers, destroyers and submarines, number 15 years of age and over, 699.
Pensions, Ministry of, policy re hospitals, 801.

Doran, Mr. E.:
Aliens, Jews, prevention of entering United Kingdom from Germany, 1351, 1352.
British Broadcasting Corporation:
Accounts, examination by impartial accountants, 1609-10.
Reduction of grant to, out of public funds, 1774.

Doran, Mr. E.:—cont.
British Broadcasting Corporation:—cont.
Reports and accounts for 1932, prospects of submission and publication, 381-2.
Broadcasting, Empire station, cost to date, estimated annual upkeep and contribution from Dominions, 993.
Post Office, telephone trunk lines, laying of, underground, 992, 993.
Supply, Civil Estimates, Vote on Account, Rep., 642-9.
Unemployment:
Debate on Vote on Account, 642-9.
Remedies, far-reaching policy of reconstruction, 643-9.

Dorking,
industrial analysis of persons recorded as unemployed at 20th February, 1933, 1618.

Dower, Captain A. V. G.:
Denmark, adverse balance of trade with, 1343.
Eggs, chilled or cold-stored, from Australia and South Africa, ensuring sale of, as chilled and not fresh eggs, 541-2.
Licensed premises, rateable values, 182.

Doyle, Sir Nicholas Grattan-, see Grattan-Doyle, Sir Nicholas.

Duckworth, Mr. G. A. V.:
Harlescot, former Air Force Mechanical Transport Repair Depot, vacant site and buildings, question as to disposal and use of, 1932-4.
Supply, Air Estimates, Works, Buildings and Lands, Com., 1932-4.

Dumbarton county:
Able-bodied relief, expenditure on, in 12 months ended 15th May, 1930, 1931 and 1932, 1793-4.
Unemployment benefit, expenditure on, 1931 and 1932, 1793-4.

Duncan, Mr. J. A. L.:
Waterloo Bridge:
Contracts for reconstruction, offering of, by public tender and subject to approval of Ministry of Transport, 1162.
Reconditioning, open competition for contracts, 1163.

Dunglass, Lord:
Agricultural Marketing Bill, 2R, 1705.
World Economic Conference, Debate on Motion, 2030.

Durham:
Coal mines:
Overtime, required particulars not available, but cases of alleged illegal overtime would be inquired into, on receipt of particulars, 164.
Sanitary conveniences, provision of, 1004-5.
Colliery owners, royalty and wayleave payments, 1932, 571.

[cont.

Durham:—cont.
- Public assistance commissioners:
  - total Cost of, and staff, to 31st January, 1933, 2108.
  - Determinations by, previous reply referred to, 2108-9.
  - Disability pensions, treatment of, 2109.
  - Meetings of, and officers, with accredited representatives of applicants, 1316-7.
  - Protests received from miners' lodges, as to administration of transitional payments by, and previous statement referred to, as to action re, 1315-6.
  - Reduction of benefit where miners living in colliery houses and not paying rent, previous reply referred to, and matter within discretion of commissioners, 2108.
  - Saving from, 2108.
  - Widows' pensions, treatment of, 2109.
- Road passenger vehicles, increases in fares, 1166-7, 2157-8.
- Royalty owners, names of, and respective amounts drawn by, 1932, information not available, 571.
- new School on road between Curley Crooks and Boldon colliery, particulars re, accommodation of present schools in areas, etc., 1362-4.

Durham Corporation Bill,
- 2R*, 157.

Easington Rural District Council,
- sewage schemes in preparation by, applications for sanction to loan will be considered in light of Government policy already explained, 803-4.

East Africa:
- Government Departments, opportunity for appointment of Indians to superior posts but special allocation of posts to, undesirable, 1159.
- Railway rates and finance, Mr. Gibbs's Report, under consideration by Governors Conference, and opinion of awaited before taking action, 1159.

East Lothian,
- smallholdings, revision of rents, position re, 970.

Ecclesiastical Commissioners:
- Building leases in South Shields area, parties interested invited to conference, 995.
- no Expenditure involved on State, 995.

Economic Consultation and Co-operation, Committee on:
- Expenses, arrangements re payment of, 1763-4.
- Secretarial assistance and office accommodation, provision of facilities, 1763-4.

Economic situation,
- Government policy, speeches during Debate referred to, 1172.

Edinburgh:
- Able-bodied relief, expenditure on, 1930, 1931 and 1932, 1006.
- Advocate's Close, not affected by City Chambers alterations and to be reopened, 557-8.
- new Government offices, question of proceeding with scheme under consideration, 360-1.

Edmonton urban district,
- Order for extending Section one of the Sunday Entertainments Act to, approved, 966.

Education:
- Continuation schools, position re, 2125-6.
- Elementary schools:
  - Numbers of children leaving, 1929-30, 1930-31 and 1931-32, 1330.
  - Warning of children by notice or special instruction on subject of traffic dangers, 1329-30.
- School leaving age, raising of, as remedy for unemployment, 678-9.
- Secondary school fees:
  - Alterations made in scales, White Paper will be issued showing, 1175.
  - Wales, progress in regard to new arrangements, 1502.
  - Yorkshire, position under Circular 1421, 563-4.
- Teachers:
  - Convicted of criminal offence, regulations re, 544.
  - Establishment proposed by local authorities for 1933-34 under Article 11 of Code still under consideration, 2149-50.
  - Numbers leaving training colleges and departments in 1932 and number unemployed 31st December, 1932, 2149.
  - Prosecutions of Mr. and Mrs. Duncan, particulars of cases, 543-5.
  - Salaries, elementary:
    - Change from one scale to another, system, 1329.
    - estimated additional Cost for 1933-34 in consequence of number of annual increments payable in Scale IV areas being greater than in Scale III areas, 1328-9.

Eggs, see under Agriculture.

Electricity supply:
- East Riding, position as regards rural districts of Howden, Riccall and Pocklington, 1341.
- Errol, position re, 559.
- Extension to different areas, a matter for various local authorities and companies concerned, but position being closely watched by Electricity Commissioners, 1161-2.
- Grid:
  - total Capital expenditure on, 1162.
  - Completion prospects, 1162.
  - estimated Cost, report of Electricity Commissioners for 1930-31 referred to, 831-2.
  - Expenditure, report and accounts of Central Electricity Board referred to, 831.

[cont.

lectricity supply:—cont.
- New Forest pylons, no announcement possible at present, 1167.
- Painswick, under consideration, 697-8.

lectricity (Supply) Acts, Special Orders, approved, 1499-500.

lectricity undertakings,
- capital expenditure, profits, etc., particulars for 1929-30 and 1930-31, 195-8.

lliot, Major Rt. Hon. Walter E., Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries:
- Agricultural Marketing Act, 1931:
  - Hops, estimated annual value of crop during last five years, 1603-4.
  - Schemes in operation, submitted, in course of preparation, etc., 1603.
- Agricultural Marketing Bill, 2R, 1623-43, 1691.
- Agriculture:
  - Allotments for unemployed, and seed, etc., supplies, no funds available for operating sections 14 and 16 of Agricultural Land (Utilisation) Act, 1931, but grant made from Development Fund to Society of Friends, 2120.
  - Barley, areas under, in 1914, 1930 and 1932, 26.
  - Crown lands, abatements of rents in 1931-32 and 1932-33, 989.
  - Eggs and poultry, value of production in 1931-32, 2137-8.
  - Imports:
    - Dairy produce:
      - from Australia and New Zealand, position, previous reply referred to, 1617.
      - Restrictions, previous replies referred to, 806.
    - Eggs:
      - from Australia and South Africa, marking of, and no special precautions against sale as fresh eggs necessary, 542.
      - Marking of, 807.
    - Potatoes:
      - Irish, sale governed by Wart Disease of Potatoes Order of 1923, and no reason to question efficacy of, but evidence to contrary would be considered, 808.
      - Position re duties on, 565.
      - Temporary prohibition, no power for, 807.
    - Poultry, marking of, consideration by Standing Committee under Merchandise Marks Act, 807.
  - Pig industry, schemes, negotiations re, and progress, 26.
  - Poultry, bacillary white diarrhoea, precautions against, 540.
  - Prices, no broadcast in respect of any Lincolnshire market, but any suggestion for, would be considered, 540-1.
  - Unemployment position in certain counties, 200.

Elliot, Major Rt. Hon. Walter E.:—cont.
- Agriculture:—cont.
  - Wheat:
    - Area under, 4th June, 1931, and in 1932, and estimate for present year, 1604, 1605.
    - Deficiency payments:
      - Advances:
        - Amount paid to date, and amount in Oxfordshire, 2138.
        - Amount of wheat on which payments made and to be made in December, 1932, and up to 28th February, 1181-2.
        - to Norfolk farmers, amount and amount of assignments, 808.
      - Amount of wheat for which applications for certificates refused on ground of not being of millable quality, 1182.
      - Date of next payment of account, and total amount paid to date, 365.
      - Essex, 1602-3.
  - Wheat, barley and oats, value of production in 1931-32, 2137-8.
- Bembridge, Isle of Wight, coast erosion, 1611.
- Butter:
  - Blending and misdescriptions as to country of origin, powers for dealing with, 13.
  - "Empire," sale of blends of foreign and Empire butter as, a contravention of Butter Marking Order, and any information as to, would be passed to local authority concerned, 2152-3.
- Cattle, store:
  - Imports:
    - of Canadian cattle, position re, 1970.
    - Decrease, during period July, 1932, to date as compared with previous corresponding period, 1969-70.
  - Irish, complaints received as to shortage in Northumberland, 1970.
- Cheese, position under consideration and no statement possible at present, 541.
- Crown lands, London property, applications for reduction of rents, and results, 1618.
- Cumberland Market, Crown Estate, flats, total number, and number unoccupied and retention of, for tenants displaced in building scheme, 1961.
- Don Valley area, floods:
  - Communications received from Bentley-with-Arksey urban district council, and reply, 1780.
  - State financial assistance to farmers and others, not possible, 1362.
- Doncaster Area Drainage Bill, to be passed into law with as little delay as possible, 1780.
- Doncaster drainage area, floods:
  - Position re, 188.
  - Warning of residents in event of danger, 188-9.

[cont.

Elliot, Major Rt. Hon. Walter E.:—cont.
- Flax cultivation:
  - on Economic basis, doubtful, 1604.
  - Leaflet issued by Ministry re, 1604.
- Floods, drainage works, position re execution of, 1336-7.
- Great Ouse River, scheme for, grant, position re, previous reply referred to, 810.
- Horses:
  - for Agricultural purposes, no reason to supply, supply likely to prove inadequate, 808.
  - Heavy horse-breeding schemes, adequacy of, 808.
- Land drainage, river works, position re grants, 809-10, 810.
- Meat imports:
  - in February, 1933, compared with January, 1933, and February, 1932, 2136-7.
  - Bacon, voluntary restriction of:
    - Negotiations in respect of period from 23rd March to 22nd June proceeding, 1341-2.
    - Quantities to be imported from certain countries during month ending 22nd March, 1341, 1342.
  - Bacon and hams:
    - Anticipated and actual imports during period 23rd November, 1932, to 22nd February, 1933, 2150-2.
    - Arrangements and working of, 2150-2.
  - Restrictions:
    - Effect on home producer, previous reply referred to, and further improvement in livestock prices since, 988-9.
    - Previous replies referred to, 806.
    - Proposals to exporting countries, previous reply referred to, 162.
- Milk:
  - Marketing scheme, not yet received from producers, but steps to be taken when received, and proposals of Commission under consideration, 2138.
  - Reorganisation Commission, legislation, no statement possible at present, need for expression of opinion by persons concerned, 12-13.
- Milk and milk products, imports, position to be brought under review, 2137.
- Ouse River, Yorkshire, scheme for, grant, previous reply referred to, 810.
- Rural industries, Debate on Motion, 2092-9.
- St. Pancras borough, Crown estate, vacant rooms, and intended use of, 1961-2.
- Sutton Bridge Farm Settlement, financial particulars, 989-90.
- Thames River, works on, particulars as to schemes, 809.
- Tyne fishery, conference of local authorities, if arranged, officials of Ministry of Agriculture and Ministry of Health would attend, 1617.
- Wey River, works, particulars as to schemes, 809.

Ellis, Sir Robert Geoffrey,
- coal mining industry, Debate on Motion, 468.

Elliston, Captain G. S.,
- motor car licences expiring on 30th September, extension for one month on payment of proportionate additional charge, 1959.

Employment,
- statistics, 1921 and 1930, 2141-2.

Employment Exchanges:
- Green card procedure, 519-22.
- Managers, facilities for guidance and assistance of men, suggestion, 634.
- Work of, 588-90.

Enamelled ware,
- antimony poisoning from use, no power to lay standard of safe manufacture, but circular recently issued on subject, 1337-8.

Entertainments duty:
- on Admission prices of 6d. and under, falling off in attendances and loss of revenue, no means of obtaining information, 2154.
- net Amounts collected during years ended 31st October, 1931 and 1932, 2154.
- Amounts collected at various prices of admission not available, 2154.
- Exemption from:
  - Concert in aid of Loughborough centre for unemployed, 993-4.
  - Trade exhibitions, 1364.
  - Revenue from, information as to, at various prices of admission and in respect of particular classes of entertainment, not available, 28, 375.

Entwistle, Mr. C. F.:
- Wholesale prices, Debate on Motion, 1276-82.
- World Economic Conference, Debate on Motion, 2048.

Errol,
- electricity supply, position re, 559.

Essenhigh, Mr. R. C.:
- Coal mining industry, Debate on Motion, 486.
- Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Bill, 2R, 747-50.

Essex:
- Agricultural workers, unemployment position, 200.
- Wheat deficiency payments, 1602-3.

Estcourt, Captain T. E. Sotheran-, see Sotheran-Estcourt, Captain T. E.

Europe,
- promotion of peace in, position as to Debate, 2141.

ans, Mr. E., eachers, numbers leaving training colleges and departments in 1932 and number unemployed on 28th February, 1933, 2149.

erard, Mr. W. L.:
ir Force:
  Allocation of money to, as compared with Army and Navy, increase advocated, 1872-3.
  One-power standard advocated, 1873.
  in Transjordan:
    Armoured cars, need for replacement, 1874.
    Use of pamphlets and loud speakers, 1874.
viation:
  Air reports from Heston Aerodrome, continuance desired, 1875.
  Development of, and value of subsidy, 1874-5.
  Flying over other countries, permit system and position as regards Turkey, 1876.
  Importance of commercial aircraft if fighting aircraft seriously reduced, 1873.
  Licensing, reconsideration of methods suggested, 1875-6.
  National Flying Services, clubs affiliated to, subsidy advocated, 1877.
Hull and Barnsley, banning of poppy day, 539.
Meteorological Office, tribute to, 1875.
Palestine, private flying, assistance advocated, 1876.
Supply, Air Estimates, Sir Philip Sassoon's statement, 1871-7.

idence (Foreign, Dominion and Colonial Documents) Bill [Lords],
ons., 965; 3R, 965.

-Service men,
pecial campaign pension, publicity to, through employment exchanges, under consideration, 531-2.

aminers,
Reports from, 157, 517, 967, 1315, 1759.

change Equalisation Fund:
Holdings, publication of particulars not proposed, 573.
Particulars not to be disclosed, 553.

port subsidies,
n foreign countries and British Dominions, supply of desired information not possible, 1006.

lle, Sir Bertram G.:
Argentine Railways, British capital, safeguarding of interests of, 830.
Navy:
  Beer bars in chief and petty officers' messes in short establishments, running of, 1952.

Falle, Sir Bertram G.:—cont.
  Navy:—cont.
    Ratings:
      Advancement, eligibility for, 1968.
      Invalided during 1932, number, number with tuberculosis, and number with tuberculosis whose disability accepted as attributable to service, 1951.
    Raw materials or clothing purchased by petty officers and men in ships and establishments, landing of, 1952.

Federated Malay States:
  Indian community, grievances of, memorandum re, no information as to action by Government of India, 1609.
  Sir Samuel Wilson's Report, publication prospects, and to be issued simultaneously in England and Malaya, 1161.
  Workmen's Compensation Act, position re putting into force of, inquiry being made, 351-2.

Feltham Borstal Institution, promotion, number of officers passed over for, during last 12 months, 2143.

Fifeshire:
  Able-bodied relief, expenditure on, 1930, 1931 and 1932, 1006.
  Unemployment benefit, expenditure, 1931 and 1932, 698.

Fighting forces, see Defence forces.

Firearms:
  strict Enforcement of provisions of Act of 1920 by police, 1324.
  Possession or use of firearm or colourable imitation in connection with commission of crime or avoidance of arrest, special penalties under consideration, 1324-5.

Fish, salted, drawback on re-export of, official statement in Press referred to, 982.

Fishing industry, Scotland, artificial hatching of salmon in rivers, experiments not possible at present for financial reasons, 1347-8.

Flax cultivation:
  on Economic basis, doubtful, 1604.
  Leaflet issued by Ministry re, 1604.

Flax and hemp trades,
  new rates of wages, statutory notice of proposals of Trade Board supplied, 2107.

Fleming, Mr. E. L.,
  arms or munitions, export to China or Japan, foreign governments having placed embargo on, 1591.

Flour:
  Contracts, form of, 565.
  Standard grade, selling prices, and effect on wheat quota payment, 1962-3.

Food Council:
total Cost for 1932, 565.
Dispensing with, not proposed, 565.

Foot, Mr. D. M.:
Air Force, lighter for bulk storage of petrol at Mount Batten, provision of, and provision of storage tanks ashore, report of Comptroller and Auditor-General, 1958.
Bembridge, coast erosion, 1611.
Poverty, widespread, Debate on Motion, 1195.
New Zealand, rate of exchange, alteration of, and action re, 1764.
Taxation, excessive, Debate on Motion, 428-31.
Visiting Forces (British Commonwealth) Bill, Cons., 1123-4.

Ford, Sir Patrick J.:
Chocolate, milk, effect of importation of skimmed milk on advantageous terms compared with full cream condensed milk or milk powders, and question of action re, 174.
new Glencoe Road, cost of, and reason for expenditure, 358, 359.

Foreign embassies and legations, diplomatic immunity, reference to legal works on subject, 12.

Foreign Judgments (Reciprocal Enforcement) Bill [Lords],
Message from the Lords, 1001; 1R*, 1502.

Foreign Office,
Vote on Account, Com., 31, 34.

Fox, Sir Gifford W. G.:
Agricultural Marketing Bill, 2R, 1665-9.
Agriculture:
  Milch cattle disease, committee, prospects of report, 539.
  Wheat deficiency payments to date, amount of, 2138.
Hours of labour, comparison between those worked in Government Departments in London and under London County Council at County Hall, 555.
Oxfordshire, amount of wheat deficiency payments to date, 2138.

France:
Discrimination against United Kingdom goods, question under consideration, 977.
Lace machinery imports from Great Britain, surtax on, representations made re, 976-7.
Naval estimates, 1931, 1932, and 1933, 1970.
Wheat prices, 1782-4.

Fraser, Mr. J. A. Lovat-, see Lovat-Fraser, Mr. J. A.

Fremantle, Sir Francis E.:
Army Medical service, officers, shortage of, 1473-6.
Gift Coupons Bill, 2R, 1580-3.
Housing, subsidised houses, etc., class of tenants, 1332.

Fremantle, Sir Francis E.:—cont.
Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 307, 313-5, 316, 319; Cons., 845-7, 876-7.
Questions to Ministers, absence of Members in whose names questions put down, 22.
Supply, Army Estimates, number of land forces, Com., 1473-6.
Telephonists, pronunciation, 1605.
Unemployment, local authorities' schemes, 2119.

Frimley and Farnborough District Water Bill,
Standing Orders complied with, 157.

Fuller, Captain A. G.:
Argentina, adverse balance of trade with, for 1932, amount due to interest payments on investment in, and for shipping and banking services, 1947.
Electricity supply, grid system, capital expenditure, 831.
India:
  Army expenditure, contributions by Indian States, 570-1.
  Budget, 381.
  Punjab, sub-judgeships, appointment, 827.
Trade:
  adverse Balance of, certain information requested, 1947.
  Negotiations with foreign countries, progress, 983.
Unemployment, work schemes, use of transitional payments for assistance of, 2107, 2108.

Ganzoni, Sir John,
House of Commons Refreshment Department, cider, consumption in 1932, and brands of, 2140.

Gas undertakings, capital, receipts, expenditure and profits, particulars for 1929, 1930 and 1931, 195-6.

Gateshead,
unemployment, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 518-9.

Gault, Lieut.-Colonel A. H.,
House of Commons Refreshment Department, amount of cider consumed during 1932 and proportion genuine Somerset, 2140.

George, Major G. Lloyd,
World Economic Conference, Debate on Motion, 1980-4.

Germany:
Actions alleged to be inconsistent with Treaty of Versailles, matters under consideration, 2141.
British Indian subjects, arrest of Mr. Naidu and Mr. Nambian and release of Mr. Naidu, 1352-3, 2155.
British lives and property, responsibility for safety of, 375-6, 2155.
Jews from, see under Aliens.

[cont.

rmany :—cont.
ats :
Export bond system, 161-2.
Prices in Germany and in Scotland, 364.
ituation in, British Government in frequent communication with Ambassador in, 376, 377.
Vheat prices, 1782-4.

braltar, evelopment of use of, on route to Malta, desirability, 1830, 1893.

ft Coupons Bill,
R, 1563-83; Order for resuming Adjourned Debate on Amendment to Second Reading read and discharged, Bill withdrawn, 1967.

llett, Sir George M.:
rms and munitions of war, export to China and Japan, embargo, approval of policy, 122-3.
hina and Japan, Debate in Committee on Supply, 121-3.
Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, 3R, 931-5.
upply, Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 121-3.

lmour, Lieut.-Colonel Rt. Hon. Sir John, Secretary of State for Home Affairs:
Aliens :
Admission, no racial or religious discrimination, and each case considered on its merits, 1351-2.
French citizens registered with police in Great Britain and in City and Metropolitan Police Districts, numbers, 1622.
Jews from Germany, no discrimination on grounds of religious belief oe racial origin, but powers to protect country from any undesirable influx, 1351-2.
Animals, cruelty to, convictions, number of, 1930 and 1931, 537.
Armistice day, poppy sales, banning of, in Barnsley and Hull, no power to interfere with, 539.
Birds, wild, in cages, convictions for cruelty to, information not available, 536.
Borstal Institutions, promotion system, previous reply referred to, 2143.
Cinematograph Fund and Film Institute, amount of money available for, no information available until first quarterly payments made by licensing authorities after end of March, 1610.
Coroners, powers and functions, appointment of Departmental Committee not considered necessary, 574.
Crime :
Holding up of residents in private houses by armed men, 1324.
Shop thefts, London, no case of non-disclosure of name of shop in court known of, names may sometimes be omitted in Press reports, 1791-2.

Gilmour, Lieut.-Colonel Rt. Hon. Sir John :—cont.
Dartmoor Prison :
Farm bailiff, position re temporary employment of officers as, and forthcoming permanent appointment, 2144.
Officers passed over for promotion, but promotion by merit, and final responsibility rests with Prison Commissioners, 1328.
Feltham Borstal Institution, promotion, number of officers passed over for, during last 12 months, 2143.
Firearms :
strict Enforcement of Act of 1920 by police, 1324.
Possession or use of firearm or colourable imitation in connection with commission of crime or avoidance of arrest, special penalties under consideration, 1324-5.
Honours (Prevention of Abuses) Act :
Complaints made to police under, and action on, 543.
Case of Mr. J. Maundy Gregory, 543.
International Labour Convention on Night-Work for Women :
Decision of International Court, 573-4.
Deputation re, reason for refusal to receive, 573-4.
Juvenile offenders, Ealing, case of George Samuel Woodward, inquiries being made, 1327.
Licensed premises :
Glasses, law re, 189.
Streatham, refusal to serve half-pint, no offence, 189.
Licensing Act, permitted hours, special hours during summer time in some districts, 1777.
Loitering with intent to commit felony :
Convictions of persons under 21, during 1931, information not available, but particulars for persons charged with frequenting, 542.
Number of persons sent to Wormwood Scrubs committed for, during 1931, information not available, and collection of, not justifiable, 542.
Lowdham Grange Borstal Institution :
Officer promoted over others, number of hours worked per fortnight before promotion, 1792.
Officers, eight-hour day, 1792.
Magistrates, Metropolitan area, binding over of people on condition of not living within certain radius of London, 818.
Motor drivers' hours :
Compliance with Road Traffic Act, kept in mind by authorities, 2122.
Prosecutions and convictions for offences under Section 19 of Road Traffic Act, 1930, Metropolitan Police district, none in 1931, and number in 1932, 2122.
Motoring offences, noise, convictions for, 1930 and 1931, figures for 1932 not yet available, 1325.

Gilmour, Lieut.-Colonel Rt. Hon. Sir John:—cont.
- Narcotic Drugs, Convention for Limiting the Manufacture and Regulating the Distribution of, 1931 to be ratified before date contemplated in Convention, 1360.
- Performing Animals (Regulation) Amendment Bill, legislation on lines of, not possible at present, 1359.
- Persistent Offenders Committee, legislation to carry out recommendations of, under consideration, 1360.
- Petroleum (Motor Vehicles) Regulation, no reason to suppose that requirement as to fire-extinguishers not observed in Metropolitan area, but inquiry would be made on receipt of information to contrary, 1960.
- Police:
  - Casts and moulds, Poller process, considered but adoption not proposed, 990.
  - Organisation in regard to detection of crime, measure for improvement, and difficulties in connection with, 536.
- Prison Service:
  - Applications by officers in London for transfers to provinces, number during 1932 and reasons for, 2156-7.
  - Governor, filling of vacancies in rank of, procedure, 27.
  - Retirements between ages of 55 and 60 during five years ended 31st December, 1932, 1359-60.
- Sidcup Urban District, Sunday cinemas, rejection of Order by the House, and position as to re-submission in event of change of circumstances re amalgamation with Chislehurst, 188, 991-2.
- South Kensington, highway thefts, cases during last 6 months, one arrest and conviction, and decrease in, 1169-70.
- Streatham Parliamentary Division, division into wards, considerations in connection with, and no information of desired in Borough of Wandsworth for, 21.
- Sunday Entertainments Act:
  - Application for extension of Section 1 to new area, Government has no power of vetoing application, 188.
  - Authorities taking action under, 819.
  - Polls under, particulars as to, 188.
  - Schemes under, power of House over, 819.
- Sweepstakes:
  - in aid of Humanitarian Rescue Workers' Organisation, proceedings pending against organisers and printers of tickets, 1608.
  - Legislation to await final report of Royal Commission, 1608.
- Swindles, action by police on indication of, 1608.
- Taximeter cabs:
  - Fares, increase, representations received, and consideration of, 991.
  - Metropolitan district:
    - Flags, illumination of, requirement in new regulations, 538.

Gilmour, Lieut.-Colonel Rt. Hon. Sir John:—cont.
- Taximeter cabs:—cont.
  - Metropolitan district:—cont.
    - Number licensed by Metropolitan Police, total and numbers over 20 years old and between 10 and 20 years old, 537.
- Tramcars, number of persons killed by motor vehicles while boarding or alighting from, in Metropolitan Police District, in 1932, 26.
- Wormwood Scrubs Prison, second division prisoners, treatment of, 2122.

Glamorganshire:
- Unemployment, 17th August, 1930, and 23rd January, 1933, 568.
- Women, unemployment, statistics and industry classifications, 23rd January, 1933, 531.

Glasgow:
- Corporation, allegations of corruption in connection with administration of affairs by, inquiry to be made under Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) Act, 1921, 1345-7.
- Courts of Referees, Chairmen, changes in, no reason known for, at present, 567.
- new Government offices at, question not considered, Edinburgh regarded as administrative capital, 361.
- Housebreaking by young men refused unemployment benefit, 637.
- Housing:
  - by Corporation, in Shettleston area, yearly, since 1st January, 1919, particulars to be supplied, 157.
  - Sandyhills, particulars as to cost of construction, subsidy, loans etc. 1923-24 and at present, 194.
- Magistrate's conviction, setting up of judicial inquiry, decision not yet made, but statement to be made shortly, 970-1.
- National Health Insurance Panel Committee:
  - Administration expenses, defraying of, by means of voluntary subscriptions by practitioners, 158.
  - Members, increase in number and reason, 193-4.
  - Membership of non-panel doctors, 158.
- Omnibus service in Tollcross area, no appeal known of, but further inquiries would be made, 357-8.
- Public assistance committee, Lennox Castle scheme, alleged use of foreign nails, inquiries being made, 559.

Glasgow-Inverness trunk route,
- portion between Tyndrum and Carnach, cost of, and reason for expenditure, 358-9.

Gledhill, Mr. G.:
- Motor vehicles, carrying of rear lights, at top of vehicle, 1968.
- Pensions, number of old persons in receipt of, continuing to work, 565-6.

[cont.

edhill, Mr. G.:—cont.
enior Trade Commissioner and commercial counsellor, qualifications necessary for, 1599.
Unemployment benefit, number of married women in receipt of, whose husbands are working, 566.

ossop, Mr. C. W. H.:
Agricultural prices, misleading broadcasts, 541.
Hull and Barnsley, banning of poppy day, 538-9.
Rural industries, Debate on Motion, 2102-5.

ove industry:
Decision on recommendations of Import Duties Advisory Committee:
  Debate on Motion for Adjournment, 506-9, 511-6.
  Position re, 349.

uckstein, Mr. L. H.:
Army:
  Economies, criticism of non-carrying out of suggestions, 1427.
  Stationery, expenditure on, 1427.
Defence, Imperial, appointment of special committee to consider question of, advocated, 1427-8.
Estimates, increased control over, by House, suggestions for, 1428-9, 1430.
Supply, Army Estimates, Mr. Cooper's statement, 1426-9, 1430, 1458, 1459.
Territorial Army, camps, approval of, grant, 1426.

off, Sir Park:
Anglo-Japanese alliance, abandonment of, 2220.
Navy:
  Personnel, shortage of, 2218-9.
  Training in sailing ships, desirability, 2219.
Supply, Navy Estimates, Sir Bolton Eyres Monsell's statement, 2218-20.

oldie, Mr. N. B.,
Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Bill, 2R, 741-6.

oodman, Colonel A. W.:
Flax and hemp trades, new rates of wages, 2107.
Imperial preference, Empire content:
  Appointment of Customs officials to reside in Dominions for checking of British requirements, 982.
  Percentages of, in operation in United Kingdom and main classes of imports affected, 170-1.
Juveniles, hours of labour, 1321.

ore, Rt. Hon. W. G. A. Ormsby-, see Ormsby-Gore, Rt. Hon. W. G. A.

overnment offices:
Whitehall scheme:
  Decision against building over open spaces by Embankment, reconsideration undesirable, 362.
  no Decision yet reached, 361-2.
  Modified scheme, question under consideration, 362.

Graham, Mr. D. M.:
Coal mining industry, Debate on Motion, 481, 482, 483, 503.
Dumbarton, Renfrew and Lanark counties, and certain burghs:
  Poor law relief, expenditure for each since 1929-30, 1793-4.
  Unemployment benefit, expenditure 1931 and 1932, 1793-4.
Housing, Scotland, subsidy houses, extension of date for completion, 373.
Midlothian, West Lothian and Fife:
  Able-bodied relief, expenditure for each year since 1929-30, 1006.
  Unemployment benefit, expenditure in 1931 and 1932, 698.
Supply, Civil Estimates, Vote on Account, Rep., 676.
Unemployment, Debate on Vote on Account, 675.

Graham-Little, Sir Ernest,
Army, technical appointments, scales of remuneration, and conditions of appointment, 568-9.

Grattan-Doyle, Sir Nicholas:
Gas masks, 2130.
Greek guaranteed loan, amount due to Great Britain, steps for recovery, 349-50.
Irish Free State, aerial communication with, no direct communications and question of remedying, 356, 357.
Jersey, military force in, question of substitution of civilian staff, 969.
Russia, Metropolitan-Vickers Company, raid on offices and arrest of officials, 1597, 1944, 1945.
Tyneside area, transitional payments, scales in Durham and Newcastle and question of provision for avoiding such inequalities, 368.
Unemployment benefit, transitional, relation of reasonable standard of subsistence of, futility of question, 2112.

Gray, Mr. W. J. Anstruther-, see Anstruther-Gray, Mr. W. J.

Great Harwood,
unemployment, 21st September, 1931, and 23rd January, 1933, 804.

Great Ouse River, scheme for, grant, previous reply referred to, 809-10.

Great Western Railway, see under Railways.

Great Western Railway Bill,
Standing Orders complied with, 157.

Greaves-Lord, Sir Walter,
Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Bill, 2R, 709-15.

Greece:
Guaranteed loan to, of 1832:
  Date of discharge of whole loan, information cannot be given at moment, 350.
  non-Payment of instalment due 31st December, 1932, and correspondence taking place re, 349-50.

Greenwich, Royal Naval Hospital:
- Criticism of charge for admission and condition of, 2225-6.
- School, removal to the country, and proposed creation of Naval Museum, 2235-6.

Greenwood, Rt. Hon. A.:
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 203-7, 312-3, 321, 331, 332, 334-6, 340-2; Cons., 842-5, 865-6, 881-2; 3R, 890, 897-903.
- Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill, 2R, 1010, 1077-85, 1087; 3R, 2264-7.

Grenfell, Mr. D. R.:
- Aeroplanes and parts, exports during 1932, 1759.
- Agricultural Marketing Bill, 2R, 1732-41.
- Breconshire, unemployment, August, 1931, and latest available date, 568.
- Carmarthenshire, unemployment, August, 1931, and latest available date, 568.
- Ceylon, steps for unification of, with future federal Government of India, 781.
- Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act (1912) Amendment Bill, 2R, 758-67, 771, 776, 777.
- Coal mining industry:
  - Overtime work, 1771.
  - Quotas and output for each district in certain periods, 168.
- Commercial treaties, most-favoured-nation clause, working of, as regards United Kingdom, 1762-3.
- Cotton, longstaple Indian, measures for increasing consumption in Great Britain, 786.
- Economic Consultation and Co-operation, Committee on, incidence of expenses of, 1763.
- Federated Malay States, Indian community, grievances of, 1609.
- Glamorganshire, unemployment, August, 1931, and latest available date, 568.
- India:
  - Alwar State, requisitioning of services of member of Indian Civil Service for use in, for revenue purposes, 4.
  - Commodity prices, steps for securing rise in level of, 4.
  - Communal representation, Government decision, 3.
  - Delhi conspiracy trial, 1589.
  - Reserve Bank Bill, introduction, Government intentions and previous consultation of Indian opinion, 5.
  - Women political prisoners, night journeys, 1590.
- Indian naval service, admission of Indians, 786-7.
- Iron and steel and tinplate industries, female workers and unemployment, 2114.
- Monmouthshire, unemployment, August, 1931, and latest available date, 568.
- National Health Insurance, voluntary contributors, opportunity to certain persons to regain membership, 2126-7.

Grenfell, Mr D. R.:—cont.
- Performing Animals (Regulation) Amendment Bill, introduction of legislation on lines of, 1359.
- Poverty, widespread, Debate on Motion, 1245.
- South Wales:
  - Mining industry, unemployment, 530, 699.
  - Unemployment in 1921 and 1932, 1322-3.
- Trade Unions, membership, 1606.
- Unemployment:
  - Training centres, such as Presteign, cost of maintaining trainees in, and proportion finding employment on leaving, 2113.
  - Work schemes, 998, 1324.
- Wales:
  - Difference between money value of determination of claims for transitional benefit from November, 1931, to latest available date, and amount which would have been paid at ordinary rate of benefit, 1323.
  - Number of unemployed persons transferred from, since 1921, 1322-3.
  - Training camps, establishment under similar conditions as on Kielder estate, 2117.
- World Economic Conference, proposal to, suggested, with view of reaching agreement to lower tariffs all round, 1763.

Gretton, Colonel Rt. Hon. J.:
- Agricultural Marketing Bill, discussion facilities, 1356.
- Doncaster Area Drainage Bill, Com., 957-8.
- Political Honours Scrutiny Committee, Members, extent of consultation of, and date of last meeting, 179.

Griffith, Mr. F. Kingsley:
- Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill, 2R, 1038-41.
- Visiting Forces (British Commonwealth) Bill, 3R, 1495-8.

Griffiths, Mr. T.:
- India:
  - Gold currency reserve, utilisation of portion for purchase of silver with view to coinage of rupees, 827.
  - Territorial and Auxiliary Forces Committee, consideration of recommendations of, and prospects of decision, 827.
- Kenya, Indian police officers, appointment on white settled areas, 24.
- Post Office, telegraph posts, etc.:
  - Damage done to, during recent storm, 1168.
  - Steel instead of timber, question of, 366, 1168.

Groves, Mr. T. E.:
- Beer, number of bulk barrels brewed during year ended 30th September, 1932, 695.

[cont.

Groves, Mr. T. E.:—cont.
- Distilling, quantities of certain materials used in, and number of gallons distilled, during year ended 30th September, 1932, 695.

Gunston, Captain D. W.:
- Army, cerebro-spinal meningitis cases, and investigation of, particulars requested, 1477.
- Supply, Army Estimates, number of land forces, Com., 1477.

Guy, Mr. J. C. M.:
- Civil Service, ex-service men:
  - Counting of previous temporary service for pension, 1622.
  - Retention until age of 65, 1621-2.
- Public Health Service, Scotland, inquiry into, 971-2.
- Scotland, national ensign, use of, 1792.
- Wemyss Coal Company, complaint by Hawick Co-operative Society against Scottish Committee of Investigation, members, 2140.

Hacking, Rt. Hon. D. H., Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department:
- Coroners, legislation for revision of powers of, not proposed, 381.
- Courts of summary jurisdiction, appeals from:
  - to Court of Criminal Appeal, during 1931, particulars, 373.
  - to Courts of quarter sessions, in 1931, particulars, 372.
- Motor cycles, without silencers, required information not available, 360.
- Shops Acts (1912 to 1928) Amendment Bill, 2R, 2280, 2282, 2329-37, 2338, 2341.
- Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Bill, 2R, 750-5.

Hales, Mr. H. K.:
- Garages, installation of fire extinguishers, non-enforcement of Regulation, and proposed instruction to Metropolitan Police, 1960.
- Import Duties Act, Debate on Motion for Adjournment, 509-10, 513.
- India, concession passages, nationality of ships, 780.
- Irish Free State dispute, suggested imposition of further duty of 50 per cent. on Irish imports, 1964.
- Motor vehicles, compulsory carrying of fire extinguishers, 1959, 1960.
- Pottery industry, position re import duties, Debate on Motion for Adjournment, 509-10, 513.
- Poverty, widespread, Debate on Motion, 1184.
- Stoke-on-Trent, application by corporation for production of books of omnibus companies on hearing of appeal against decision of traffic commissioners, 1166.

Hall, Mr. F.:
- Great Ouse River, schemes for, position of, 809-10.
- Ouse River, Yorkshire, scheme for, position of, 809.
- Thames River, schemes prepared in September, 1931, particulars re, 809.

Hall, Mr. G. H.:
- Burma:
  - Budget deficit, borrowings from Government of India in respect of, 1585.
  - Future of, dealing with in White Paper to be issued before Easter, and question as to decision by H.M. Government, 787.
  - Separation from India, Round Table Conference for further consideration of, 787.
- Coal mining industry:
  - Debate on Motion, 467-78, 480-1.
  - Quotas and output for each district in certain periods, 168.
- Disarmament, naval, Hoover proposals, 2175-6.
- Fighting services, estimates, increase, criticism, 2171-3.
- India, railways, prospects of legislation empowering companies to operate motor transport on parallel roads, 1585.
- Navy:
  - Construction:
    - Allocation of work, 2181.
    - Programme, criticism, 2173-9.
  - Estimates, increase, criticism, 2172-4.
  - Internal-combustion or Diesel engines, question as to, 2180.
  - Oil fuel:
    - Increase in use of, and decrease in use of coal, 2179.
    - Information requested re, 2179-80.
  - Submarines, Davis submerged escape apparatus, 2180-1.
- South Wales, unemployment in 1921 and 1932, 1322-3.
- Supply, Navy Estimates, Sir Bolton Eyres Monsell's statement, 2171-81.
- Unemployment, work schemes, allocation to wages, materials, purchase of land and interest charges of sum of one million expended on, 1324.
- Wales:
  - Difference between money value of determinations of claims for transitional benefit from November, 1931, to latest available date, and amount which would have been paid at ordinary rate of benefit, 1323.
  - Number of unemployed persons transferred from, since 1921, 1322-3.
  - wholly Unemployed persons, reason of increase in number from January, 1932, to January, 1933, 1322.

Hall-Caine, Mr. G. R.:
- Crown lands, applications for reduction of rents by tenants of urban property, and decision on, 1617-8.
- Denmark:
  - Falster Zealand Bridge contract, 1765.
  - Trade negotiations with, progress, 1762.

[cont.

Hall-Caine, Mr. G. R.:—cont.
- Floods, recent, question of remedial works, 1336.
- Housing:
  - Reconditioning in urban areas, 1611.
  - Subsidised houses, class of tenants, 1331.
- League of Nations, new buildings, contracts allocated to British firms, 374.
- New Forest, electricity pylons, 1167.

Hamilton, Sir Robert W.:
- Royal Seamen's Pension Fund:
  - Administration scheme, placing of copy in Library requested, 1333.
  - Period of service for crofter-fisherman for receipt of pension, 1778.
  - Refusal of pension:
    - Applicant not informed of reason, and measures advocated, 1779.
    - on Ground that insufficient number of pensions available, possibility of renewing application, 1779.

Hammersley, Mr. S. S.:
- Australia, felt-hat hoods, import prohibition, reply to representations, 25.
- Japan:
  - Commercial competition of, 791, 975-6, 976, 1761, 1946, 1947.
  - Trade Agreement with:
    - Abrogation question, 975.
    - Negotiations with Dominions with regard to their withdrawal from, 2134.
- Stoke-on-Trent Corporation, position as to raising of loan by, 1966.
- Trade, exchange restrictions in foreign countries, prospects of report of committee, 1767.
- Wages and salaries:
  - Amounts of annual income received in form of, in 1924 and 1932, 199.
  - Index figure of general level for 1932 on assumption that general level in 1924 was 100, 199.
- Wholesale prices, Motion, 1249-58, 1284, 1299.

Hampstead, Heath Brow,
- buildings to be erected at, see under Air Force.

Hankow, see under China.

Hanley, Mr. D. A.:
- Aerial warfare:
  - Allocation of civil areas, suggestion, 1832.
  - Commercial aircraft, potential bombers, 1831.
- Air Force:
  - Amphibian aircraft, development advocated, 1830-1.
  - Gibraltar as air base, experiments suggested, 1830.
- Aviation, route to Canada, advocated, 1830.
- Disarmament, aerial, British Government proposals, 1832.
- Supply, Air Estimates, Sir Philip Sassoon's statement, 1830-2.
- Traffic, automatic signals, fixing of arrows to standards of, in places where filtration to left permitted, 1958.

Hannon, Mr. P. J. H.:
- Aliens, admission, religious discrimination, 1352.
- Arms and munitions of war, exports to China and Japan, intensified activity of works in France and Czechoslovakia, 795.
- Barbados, cotton growing, 1173.
- Boots and shoes, rubber, imports from Japan, 1931 and 1932, price at English ports, cost of production of British articles, and question of safeguarding British industry, 979-80.
- British Industries Fair, Birmingham section, increase of foreign buyers and prospect of orders, 789-90.
- "Buy British" stamp-cancelling machines, origin of, 14.
- Canada, Agreement with, carrying out of, 974.
- Colonial sugar industry, position, 1174.
- Denmark:
  - Adverse balance of trade with, 1343.
  - Anglo-Danish Exhibitions, promises to British firms, question as to carrying out of, 172-3.
- Elementary schools, instruction of children on traffic dangers and avoidance of, 1329, 1329-30.
- Greek guaranteed loan, discharge of, prospects, 350.
- Housing, door locks, 1331.
- Jamaica, Japanese imports, competition with Empire products, 1173-4.
- Machine tools, import duty, period of, 173-4.
- Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Bill:
  - Date of Committee stage, 1354.
  - Prospects of taking, 561.

Harlescot,
- former Air Force Mechanical transport repair depot, position re disposal, 1932-4, 1937.

Harris:
- Borve deer forest, applications received for land for settlement in, and negotiations proceeding re acquisition of forest, 1344-5.
- Land seizures in, press statements seen, 1345.

Harris, Sir Percy:
- Cheese, imports, 541.
- Education, continuation schools, 2126.
- Electricity supply, survey of possible requirements and potential development, 1162.
- Housing, slum clearance orders, simplification of procedure, 546.
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 207-8, 248-50, 289-90, 297-9, 322-3, 331, 339; Cons., 837-8, 859-61, 869-70, 872.
- League of Nations, new buildings, tenders, 374.
- Linoleum, drawback in respect of linseed-oil content of, when exported, 2134.
- "Royal Ransom," racehorse, customs duty on, 186.
- St. Pancras borough, Crown estate, vacant rooms, 1962.

[cont.

arris, Sir Percy:—cont.
Switzerland, woollen and worsted tissues, import restrictions, 555.
Unemployment:
  State-assisted schemes, employment on, 2113.
  Work schemes, consultation of business men, 2119.
Unemployment benefit, transitional, needs test, allowances for payment of premiums on endowment policies, 2109, 2110.

artland, Mr. G. A.:
Norwich, proposed new Employment Exchange, 804.
Supply, Air Estimates, Sir Philip Sassoon's statement, 1811.

arvey, Mr. G.:
Flour contracts, nature of, pressed upon London flour factors by Millers' Mutual Association, 565.
Food Council, total cost for 1932 and question of dispensing with, 565.

aslam, Sir John:
Bacon and ham imports, countries infringing quota agreement during January, 1933, 2150.
Benefices (Purchase of Rights of Patronage) Measure, 1933, Debate on Motion for presentation for Royal Assent, 1146.
Bolton, position re union of benefices, 817-8.
Ceylon:
  Cotton goods imports from United Kingdom, decrease in 1932 compared with 1929, and measures for inclusion of cotton cloth in preference, 1343-4.
  Tea imports from, increase 1343-4.
Cinematograph Fund and Film Institute, amount of money accumulated since 1st February and available for use of, 1610.
Coupon trading, inquiry by Committee, 1602.
Parent Coal Corporation, investigation of affairs by Official Receiver, 202.

ayes and Harlington Urban District,
Order for extending Section one of the Sunday Entertainments Act to, approved, 966.

eadlam, Lieut.-Colonel C. M., Parliamentary Secretary, Ministry of Transport:
Electricity supply:
  East Riding, position as regards rural districts of Howden, Riccall and Pocklington, 1341.
  Grid system:
    estimated Cost, report of Electricity Commissioners for 1930-31 referred to, 831-2.
    Expenditure, report and accounts of Central Electricity Board referred to, 831.

Headlam, Lieut.-Colonel C. M.:—cont.
Motors:
  Drivers' hours, enforcement of Section 19 of Road Traffic Act, difficulty and action re, 2124.
  Driving licences:
    Knowledge of code of the road as condition of issue, under consideration, 820.
    Oral examination on rules of the road for new applicants, legislation would be required, and not considered necessary at present, but question to be borne in mind, 1326-7.
  Lorry drivers' hours:
    Accidents at Kilnwood and at Eastriggs where excessive hours had been worked, 2123.
    more Effective means for enforcement of law re, under consideration, 2123, 2124.
Rail and road transport, taxation of road vehicles, Budget cannot be anticipated, 1325-6, 1326.
Road Traffic Act, 1930, Section 111 (2), Regulations, consultation with representative organisations before making, 2124-5.
Roads, pedestrians' paths across London streets, indication of, under consideration by Committee on Traffic Signs, and suggestion as to use of metal studs to be brought to notice of Department, 1326.
Traffic:
  Accidents:
    Causes, removal by further legislation, doubt as to, 820.
    Fatal, investigation of causes, 820.
  White lines:
    at Corners, order to make compulsory, no power to make, 819.
    Use of, to be dealt with in report of Departmental Committee, 819.

Heilgers, Captain F. F. A.:
Agricultural Marketing Bill, 2R, 1727-32.
Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 220-1.

Henderson, Lieut.-Colonel Sir Vivian,
Persistent Offenders Committee, prospects of legislation to carry out recommendations of, 1360.

Heneage, Lieut.-Colonel A. P.:
Lincolnshire:
  Bombing and machine gun practice, hardships to inhabitants, and proposals re, 1930-2.
  Broadcasting of agricultural prices, 540, 542.
Poultry, bacillary white diarrhoea, 540.
Supply, Air Estimates, Works, Buildings and Lands, Com., 1930-2, 1937.

Hepworth, Mr. J.:
- British Industries Fair, volume of business transacted at, 194-5.
- Rail and Road Conference Report:
  - Government proposals, circulation to interests affected before intimation to the House, 358.
  - Recommendations, effect on rates, 1967-8.
- Roads, expenditure, advisory committee representing users and providers of road transport, suggestion, 1179.
- Selby toll bridge, progress of negotiations for purchase and freeing of, 1178.
- World Economic Conference, British representatives, and experts to be attached to, 1364.
- Yorkshire:
  - Public works loans, number and nature of applications put forward during last six months, and results, 571.
  - School fees for secondary school pupils approved as result of Circular 1421, 563-4.

Herbert, Captain S.:
- Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and Royal Military College, Sandhurst, amalgamation suggestion, 1387-9.
- Supply, Army Estimates, Mr. Cooper's statement, 1386-9.

Hicks, Mr. E. G.:
- Canada, increased exports to, since grant of preferences arising out of Ottawa Agreements, 170.
- Chingford, town-planning scheme, factory extension question, 2153.
- Customs and Excise Department, staff, 380.
- Housing, subsidy, definition, 1332.
- Housing, Scotland, subsidy houses, extension of date for completion, 374.
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 244-5, 282-5, 324, 326, 327-8, 331; Cons., 833-5, 846, 875-6; 3R, 944-9, 953.
- India:
  - Bangalore civil and military station, Mysore durbar's case for retrocession of, consideration by Governments of United Kingdom and India, and decision, 5.
  - Military Academy, nominations of non-commissioned Indian soldiers for admission to, and communities from which drawn, 3.
- Insurance policies, lapsing of, amendment of law in favour of policy holders, 22.
- Lowdham Grange Borstal Institution, promotion of officer over others, 1792.
- Malaya:
  - Cadet services, names of selection board and qualifications demanded of candidates, 352.
  - Civil Service cadets, recruitment method, 352.
  - Workmen's Compensation Act, position re putting into force, 351.

Hicks, Mr. E. G.:—cont.
- Navy:
  - Dockyards and naval depots, unestablished men, certain information requested, 829-30.
  - Motor ambulances, particulars re, 700.
- Pensions, men suffering from war disabilities, referring of, to panel doctors for treatment, 1598.
- Poor law:
  - London County institutions, aged people in, removal to other institutions, sometimes far from friends, 548-9.
  - Relief, refusal to persons receiving unemployment benefit or transitional payment, in Area VII of London Public Assistance Committee, 1323.
- Post Office, men retiring at 60, safeguarding of families in event of death before 65, 13-14.
- Poverty, widespread, Debate on Motion, 1205-14.
- Trade Unions, membership, 1606.
- Woolwich, unemployment on latest convenient date and same period in 1932, 528.
- World Economic Conference, consideration of question of reduction of hours of labour, 371, 372.

Hills, Rt. Hon. Major J. W.:
- Arms and munitions of war, exports to China and Japan, embargo, approval of policy, 93-4.
- China and Japan, Debate in Committee on Supply, 92-5.
- Doncaster Area Drainage Bill, Com., 960, 961-2.
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 250-2.
- Male servant licence duty, relief to persons genuinely giving work to men otherwise unemployed, 696.
- Municipal Corporations Audit Bill, 2R, 1534-6.
- Supply, Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 92-5.

Hoare, Lieut.-Colonel Rt. Hon. Sir Samuel J. G., Secretary of State for India:
- Afghanistan, fresh trade negotiations with, by Government of India, no present intention of, 1589.
- Burma:
  - Future of, decision a matter for Legislative Council, and case not to be dealt with specifically in White Paper on Indian Reforms, 787.
  - Government:
    - Loan operations, dependent on future developments, 1585.
    - Revenue receipts in excess of expenditure charged to revenue, 1931-32, 1585.
  - Separation from India, Round Table Conference for discussion of, not proposed, 787.

[cont.

Hoare, Lieut.-Colonel Rt. Hon. Sir Samuel J. G.:—cont.

- Ceylon, unification with future Government of India:
  - Attitude of inhabitants, question should be addressed to Secretary of State for the Colonies, 781.
  - no Steps for, under consideration, 781.
- Federated Malay States, Indian community, grievances of, memorandum re, no information as to action by Government of India, 1609.
- India:
  - Allahabad, prohibition of meeting at, reason for, 782-3, 783.
  - Army:
    - Expenditure, indirect contribution by Indian States, 570-1, 571.
    - Indian Artillery, recruitment of non-martial classes, no information at present, 1621.
    - Reserve, to be predominantly Indian, Press statement seen, 1621.
  - Assam, oil revenue, whole question of future allocation of Indian revenues to be considered with constitutional proposals, 1587.
  - Benares, women volunteers' case, 1586.
  - Berar, arrangements in respect of, under Federal Constitution under consideration, and no statement possible, 786.
  - Broadcasting:
    - Prohibition of possession of apparatus without licence, Bill introduced for, 785.
    - Receiving licences, number, no information, 785.
  - Budget, summary of, to be supplied, 381.
  - Chittagong area, collective fines:
    - Arresting of process of, possible if civil population helped to arrest terrorists, 784.
    - Collection, progress, 784.
    - Use of money collected, 784.
  - raw Cinema films, import duty, increase in British preference, 788.
  - Civil aviation, steps for encouraging development of, report on Progress of Civil Aviation in India for 1931-32 referred to, 785.
  - Concession pasages, expenditure on, in 12 months ended 30th September, 1932, total and amount for passages in ships flying British flag, 779.
  - future Constitution:
    - Bill, date of introduction dependent on work of Select Committee, 780-1.
    - Joint Select Committee:
      - Constitution, Resolution to be awaited, 996-7.
      - Power to confer with Indian representatives, 996-7.
      - Procedure, questions of, matters for Committee, and decisions cannot be anticipated, 1961.
      - Setting up of, before Easter hoped for, 780, 782.

Hoare, Lieut.-Colonel Rt. Hon. Sir Samuel J. G.:—cont.

- India:—cont.
  - future Constitution:—cont.
    - Parliament the ultimate tribunal, 1587.
  - Cotton:
    - Imports, levy of duty on non-Empire cotton, no communication received from Government of India re, 1590.
    - Long-staple, demonstration tests, to be organised in Lancashire by Indian Central Cotton Committee, 786.
  - Cotton and sugar-cane and their rotation crops, inquiry under consideration with regard to cost of cultivation, no information as to nature of, 786.
  - Delhi conspiracy trial, communiqué issued by Government of India to be supplied, no information as to progress with individual cases, or names of accused, 1590.
  - Education, in rural areas and for depressed classes, required information not available as education under control of Government of India, 828.
  - all-India Federation:
    - Circular distributed from Cambridge claimed to be on behalf of Moslems of India, no special action considered necessary, 781.
    - Minorities, safeguards for, Government proposals to be awaited, 781.
    - Secretary of State in constant communication with representative Moslems, 781.
  - Indians repatriated from South Africa under assisted emigration scheme, number during first eight months of 1932, 785.
  - Labour, Bill re control of deductions from wages of Indian workers, copy to be supplied, 780.
  - Land mortgage banks for provision of long-term loans, no recommendation yet received from Government of India, 786.
  - Legislative Assembly, general election to, postponement, 1586-7.
  - Medical Council Bill:
    - Exclusion of Indian medical licentiates from provisions of, representations from Indian Medical Association, question of Government of India on, no information re, 780.
    - Referred to Select Committee of Legislative Assembly, 780.
  - Meerut conspiracy trial:
    - Appeals:
      - Filed by two prisoners, 782.
      - Hearing of, probable date, 782.
      - Prisoners, treatment of, 570, 782, 822.

Hoare, Lieut.-Colonel Rt. Hon. Sir Samuel J. G.:—cont.
India:—cont.
Midnapore district, collective fines:
Amount of, no information as to collection, 784.
Arresting of process of, possible if civil population helped to arrest terrorists, 784.
Use of money collected, 784.
Dr. Mohamad Alam, passport to Kenya, no information as to refusal, and matter one for authorities in India, 2156.
Police, future of, Government proposals must be awaited, 781-2, 782.
Prisoners, political, women, night journeys, 1590.
Punjab:
Land Alienation Act, extension to Province of Delhi, matter within discretion of authorities in India, 787.
Sub-judgeships, appointment of candidates related to judicial officers over others qualified by competitive examination, Press statement seen and inquiries being made, 828.
Railways, legislation introduced to enable certain companies to operate motor transport without present restrictions, and extension to other railways to be considered if passed, 1585.
Reserve Bank Bill, previous reply referred to, 570.
Royal Engineers, number of officers and men trained in handling of railway locomotives in 1929, 1930, 1931 and 1932, information would be obtained if desired, 828.
Royal Indian Marine, Indians admitted to, 787.
Sikh prisoners sentenced to transportation for life in 1914 and 1915, agitation for release of, but no action by Government known of, 2155.
Silver, purchase of, not proposed, 827.
Tariff Board, report not to be issued until final decision taken on recommendations, and prospects of, 1589.
Territorial and Auxiliary Forces Committee, report submitted in 1925, recommendations considered in 1926 and approved with minor modifications in 1927, 827.
Trade commissioners, further appointments not proposed by Government of India at present, for reasons of economy, 785.
Universities, military science as optional subject, no information as to, but inquiries would be made if desired, 570.

Holdsworth, Mr. H.:
Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 317-8; Cons., 856, 874-5.
Import Duties Act, Debate on Motion for Adjournment, 511.

Holdsworth, Mr. H.:—cont.
Kenya:
Goldfield, rents from leases of lands, crediting of, to native councils, 353.
Native Councils of Reserves, consultation of, before leasing of any particular piece of land, 353.
Woollen and worsted textile industry, employment statistics on certain dates, 520.

Holland:
no Commercial negotiations with, 171.
Milk products, surcharges on, for home consumption, system and effect on exports, 7-8.

Hong Kong,
Mui-tsai, half-yearly reports from Governor based on information collected by inspectors, placed in Library, 1160.

Honours (Prevention of Abuses) Act:
Case of Mr. J. Maundy Gregory, 543.
Complaints made to police under, and action on, 543.

Hop pickers, numbers employed in certain years, information not available, 25-6.

Hope, Captain Hon. A. O. J.:
Albany Street barracks, question as to future of, 1401.
Army:
Changes of station, too frequent, 1399-400.
Horses, question as to position re supply, in event of mobilisation, 1399.
Royal Military Academy and Royal Military College, amalgamation advocated, 1400-1.
new Uniform, 1401.
Supply, Army Estimates, Mr. Cooper's statement, 1398-401.
Territorial Army camps, restoration, approval, 1398-9.

Hopkinson, Mr. A.,
poverty, widespread, Debate on Motion, 1215-24, 1226.

Hops:
estimated Annual value of crop during last five years, 1603-4.
Duty, net receipts in 1932, 696.

Horden, Durham:
Ex-service men living in huts, no knowledge of, but any information would be considered, 998-9.
Wooden huts, notice to tenants to leave, and non-provision of other accommodation, inquiries being made, 1962.

Hore-Belisha, Mr. L., Financial Secretary, Treasury:
Air Force, Accountant Branch, commissions, age limits, 831.

[cont.

ore-Belisha, Mr. L.:—cont.
- Beer:
  - Duty:
    - Change in, estimate of effect, Budget statement must be awaited, 1781.
    - Reduction of, to enable price to be reduced by 2d. a pint, brewers bearing 25 per cent. of loss of revenue, suggestion noted, 1781-2.
  - Imported, number of barrels in respect of which rebate granted in 1932, 695.
  - Number of bulk barrels brewed during year ended 30th September, 1932, 695.
- Beer, spirits, British wine and hops, net receipts of duty from, in 1932, 696.
- Brewing, hops used in, quantities in years ending 30th September, 1914, 1930 and 1932, particulars for British hops not available, 202.
- British Museum, Entomological Department, staffing of, 182.
- Civil Service:
  - Accounting duties, recruitment for, 830-1.
  - Clerical classes:
    - Complements cannot be specially increased to provide additional promotions, 984.
    - P, PU and S clerks, number whose promotion to, authorised during 12 months ending on 31st March, 1933, information to be supplied when available, 1621.
    - P-class and S-class men promoted to, information to be supplied for 12 months ending 31st March, 1933, when available, 2154.
    - Recruitment:
      - Open competition, suspension not in public interest, 994.
      - by Promotion, 984.
  - Ex-service men:
    - Establishment, position re, 363, 556, 1622.
    - Retention until age of 65, provision for, not possible, 1622.
  - Hours of duty, considered by Royal Commission and no comparison recently made or proposed, with those worked under London County Council at County Hall, 555-6.
  - P-class men, promotion position, 995.
- Co-operative societies:
  - Committee:
    - Evidence, publication not proposed at present, owing to expense, 1170-2.
    - List of witnesses to be found in appendix to report, 1170.
    - Report:
      - Conference of Prime Minister with representatives of societies, 19.
      - to be Presented as White Paper, 19.
  - Income tax, adoption of recommendations of Committee, Budget statement cannot be anticipated, 1782.
- Customs duties, "Royal Ransom" racehorse, 186-7, 1340-1.

Hore-Belisha, Mr. L.:—cont.
- Customs and Excise Department, staff:
  - Increase since October 1931, and approximate annual cost, 27.
  - Particulars requested to be supplied, 380.
- Death duties, insurance to meet, non-inclusion of amount in valuation of estate for duties, question frequently considered and reasons against, 1609.
- Denmark, Falster Zealand Bridge contract, question under consideration, 1765-6.
- Distilling, quantities of various materials used in, and number of proof gallons distilled in year ended 30th September, 1932, 696.
- Economic situation, Government policy, speeches during Debate referred to, 1172.
- Entertainments Duty:
  - Exemption from:
    - Concert in aid of Loughborough centre for unemployed, 994.
    - Trade exhibitions, 1364.
  - Revenue from, information as to, at various prices of admission and in respect of particular classes of entertainment, not available, 28, 375.
- Fish, salted, drawback on re-export of, official statement in Press referred to, 982.
- Foreign loans, embargo on, reason for policy, and reference to previous reply as to future of, 1000-1.
- Housing, loans under Small Dwellings Acquisition Acts, rate of interest, previous reply referred to, 373.
- Imperial preference, Empire content, measures for checking and ensuring observance of British requirements, 982.
- Import duties:
  - Changes in rates, procedure for dealing with, 1766.
  - Revenue from, required information to be supplied, as far as possible, 2132.
  - increased Staff necessitated by recent Acts, and cost, 27-8.
- Import Duties Advisory Committee, staff, number and cost, 27.
- Insurance policies, lapsing of, previous reply referred to, and whole matter the subject of an inquiry, 22.
- Licensed premises, rateable values, 182-3.
- Linoleum, drawback in respect of linseed-oil content of, when exported, arrangements not yet made for, 2133-4.
- Male servant licence duty, relief to persons genuinely giving work to men otherwise unemployed, previous reply referred to, 696.
- National finance:
  - 5 per cent. War Loan conversion, cost of advertising, 29.
  - Optional conversion issues, restriction:
    - Local authorities not prevented from issuing stock for purpose of funding mortgages, 1782.
    - Reason for, and no statement as to when to be withdrawn, 1782.
  - Trustee securities, new issues, 1782.

Hore-Belisha, Mr. L.:—cont.
- Northern Ireland, spirits, beer and wine, quantities retained for consumption in, in 1932, and estimated attributable revenue, 28.
- Shipbreaking, duty on ships imported for, if effect injurious, representations could be made to Advisory Committee, 1767.
- Stationery Office, advertising contracts, placing of, after competitive tender, 1966-7.
- Stoke-on-Trent Corporation, raising of loan by, permission not refused, if prior agreement reached with Bank of England as to amount and date of issue, 1965-6.
- Tea duties, change in, estimate of effect, Budget statement must be awaited, 1781.
- Trade, adverse balance, estimate for 1932, 1766.
- Trade, Board of, staff necessitated by administration of Import Duties Act, number and cost, 27-8.
- Unemployment benefit, transitional payments, cost from 1st July, 1933, to 31st March, 1934, provisional estimate, 16.

Horsbrugh, Miss F.,
- Argentina, meat imports from, 1931 and 1932, percentage in jute wrappers manufactured in United Kingdom, 8.

Horses:
- for Agricultural purposes, no reason to suppose supply likely to prove inadequate, 808.
- Army, see under Army.
- Heavy horse-breeding schemes, adequacy of, 808.

Hospitals, see under Public Health.

Hours of labour:
- Conventions, difficulties in connection with, 670.
- 40-hour week, difficulties in connection with, 653, 686.
- Reduction:
  - Consultation of various organisations re, 535-6.
  - Need for industrial survey in England and international inquiry, 668-9.
  - as Remedy for unemployment, 679.
- Washington Hours Convention, see that title.

House of Commons:
- Bradlaugh, Charles, memorial to, no charge on public funds, possible, 1348.
- Division Lists, discontinuance of printing, in Votes and Proceedings, various parties consulted re, but failure to get agreement, and no action proposed, 1784-6.
- Eliot, Sir John, no public money to be expended on proposed memorial to, 1174.

House of Commons:—cont.
- Memorials in, procedure re, and copy of rules and regulations to be supplied, 1348-9.
- Refreshment Department, cider, consumption in 1932, and brands of, 2140.
- Standing Orders, appointment of technical committee, composition and terms of reference, 1783-4, 1785.
- Telephone kiosks, reconstruction of 18 during Christmas Recess, and cost of, 1349.

Houses of Parliament,
- Westminster Hall, Warren Hastings tablet, new inscription, 363.

Housing:
- Direct labour, number of local authorities having commenced house building operations by, since 1st January, 1932, 2153.
- Door locks, quality, 1330-1, 1331.
- Improvement areas, number of local authorities making resolutions and number of areas affected, since passing of 1930 Act, confirmation of declarations by Minister not required, 1331.
- Leak urban district council scheme, particulars being supplied, 814.
- Loans under Small Dwellings Acquisition Acts, rate of interest, previous reply referred to, 373.
- Materials:
  - Foreign, required information not available, 1780.
  - Measures re use of home and Empire goods and materials, 1780.
- Reconditioning:
  - Committee, prospects of report, 545.
  - in Urban districts, position re, 1611-2.
- Rural districts, contributions by county councils towards provision of houses for members of agricultural population, 2127-8.
- Rural Workers Acts:
  - Administration by rural district councils, sympathetic consideration to be given to any application, 2127.
  - Encouragement of use of, measures for, 15.
  - Houses dealt with under, required statement to be supplied, 572.
- Slum Clearance Act, 1930:
  - Application to rural areas, question of issue of statement to local authorities, 184.
  - Subsidy under, in terms of rent, 184.
- Slum clearance orders:
  - Confirmation of, time ordinarily taken for, 545-6.
  - Simplification of machinery and expedition of procedure, constant attention to question of, 546.
- Small Dwellings Acquisition Act:
  - Advances under, total amount in 12 months ended 30th September, 1932, and number of houses, 999.
  - Loans to local authorities, refusal of applications for, no knowledge of, but inquiries would be made, 999.

[cont.

ousing :—cont.
Subsidised houses:
  Class of tenants, previous reply referred to, and measures taken re, 1331-2.
  Rents, previous replies referred to, 2272.
Syndicates subsidised by local authorities, no knowledge of, 832.
Working-class houses, Committee, terms of reference and composition, 814-5.

ousing (Financial Provisions) Bill,
Instruction to Committee unnecessary, 203; Com., 203-346; Cons., 833-84; 3R, 883-958.

ousing, Scotland:
Basement houses, Blanefield, no information regarding, but inquiries being made, 558.
Construction, statistics and particulars of houses, last available 12 months, 1612-3.
Numbers of houses under construction, and approved, but not begun, 1st October, 1930, 1931 and 1932, and on 1st of each month since, 1613-5.
Public inquiry:
  Blanefield, requests for, 558.
  Strathblane requests for, 558.
Rural Housing Act, 1931, particulars as to number of houses approved under, and subsidies, 1615-6.
Rural Workers Act, 1926:
  List of county councils not operating schemes under, at 1st March, 1932 and 1933, 1616.
  Numbers of houses in respect of which loans and grants approved during each of three latest quarters for which information available, 1616-7.
Slum Clearance Act, 1930, areas where houses built under, number of houses and rents, statement being supplied, 157-8.
Slum clearance houses, number in course of construction on 1st January each year, 1925 to 1932, and on 1st of each month since January, 1932, 1613-4.
State-aided houses, reservation as far as possible for working clases, position re, 1363.
Subsidy houses, question of extension of date for completion, 373-4.

oward, Mr. T. F.,
taxation, excessive, Debate on Motion, 422.

owden rural district,
electrical supply, position as regards, 1341.

udson, Captain A. U. M., Lord of the Treasury:
Hospitals, numbers, beds, and average cost per patient per week in each type, information to be supplied, 1778.
Housing, materials:
  Foreign, required information not available, 1780.
  Measures re use of home and Empire goods and materials, 1780.

Hudson, Captain A. U. M. :—cont.
Local Government officers, remuneration for insurance work, 997.
Maternity mortality, rates, reference to Registrar-General's Statistical Review for 1931 for required information, 1778.
Rates, assessment of houses on which work done as result of local campaigns for relief of unemployment, communication addressed to local authorities by Central Valuation Committee, 1778.
Royal Seamen's Pension Fund:
  Conditions governing award of pensions, reference to copy of scheme in Library, and no reason to think that terms departed from, but any particular case would be inquired into, 1778-9.
  Refusal of pension, normal practice to inform applicant of reason, 1779.
  Unsuccessful applicants, submission of subsequent applications, 1779-80.

Hudson, Mr. R. S., Parliamentary Secretary, Ministry of Labour:
Cotton industry dispute, position re unemployment benefit, 690.
Hours, 40-hour week, difficulties in connection with, 686.
International Labour Office:
  British contribution to, 689.
  40-hour proposals, British Government attitude, 691-2.
Jersey, seasonal workers sent to, position re unemployment insurance, 688.
Poor law relief, increased burden of, explanation, 690-1.
Supply, Civil Estimates, Vote on Account, Rep., 619, 633, 661, 681-92.
Tyneside area, transitional payments, differences in scales in, and question to be borne in mind in connection with future legislation, 368.
Unemployment:
  Debate on Vote on Account, 619, 633, 661, 681-92.
  Juvenile instruction centres, etc., numbers at, 681.
  Training centres:
    Men sent to, away from homes, system, 682.
    Particulars re, 681-2.
Unemployment benefit:
  Juveniles in receipt of, numbers, 681.
  Substituted work, position re, 687.
  Transitional:
    Applicants, practice re personal hearing, 684.
    Dating back, question of, and position re, 685.
    Means test:
      Ex-service men, allowances to families, position re, 682-3.
      Single persons going into lodgings, 683-4.
    Uniformity of practice, action re, 685-6.

[cont.

Hudson, Mr. R. S.:—cont.
- Unemployment insurance, seasonal workers, position, 661, 687, 688.
- Wolverhampton, transitional payments, administration, 684.

Hull,
- Armistice Day, banning of poppy sales, no power to interfere, 538-9.

Hungary,
- military aeroplanes from Italy, previous reply referred to, and attitude of H.M. Government, 11-12.

Hunter, Captain M. J.:
- Argentina, trade delegation, statement of results of discussions with, 977.
- Arms and munitions of war, exports to China and Japan, embargo, indications of universal agreement with policy of, 794.

Hurd, Sir Percy A.:
- Holland, milk products, exportation to British market, assistance by Government or otherwise, 7, 8.
- Housing:
  - Rural districts, contributions by county councils towards provision of houses for members of agricultural population, 2127-8.
  - Rural Workers Act, 1926:
    - Statement of houses dealt with under, requested, 572.
    - Steps to encourage larger use of, 15.
  - Slum Clearance Act, 1930:
    - Application to rural areas, 184.
    - Subsidy under, amount of, in terms of rent, 184.
- Milk:
  - Marketing scheme, question of establishment of statutory dairymen's board and joint milk council, 2138.
  - Reorganisation Commission, recommendations, legislation on, 12, 13.

Hurst, Sir Gerald B.:
- Manchester, transitional payments, treatment of disability pensions, 1360.
- Unemployment benefit, transitional, disability pensions, 1360.

Hutchison, Mr. W. G. D.:
- Army Reserve pay, payment weekly instead of quarterly, 569.
- Enamelled ware, antimony poisoning from use of, laying down of standard of safe manufacture, and prohibition of importation of ware not fulfilling requirements of, 1337.
- Housing, loans under Small Dwellings Acquisition Acts, question of large conversion loan, for reduction of interest, 373.
- Magistrates, Metropolitan area, binding over of people on condition of not living within a certain radius of London, 818.

Hutchison, Mr. W. G. D.:—cont.
- Pensions, attributability, appointment of independent medical arbitrator in cases of difference of medical opinion, suggestion, 1003.
- Post Office Advisory Committee, suggestions put forward by members of, publication from time to time, 811.
- Romford Employment Exchanges, finding of employment for Free State Irishmen not permanently resident in England, 526.
- Sewers, gas masks for employés descending into sewers where presence of gas likely, 2130.
- Unemployment, road and sewage work on private estates, suggestion, 533.

Imperial Airways, Limited, see under Aviation.

Imperial preference:
- Empire content:
  - Measures for checking and ensuring observance of British requirements, 982.
  - Percentages of, in operation in Great Britain, and main classes of imports affected, 170-1.
- to Palestine products, considered but not found possible, 379, 829.

Import duties:
- Changes in rates, procedure for dealing with, 1766.
- Revenue from, required information to be supplied, as far as possible, 2132.
- Increased Staff necessitated by recent Acts, and cost, 27-8.

Import Duties Act,
- Debate on Motion for Adjournment, 506-16.

Import Duties Advisory Committee:
- Recommendations, deferring of decision on certain, in present stage of commercial negotiations and discussions with Denmark and Germany, 172.
- Reports and action on, position re, Debate on Motion for Adjournment, 512-6.
- Staff, number and cost, 27.

Income tax:
- Companies' reserves, 201.
- Co-operative societies, Budget statement cannot be anticipated, 1782.
- Reduction, estimated cost, previous reply referred to, 2131.
- Shareholders in limited companies and members of co-operative societies, required statistics not available, 1339-40.

India:
- Allahabad, prohibition of meeting at, reason for, 782-3, 783.
- Alwar State:
  - Meo movement, no mention of arrests in British India in connection with, in reports, but any persons arrested would be tried by ordinary courts, 4.

[cont.

India:—cont.
Alwar State:—cont.
 Prime Minister and Revenue Minister, member of Indian Political Department being lent to hold appointment of, and duties of, 4.
Army:
 Expenditure, indirect contribution by Indian States, 570-1.
 Indian Artillery, recruitment of non-martial classes, no information at present, 1621.
 Reserve, to be predominantly Indian, Press statement seen, 1621.
Assam, oil revenue, whole question of future allocation of Indian revenues to be considered with constitutional proposals, 1587.
Bangalore civil and military station, Mysore durbar's case for retrocession of, not yet considered by H.M. Government, and no further statement possible, 5.
Benares, women volunteers case, 1585-6.
Berar:
 Arrangements in respect of, under Federal Constitution under consideration, and no statement possible, 786.
 Constitutional future of, consideration of wishes of the people, previous reply referred to, 6.
Broadcasting:
 Prohibition of possession of receiving apparatus without licence, Bill introduced for, 785.
 Receiving licences, number, no information, 785.
Budget, summary of, to be supplied, 381.
Chittagong area, collective fines:
 Arresting of process of, possible if civil population helped to arrest terrorists, 784.
 Collection, progress, 784.
 Use of money collected, 784.
raw Cinema films, import duty, increase in British preference, 788.
Civil aviation, steps for encouraging development of, report on Progress of Civil Aviation in India for 1931-32 referred to, 785.
Commodity prices, question of raising level of, 4.
Communal representation, position re, 3-4.
Concession passages, expenditure on, in 12 months ended 30th September, 1932, total and amount for passages in ships flying British flag, 779-80.
future Constitution:
 Bill, date of introduction dependent on work of Select Committee, 780-1.
 Joint Select Committee:
  Constitution, Resolution to be awaited, 996-7.
  Power to confer with Indian representatives, 995-7.
   Question disallowance as Private Notice question, 561-2.
  Procedure, questions of, matters for Committee, and decisions cannot be anticipated, 1960-1.
  Setting up of:
   before Easter hoped for, 780, 782.
   Procedure, and opportunities for discussion, 1588.

India:—cont.
future Constitution:—cont.
 Parliament the ultimate tribunal, 1587.
 White Paper, discussion, opportunity for, 1588.
Cotton imports, levy of duty on non-Empire cotton, no communication received from Government of India re, 1590.
Cotton, long-staple, demonstration tests to be organised in Lancashire by Indian Central Cotton Committee, 786.
Cotton and sugar-cane and their rotation crops, inquiry under consideration with regard to cost of cultivation, no information as to nature of, 786.
Delhi conspiracy trial, communiqué issued by Government of India to be supplied, no information as to progress with individual cases or names of accused, 1589-90.
Education, in rural areas and for depressed classes, required information not available as education under control of Government of India, 828.
Government of, fresh trade negotiations with Afghanistan, no present intention of, 1589.
Governor-General's Executive Council, Moslem member, 779.
All-India Federation:
 Circular distributed from Cambridge claimed to be on behalf of Moslems of India, no special action considered necessary, 781.
 Minorities, safeguards for, Government proposals to be awaited, 781.
 Secretary of State in constant communication with representative Moslems, 781.
All-India Medical Council Bill, already introduced, 6.
Indians repatriated from South Africa under assisted emigration scheme, number during first 8 months of 1932, 785.
Labour, Bill re control of deductions from wages of Indian workers, copy to be supplied, 780.
Land mortgage banks for provision of long-term loans, no recommendation yet received from Government of India, 786.
Legislative Asembly, general election to, postponement, 1586-7.
Linseed and linseed oil from, duties on, 977-8.
Medical Council Bill:
 Exclusion of Indian medical licentiates from provisions of, representations from Indian Medical Association, action of Government of India on, no information re, 780.
 Referred to Select Committee of Legislative Assembly, 780.
Meerut conspiracy trial:
 Appeals:
  Filed by two prisoners, 782.
  Hearing of, probable date, 782.
 Prisoners sentenced at, treatment of, 569-70, 782, 828.

[cont.

India :—cont.
- Midnapore district, collective fines:
  - Amount of, no information as to collection, 784.
  - Arresting of process of, possible if civil population helped to arrest terrorists, 784.
  - Use of money collected, 784.
- Military Academy, number of nominations of non-commisioned Indian soldiers for admission to, during past year, no details of communities from which drawn, 3.
- Dr. Mohamad Alam, passport to Kenya, no information as to refusal, and matter one for authorities in India, 2155-6, 2156.
- Police, future of, Government proposals must be awaited, 781-2.
- Prisoners, political, women, night journeys, 1590.
- Provincial Legislative Councils, Legislatures passing resolutions in favour of, and resolutions against, upper chamber, 5-6.
- Punjab:
  - Land Alienation Act, extension to Province of Delhi, matter within discretion of authorities in India, 787.
  - Sub-judgeships, appointment of candidates related to judicial officers over others qualified by competitive examination, Press statement seen and inquiries being made, 828.
- Railways:
  - Board:
    - Members, one Indian, 2.
    - Secretary, appointment within discretion of Government of India, 2.
  - Contracts under rupee tender system, and previous reply referred to, 2135-6.
  - Legislation introduced to enable certain companies to operate motor transport without present restrictions, and extension to other railways to be considered if passed, 1585.
  - Stores orders, placing of, 1-2.
- Raiya riot case, strictures passed by High Court on administration of justice in lower courts, Press information only, at present, but official notice would receive earnest consideration, 3.
- Reserve Bank:
  - Bill for setting up, prospects, 5, 570.
  - Indian opinion to be consulted in con nection with proposals, 5.
- Royal Engineers, number of officers and men trained in handling of railway locomotives in 1929, 1930, 1931 and 1932, information would be obtained if desired, 828.
- Royal Indian Marine, Indians admitted to, 786-7.
- Sikh prisoners sentenced to transportation for life in 1914 and 1915, agitation for release of, but no action by Government known of, 2155
- Silver, purchase of, not proposed, 827.
- Tariff Board, report not to be issued until final decision taken on recommendations, and prospects of, 1589.

India :—cont.
- Territorial and Auxiliary Forces Committee, report submitted in 1925, recommendations considered in 1926 and approved with minor modifications in 1927, 827.
- Trade commissioners, further appointments not proposed by Government of India at present, for reasons of economy, 785.
- Universities, military science as optional subject, no information as to, but inquiries would be made if desired, 570.

Indian Pay (Temporary Abatements) Bill,
- Com., 1097; Reported, 1097; 3R, 1097.

Inskip, Rt. Hon. Sir Thomas W. H., Attorney-General:
- Benefices (Purchase of Rights of Patronage) Measure, 1933, Debate on Motion for presentation for Royal Assent, 1134-45.
- Business of Courts Committee, legislation to carry out recommendations in interim report under consideration, and immediate action to be taken to carry out recommendations not requiring legislation, 1964.
- Courts of Summary Jurisdiction, appeals to High Court during 1932, particulars, 372.
- Crewe, justices of the peace:
  - Advisory Committee, date of last meeting, no information, 1003.
  - additional Appointments, meeting of Advisory Committee to be held shortly to consider, 1003.
  - Women, attention of advisory committee drawn to non-appointment of, 1003.

Insurance policies,
- lapsing of, previous reply referred to, and whole matter the subject of an inquiry, 22.

International Economic Conference, see World Economic Conference.

International Labour Organisation see under League of Nations.

International law,
- development of, the best security for peace and steps towards disarmament, 2209-10.

Iraq:
- Air Force:
  - Question as to future position of, 1826-7.
  - Work in, during past year, 1800-1.
- Hinaidi aerodrome:
  - Abandonment of, 1957.
  - Permanent buildings and plant, original cost, 1957.

Irish Free State:
- Air service, no direct communication, but establishment of, would be matter for private enterprise, 356-7.
- Claim to share of Road Fund, position re, 1361.
- Dairy produce imports from, required statement to be circulated as soon as possible, 2151.
- Financial dispute, arbitration or negotiation, British Government attitude, 985-7.
- Imposition of further duty on Irish imports, previous reply referred to, 1964.
- Sums withheld by:
  - Previous replies referred to, as to obtaining equivalent sums, 1774-5.
  - Retention in separate Suspense Accounts terminated and moneys to be used for normal Exchequer requirements, 986.
  - Safeguarding of British taxpayer against loss, question under constant consideration, 983.
  - Total, and total amount collected from import duties on Irish goods, 983-4.

Iron and Steel industry,
- South Wales, insured persons, employment and unemployment, 1924, 1931 and 1932, 1620.

Iron and steel and tinplate industries,
- numbers of insured female workers and percentages unemployed as compared with other industries, reference to Ministry of Labour Gazette, 2114.

Italy:
- Agreement, non-delivery of third million tons of coal under, effect on employment, 1322.
- Flying over, position re, 1891.
- Military aeroplanes sent to Hungary, previous reply referred to, and attitude of H.M. Government, 11-12.
- Naval estimates, 1931, 1932 and 1933, 1970.
- Vatican:
  - British Minister, appointment of, 1366.
  - Relation with, 1366.
- Wheat prices, 1782-4.

Jamaica,
- Japanese imports, competition with Empire products, question under consideration, 1173-4.

Janner, Mr. B.:
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 290, 303-5; Cons., 861-3, 870-1.
- Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Bill, 2R, 735-41, 745.

Japan:
- Aircraft manufacture in, not affected by arms embargo, 1351.
- Anglo-Japanese alliance, abandonment of, 2220.
- Arms export to, see under Arms and munitions of war.

Japan:—cont.
- and China, see under China.
- Commercial competition, subject under consideration, and statement to be made when possible, 1173-4, 1946-7.
- Competition of, with cotton industry, see under Cotton industry.
- Emperor, memorandum alleged to have been presented to, by General Tanaka in 1927, 74-5, 105-6.
- Exports from:
  - to British Empire countries, value during 1932, and proportion of total exports, 1759-60.
  - Compensation bounty to United Kingdom industries, previous reply referred to, 1760-1.
- Imports from:
  - China, January and February, 1930, 1931 and 1932, 1761.
  - Rubber footwear, 1931 and 1932, 979-80.
- Relations with Great Britain, position re obligations of Washington Treaty, 10.
- Trade agreement with:
  - Abrogation question, consideration of, 975.
  - no Negotiations with Dominions with regard to their withdrawal from, but any communications would be seriously considered, 2134.

Jehol, see under China and Japan.

Jenkins, Sir William,
- Neath and Pontardawe, numbers of wholly unemployed, temporarily stopped and in casual work for 1929, 1920, 1931, 1932 and up to last available date, 2158.

Jersey:
- Lights and fog signals, measures re, 559-60.
- Military personnel, need for, 969.
- Potato picking, supply of workers for, 589.
- Regular troops in, number, and number of staff officers, Army Estimates referred to, for information as to pay, 175.
- Seasonal workers sent to, position re unemployment insurance, 688.

Joel, Mr. D. J. B.:
- Irish Free State, land purchase annuities, sums confiscated by Government, measures for raising sum equivalent to, 1772.
- Palestine, omission of, from benefits of Imperial preference, 379.

Johnstone, Mr. H.:
- Agricultural Marketing Bill, 2R, 1747.
- Housing:
  - Improvement areas, number scheduled since passing of 1930 Act, and period elapsing between passing of local authority's resolution and confirmation of order, 1331.
  - Slum Clearance Orders, time between local authorities passing resolutions in favour of, and delivery by Minister of sealed order, 545-6.

Johnstone, Mr. H.:—cont.
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 215-20, 333-4.
- Pensions, disallowed claims, fresh medical examinations on receipt of fresh evidence from independent medical men, 20, 21.
- South Shields, mineral leases, policy of Ecclesiastical Commissioners, 995.

Jones, Mr. F. Llewellyn-, see Llewellyn-Jones, Mr. F.

Jones, Mr. J. J.,
- wholesale prices, Debate on Motion, 1301.

Jones, Mr. M.:
- Afghanistan, embargo on foreign-made matches and soap, and question of negotiating trade agreement between India and, 1589.
- Arms and munitions of war, export:
  - to Bolivia and Paraguay, embargo, suggestions made to League of Nations Council as to type of arms, and question as to use of, in negotiations concerning embargo against Japan and China, 1156.
  - to China and Japan:
    - existing Contracts, information as to period of, desired, 78-9.
    - Contracts between British manufacturers and merchants and Governments of, number on 27th February for which licences issued, 367.
    - Embargo, approval of policy, 77-8.
- Army:
  - Estimates, increase, criticism, 1455-63.
  - Mechanisation, results 1457-9.
- China and Japan:
  - Debate in Committee on Supply, 71-9, 92.
  - Japanese ultimatum of 23rd February and measures re safety of British lives and property, 796.
  - Lytton Report, 75-6.
- Coupon trading, inquiry by Committee, 1602.
- Dartmouth College, cadets, fees, 1951.
- Dollis Hill, Post Office Research Station, contract with American company for supply of cinema apparatus, 24.
- Education, secondary school fees, alterations made in scales, 1175.
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 246, 252-3.
- India:
  - Collective fines imposed on Chittagong and Midnapore villages:
    - Amounts received in respect of, and purpose to which allocated, 784.
    - Cessation of, question of, 784.
  - Education, in rural areas, and for depressed classes, lack of funds for implementing legislation for, 828.
  - Import duty on non-Empire cotton, question as to, 1590.
  - Meerut conspiracy trial, appeals, prospects of hearing of, 782.

Jones, Mr. M.:—cont.
- India:—cont.
  - Tariff Board, prospects of issue of report, with view to closure of cotton mills, 1589.
- Japan, Emperor, memorandum alleged to have been presented to, by General Tanaka in 1927, 74-5.
- Liverpool Corporation, deputation re local expenditure on unemployed, 1175.
- Local authorities, expenditure on roads and scavenging, admission for block grant, and percentage of grant, 1611.
- Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill, 2R, 1031.
- National expenditure, investigation by Public Accounts Committee, 1430.
- Navy, cost to State of officer entered as cadet at Dartmouth College and as special-entry cadet, till age of 20, 1950.
- Poor law relief, able-bodied unemployed, as national charge, 1175.
- Shops Acts (1912 to 1928) Amendment Bill, 2R, 2273-83, 2293, 2295, 2331, 2352.
- Supply:
  - Army Estimates, Mr. Cooper's statement, 1430, 1455-63, 1464.
  - Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 71-9, 92.
- Telegraph posts, damage during recent storm in South Wales, repair of, 1168.
- Territorial Army, camps, expenditure on, criticism, 1460-2, 1464.
- Wales, secondary school fees, progress with regard to new arrangements, 1502.

Juvenile offenders,
- Ealing, case of George Samuel Woodward, inquiries being made, 1327.

Juveniles:
- Instruction centres and classes, attendances, etc., 626, 681, 1361.
- whole Question under consideration, 2116.
- Unemployment, see that title.

Kensington Gardens,
- public convenience, recently erected, planting of shrubs on garden side of, 1167-8.

Kenya:
- Gold, discoveries by prospectors in areas at present closed to prospecting made before areas closed, 1160.
- Goldfield:
  - Compensation to natives for disturbance, 1000.
  - Land leased for mining, exclusion from Reserve in exchange for alternative land or money payment to local native council of full capital value, 353.
  - Land not required for gold winning and restored to natives, provision for repair of surface disturbance not necessary as full compensation already paid, 353-4.
  - Natives employed in gold winning, provision for compensation for death, serious injury or occupational diseases, 354.

[cont.

Kenya:—cont.
- Indian police officers, appointment in white settled areas, no protests by white settlers against, known of, 24.
- Kakamega area, not known to have been formally declared open to prospecting, as formality unnecessary, 1180.
- Kavirondo Reserve, area in, closed to prospecting, 1180.
- Land Commission, prospects of report, interim report not proposed, 556.
- Leasing of any particular piece of land, Native Council of North Kavirondo Reserve not an appropriate body for consultation, but provision for expression of native views, 353.
- Mining claims:
  - Registered in Kavirondo Reserve, 1161.
  - Registration of, ownership of land not affected by, 1160-1.
  - Rights of holders over, and compensation payable by, 1160-1.
- Mining Ordinance, claims granted under, 1160-1.
- Mining Ordinance, 1931, amendment re prospecting in native reserves, 1179-80.
- Natives, rights as regards land purchase, 1160.

Kenya-Uganda Railways and Harbours Administration,
- number of Asiatics employed by, 31st December, 1931, and information for 1921 would be inquired for, if desired, 1180.

Kerr, Lieut.-Colonel Charles:
- Municipal Corporations Audit Bill, 2R, 1511-4, 1563.
- Wemyss Coal Company, complaint by Hawick Co-operative Society against standard tonnage allotted to, finding of Scottish Commission of Investigation, 2139.
- World Economic Conference, Debate on Motion, 2040-2.

Kerr, Mr. H. W.,
- Argentina, Exchange difficulties, elimination as result of visit of trade delegation, 977.

Kimball, Mr. L.,
- Entertainments Duty, entertainments in aid of centres for unemployed, and case of Loughborough, 993-4.

King's Proctor:
- Abolition, consideration not proposed, 1775.
- Department, expenditure during 1932 and number of cases intervened in, 1774-5.

Kielder,
- telephone call office at, not possible, owing to heavy costs, 1792.

Kirkpatrick, Mr. W. M.:
- Manchuria, question re future administration of, 1159.
- Supply, Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 74, 127.
- Trade Commissioners and commercial counsellors, control of, 1600.

Kirkwood, Mr. D.:
- Afforestation, unemployment among skilled workers, 1319-20.
- Agriculture, Scotland:
  - Oats, prices, Debate on Motion, 1307.
  - Shepherds and ploughmen, married, reduction of wages to £30 a year with small perquisites, and question of action re, 1769, 1770.
- Coal mining industry, Debate on Motion, 481, 483.
- Entertainments duty:
  - Amounts collected for years ended 7th November, 1931, and 5th November, 1932, and proportion of amount in latter period from admission prices of 7d. and under, 2154.
  - Cinemas, falling off in attendances as result of reimposition of duty on prices of admission of 6d. and under, and resulting loss of revenue, 2154.
- Harris, applications from men in, for settlement in Borve deer forest, and question of acquisition of forest for land settlement, 1344, 1345.
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 216.
- Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill, 2R, 1052, 1053, 1054, 1056-60, 1067.
- Supply:
  - Army Estimates:
    - Mr. Cooper's statement, 1464.
    - Number of land forces, Com., 1476.
  - Civil Estimates, Vote on Account, Rep., 591, 592.
- Unemployment:
  - Debate on Vote on Account, 591, 592.
  - Government schemes for alleviation of, 533.
  - Juveniles, 1321.
  - Newcastle, Gateshead and Dewsbury, question of comparison with West of Scotland, 520.

Knight, Mr. G. W. Holford:
- Magistrates, calling of attention of, to new statutory facilities for assistance to poor prisoners in police courts, 1327.
- Polish corridor case, 1944.
- Supply, Navy Estimates, Sir Bolton Eyres Monsell's statement, 2201-6.
- Taximeter cabs, condition, 537.
- Trade routes, protection of, regulation by international law with provision of tribunal for consideration of disputes, suggestion, 2203-6.
- Visiting Forces (British Commonwealth) Bill, Cons., 1121.

Knox, Major-General Sir Alfred:
- Agriculture:
  - Barley, acreage under, in 1914, 1930 and 1932, 26.
  - Workers, unemployment statistics for certain counties, 200.
- Beer duty, revenue from, in nine months ended 31st December, 1930 and 1932, 551-2.
- Brewing, amount of British hops consumed in 1914, 1930 and 1932, 201.
- Chepping Wycombe borough, extension, 380.

[cont.

Knox, Major-General Sir Alfred:—cont.
- China, Shanghai, withdrawal of British battalion, obtaining of opinion of local British residents before, 968-9.
- India:
  - all-India Federation, Moslems of certain provinces, appeal on behalf of, reply to, 781.
  - Joint Select Committee, power to confer with Indian representatives, 996.
  - Legislative Assembly, postponement of general election, 1586, 1587.
  - Police, handing over to Ministers in Provinces and question of future efficiency of, safeguards for ensuring, 781, 782.
- Machinery, refund of duty on certain machinery imported between 1st March, 1931, and 16th June, 1931, 552.
- Russia:
  - Imports from, and exports to, 1932, 829.
  - Soviet representatives in London, same treatment as regards import of articles for own use, as that given to British representatives in, suggestion, 792.

Lace machinery,
- exports to France, surtax on, representations made re, 976-7.

Lamb, Sir Joseph Q.:
- Agricultural Marketing Bill, 2R, 1650, 1726-9.
- Denmark, trade negotiations with, and question of effect on operation of schemes under Agricultural Marketing Act, 2138-9.
- Export subsidies in foreign countries and British Dominions, 1006.
- House of Commons Division Lists, question of discontinuance of printing in Votes and Proceedings, 1786.

Lambert, Rt. Hon. G.:
- Admiralty:
  - Co-operation with Air Ministry, question as to, 2183-5.
  - Staff, increase in, since July, 1914, and decrease in personnel of Navy, 2182-3.
- Butter:
  - Blending, question of action re, 13.
  - Devon Vale blend, conviction at Ealing for sale of blend of Australian and Russian butter as, 13.
- Meat and dairy produce, imports, 806, 1617.
- Naval bases, situation of, 2185.
- Newfoundland, loan to, guaranteed by British Government, 179.
- Singapore base, expenditure on, and question as to future of, 2186.
- Supply, Navy Estimates, Sir Bolton Eyres Monsell's statement, 2165, 2181-6.
- Taxation, excessive, Debate on Motion, 413-6.

Lanark County and burghs:
- Out-relief, expenditure on, 12 months ended 15th May, 1930, 1931 and 1932, 1793-4.
- Unemployment benefit, expenditure on, 1931 and 1932, 1793-4.

Lancashire:
- Rates, estimated increase or decrease in rate income in 1932-33 as compared with preceding year, in each of 12 most populous towns, 197-8.
- Transitional payments, administration, 614-7, 619-21.

Land drainage:
- Execution of work, position re, 1336-7.
- River works, position re grants, 809-10, 810.

Lansbury, Rt. Hon. G.:
- Agricultural Marketing Bill, 2R, 1634, 1635.
- Air Force, reduction advocated, 1925-8.
- Arms and munitions of war, exports:
  - to China and Japan, embargo:
    - Removal of, 1592-3.
    - Reversal of decision, opportunity to House of discussing and voting on, 795.
  - Embargo, statement re, 1592.
  - to Japan, embargo advocated, 45-9.
- Budget, date of, 2144.
- Business of the House, course of, 189-90, 560, 560-1, 823, 824, 1353-4, 1355, 1501-2, 2144, 2146.
- China and Japan:
  - Debate in Committee on Supply, 34-50, 52, 67.
  - Finance and credit for Japan, embargo advocated, 45-7.
  - League of Nations decision re, and question of action on, 37-42, 44-6.
- Disarmament Conference:
  - Statement requested, 820.
  - Statement in the Press before communication to the House, criticism, 820-2.
  - forthcoming Visit of Prime Minister and Foreign Secretary, 821, 822-3.
- Germany, situation in, 376, 377.
- Government offices, Whitehall scheme, consultation of the House before arriving at decision re open space, 362.
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 243, 247, 314, 318-20; Cons., 872; 3R, 889, 890, 891.
- India, Joint Select Committee, position of Indians at meetings of, 1588.
- Irish Free State:
  - Financial dispute with:
    - Arbitration question, 985-6.
    - recent Communication from Ireland, 984.
  - Import duties on goods from, receipts from, 983, 984.
- Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill, 2R, 1080.
- Poor law, London County Institutions, aged people in, removal to other institutions, sometimes far from friends, 549.

[cont.

Lansbury, Rt. Hon. G.:—cont.
- Russia, diplomatic representatives in, rights and privileges to import articles for own personal use, negotiations re, 792.
- Supply:
  - Army Estimates, Mr. Cooper's statement 1430.
  - Civil Estimates. Vote on Account, Rep., 599, 600, 601-2, 606, 607, 611.
  - Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 35-50, 52, 67.
- Unemployment, Debate on Vote on Account, 599, 600-1, 601-2, 606, 607, 611,
- United States of America:
  - Discussions to be held with, British Government policy, statement to the House and facilities for discussion before, 805, 805-6.
  - Financial crisis, British Government action, 805.
- Yorkshire, West Riding, means test, administration, 606.

Law, Mr. R. K.:
- Arms and munitions of war, export to China and Japan, embargo, approval of policy, 111-2.
- China and Japan, Debate in Committee on Supply, 110-2.
- Municipal Corporations Audit Bill, 2R, 1509-11.
- Supply, Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 110-2.

Lawson, Mr. J. J.:
- Army:
  - Clothing Factory, Pimlico, closing of, criticism, 1414-6.
  - Educational service, value of, 1416.
  - Estimates, increase, criticism, 1413-4, 1417.
  - Mechanical transport subsidy, 1417.
  - new Uniform, criticism of, 1417.
- Catterick Camp, completion and cost, question, 1417.
- Coal mining industry, Debate on Motion, 493.
- Dewsbury, unemployment, 25th January, 1932 and 1933, 518, 519.
- Durham:
  - Coal royalty payments during last year, 571.
  - Omnibus routes, raising of fares in certain districts, 1166-7, 2157.
  - Public assistance commissioners, meeting of accredited representatives of applicants, 1316.
- Gateshead, unemployment, 25th January, 1932 and 1933, 518, 518.
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 293-5.
- International Labour Office, value of, 679-80.
- Kent, Snowdown, Betteshanger and Chislet Collieries, overtime work, 1349.
- Labour, Ministry of, cost, estimate, basis, 526.
- Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill, 2R, 1034-5, 1050.

Lawson, Mr. J. J.:—cont.
- Newcastle, unemployment, 25th January, 1932 and 1933, 518, 519.
- Parliamentary procedure, Questions as to particular areas, 523-4.
- Poor law relief:
  - increasing Burden on, 673-4.
  - Recipients, number of able-bodied, 700.
- Streatham Parliamentary Division, division into four wards and increase in number of councillors, suggestion, 21.
- Supply:
  - Army Estimates, Mr. Cooper's statement 1413-7.
  - Civil Estimates, Vote on Account, Rep., 594, 595-6, 606, 607, 612, 672-81.
- Unemployment:
  - Debate on Vote on Account, 594, 595-6, 606, 607, 612, 672-81.
  - Number of persons having ceased to register as result of recent legislative changes, 566.
  - Remedies:
    - Hours, reduction of, 679.
    - School-leaving age, raising of, 678-9.
  - Work schemes, Government policy, 2121.
- Unemployment benefit:
  - Disallowances on ground of not being in normal insurance, 673.
  - Transitional:
    - Administration, criticism, 674-7.
    - Commissioners, criticism of system, 676-7.
    - Means test, treatment of Army Reserve pay, 968, 1318.
    - Number of recipients, 568.
- Unemployment Insurance Bill, prospects, 2121.
- West Ham, unemployment at end of January, 1932, and corresponding date in 1933, 18-19.
- Woolwich ordnance factory, position re allocation of work to, 1416.

League of Nations:
- new Buildings:
  - total Estimated cost, value of contracts and value of those allocated to British firms, 374.
  - Tenders, consideration of, 374.
- Commission on Polish Corridor problem, suggestion to set up, not to be made, 1944.
- Contributions, arrears, Chinese:
  - 1931 and 1932, 798.
  - Arrangements re payment by instalments, 797-8.
- Covenant, breaches of, simultaneous withdrawal of Ambassadors and Ministers from capitals of nations found guilty of, not recently under consideration, 1157.
- Disarmament Conference:
  - Air Force. British Government policy, 1606-7, 1796-7, 1832, 1833-4.
    - Comments on, 1817-20, 1824-5, 1838-46, 1850-1.
  - Naval proposals:
    - Information requested in connection with, 2187-9.
    - of Japan, 2210-1.

[cont.

League of Nations:—cont.
  Disarmament Conference:—cont.
    Questionnaire on private manufacture of arms:
      British Government reply sent and circulated, publication not proposed, but copy would be placed in Library, 1948-9.
      List of nations replying to, resumé of replies not possible in answer to question in the House, 1948.
    Statement issued to the Press, 820-2.
    forthcoming Visit of Foreign Secretary and Prime Minister, 820, 821-3.
  International Air Force under, see under Aviation.
  International Labour Organisation:
    British contribution to, 689.
    Cost and question of value of, 669-70, 671-2, 689.
    40-hour week proposals, British Government attitude, 603-5, 691-2.
      Approval of, 631-2.
      Criticism, 579-83, 605, 628-9, 661-2.
    Hours of work, resolutions and results of voting, 815-7.
    Value of, 679-80.
  Miners' Hours, Convention for limitation of:
    British Government policy, 165-6.
    German declaration re, 166.
  Night Work for Women Convention:
    Decision of International Court, 573-4.
    Deputation re, reason for refusal to receive, 573-4.
    Position re, 199-200, 534.

Leckie, Mr. J. A.:
  National health insurance, medical benefit, insured persons ceasing to be entitled to, at end of year, and measures for ensuring receipt of medical attention, 1337.
  Northern Ireland, beer, spirits and wine, estimated quantities retained for consumption in, and estimated revenue from, 1932, 28.

Leech, Dr. J. W.,
  store cattle, imports, 1969.

Leek Urban District Council,
  housing scheme, particulars being supplied, 814.

Lena Goldfields, Limited, see under Russia.

Lennox-Boyd, Mr. A. T.:
  Housing, Rural Workers Act, administration by rural district councils, question, 2127.
  Milk, condensed skimmed, avoidance of effective restrictions on increasing importation of, 2137.
  Rural industries, Debate on Motion, 2058-65.

Leominster Borough,
  Order for extension of Section one of the Sunday Entertainments Act, 1932, to, approved, 1499.

Leonard, Mr. W.:
  Blanefield, Stirlingshire:
    Basement houses in, 558.
    Demand by inhabitants for public inquiry into non-observance of sanitary and health regulations, 558.
  Glasgow:
    Bribery case, setting up of judicial inquiry, 970, 1345, 1347.
    Public assistance committee, Lennox Castle scheme, source of materials, 559.
  Income tax, shareholders in limited companies, and members of co-operative societies, certain statistics requested, 1339.
  India, Army:
    Indian Artillery, recruitment of non-martial classes, 1621.
    Reserve, composition of, 1621.
  Maternal mortality rates in Metropolitan boroughs and City of London, 1338.
  National finance, Conversion loan, advertising cost, 28.
  Shops Acts (1912 to 1928) Amendment Bill, 2R, 2296-302, 2308, 2309, 2348.
  Strathblane, Stirlingshire, demand by inhabitants for public inquiry into non-observance of sanitary and health regulations, 558.
  Wholesale prices, Debate on Motion, 1270-6, 1297.

Levy, Mr. T.:
  Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act (1912) Amendment Bill, 2R, 762, 777-8.
  Electricity, grid, total capital expenditure on, and date of completion of work, 1162.
  Firearms, holding up of residents in private houses by armed men, and measures to restrict distribution of arms, 1324, 1325.
  Government Departments, new building in Whitehall, 361-2.
  Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 332-3.
  Income tax, reduction:
    by Sixpence and by a shilling in the pounds, estimated cost, 2131.
    Stimulating effect, 2132.
  India, Joint Committee, prospects of setting up and of introduction of Bill, 780.
  Territorial Army, shortage, measures for making good, 969.
  Unemployment:
    Estimate on which estimate of cost of Ministry for 1933-34 based, 525-6.
    Local authorities, circular to, re schemes of work of revenue-producing nature, 2118.
  United States of America:
    British delegation to, personnel of, 370, 371.
    forthcoming Discussions with, outline of proposals to be put forward requested, 804.
  Water supply schemes, 534.
  World Economic Conference, statement requested, 2128.

Lewis, Mr. O.:
Arms and munitions of war, exports to China and Japan, embargo, 124-7, 795, 1591, 1591-2.
Beer duty, penny reduction, estimated loss in revenue in full year, 1781.
Ceylon, question of attitude of inhabitants to unification with future federal Government of India, 781.
China and Japan, Debate in Committee on Supply, 123-7.
Colchester, stamp machines, installation at other post offices in, 811-2.
Eggs and poultry, wheat, barley and oats, value of production for last complete year for which figures available, 2137.
Essex, wheat deficiency payments in, 1602.
Hampstead Heath, Heath Brow, buildings to be erected by Air Ministry, 814, 1934-6.
National finance, optional conversion issues ranking as trustee securities, prospects of removal of restrictions, 1782.
Supply:
  Air Estimates, Works, Buildings and Lands, Com., 1934-6, 1938.
  Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 123-7.
Tea duties, additional 2d. per pound on foreign and 1d. per pound on Empire tea, additional gain in revenue in full year, 1781.
Trade Unions, membership in 1930 and 1930, 1605.
Traffic, accidents, prospects of legislation to provide for greater safety of persons using public thoroughfares, 819-20.

Licensed premises:
Glasses, law re, 189.
Rateable values, 182-3.
Streatham, refusal to serve half-pint, no offence, 189.

Licensing Act,
permitted hours, special hours during summer time in some districts, 1777.

Liddall, Mr. W. S.:
Electricity supply, extension to all towns and villages, steps for, in order to provide work for unemployed, 1161, 1162.
Unemployment:
  Relief works:
    Sewerage schemes, 533.
    Water schemes, 533-4.
  Scheme for extension of electric lighting facilities or national water and sewage schemes considered by committee of business men, 2119.

Lincolnshire:
Agricultural prices, no broadcast in respect of any market in, but any suggestion for, could be considered, 540-1.
Agricultural workers, unemployment position, 200.
Bombing and machine gun practice, see under Air Force.

Lincolnshire:—cont.
Public assistance, percentages of inhabitants in receipt of, 31st December, 1932, and 25th February, 1933, and special steps being taken by Council to review situation, 1335.

Lindsay, Mr. N. K.,
World Economic Conference, consideration of question of reduction of hours of labour, 371.

Linoleum,
drawback in respect of linseed-oil content of, when exported, arrangements not yet made for, 2133-4.

Linseed and linseed oil:
Imports and duties on, from India and the Argentine, 977-8.
Position re import duties, Debate on Motion for Adjournment, 511.

Lister, Rt. Hon. Sir Philip Cunliffe-, see Cunliffe-Lister, Rt. Hon. Sir Philip.

Little, Sir Ernest Graham-, see Graham-Little, Sir Ernest.

Liverpool:
Ayrshire coal sales in, 1771-2.
Civil hospitals, no Ministry of Pensions pensions being treated in, for war disabilities, 802.
Corporation, deputation from, re expenditure on unemployed, agreed notice published after, to be supplied, 1175.
Ex-service mental cases, policy as to treatment of, and no change in, statements in "Daily Herald" untrue, 800-1.
Hospitals, lack of accommodation, no complaints received and no foundation for newspaper statements, 802.
Maghull Hospital, transfer of patients to Chepstow, 801, 1599.
Mossley Hill Ministry of Pensions Hospital, number of beds and number occupied, 802.
Public assistance, estimated expenditure for 1932-33 and 1933-34, information not possessed, 572.

Llewellin, Major J. J.,
Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Bill, 2R, 755-8.

Llewellyn-Jones, Mr. F.:
Business of Courts Committee, prospects of legislation to give effect to recommendations of, 1963.
Czechoslovakia, Rumania and Yugoslavia, treaty, 1157.
Education, continuation schools, number of local authorities having taken steps to establish, in accordance with provisions of Section 75 of Education Act, 1921, 2125, 2126.
Licensing Act, permitted hours, special hours during summer time in some districts, 1777.

[cont.

Llewellyn-Jones, Mr. F.:—cont.
Motor drivers' hours, prosecutions and convictions for offences in connection with, in 1931 and 1932, and measures for securing compliance with Act, 2122.
Motor vehicles, insurance policies not affording full cover to owners, 1775-6, 1776.
North Wales, district auditors and staff, appointment with knowledge of Welsh language, 1168.
Road Traffic Act, Section 111 (2), Regulations, organisations consulted before making, 2124, 2125.
Rural industries, Debate on Motion, 2065-74.
Summary jurisdiction (Appeals) Bill, 2R, 722-7, 744, 745.
Traffic Commissioners, reports of, receipt of, and publication or availability, question, 1775.

Lloyd George, Major G., see George, Major G. Lloyd.

Local authorities:
Expenditure:
  1929-30, on education and highways, no information for current year, 813.
  Estimates, not submitted to Minister, 550.
  Falling on rates and grants, aggregate in 1929-30 and 1930-31, estimates for two following years not yet available, 547-8.
  estimated Reduction, 15-16.
  on Roads and scavenging, admission for block grant, but allocation of grant to special headings not possible, 1611.
Public works loans, total amount sanctioned from beginning of April, 1932 to end of January, 1933, 571.

Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill,
2R, 1007-98; Com., 1939-42; 3R, 2263-70.

Local Government officers, insurance work, remuneration for, 997.

Locarno treaties,
no consultations between British military, naval and air force staffs with view to putting into operation of, when necessary, 1964.

Logan, Mr. D. G.:
Argentine Railways, British goods purchases, 1791.
Cinemas, Sunday opening, referendums taken by local authorities, 188.
Coal mining industry, Debate on Motion, 486.
Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 238-40, 242, 276-80, 286; 3R, 891, 3R, 938-41, 952.
Liverpool, public assistance, estimated expenditure for 1932-33 and 1933-34, 572.
Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill, 2R 1019-22, 1033, 1034, 1036, 1054, 1091, 1092, 1093.

Logan, Mr. G. D.:—cont.
Seamen, unemployment, 2116, 2117.
Supply, Army Estimates, Mr. Cooper's statement, 1424-6, 1431.
Taxation, excessive, Debate on Motion, 408.
Territorial Army, Camps, 1933, expenditure on, criticism, 1424-6.

London County Council, sale of Numbers Farm, King's Langley, 832.

London Midland and Scottish Railway, see under Railways.

London, Midland and Scottish Railway Bill,
Standing Orders complied with, 517.

London and North Eastern Railway, see under Railways.

London and North Eastern Railway Bill,
Standing Orders complied with, 1315.

Lord, Sir Walter Greaves-, see Greaves-Lord, Sir Walter.

Loughborough:
Centre for unemployed, concert in aid of, exemption from entertainments duty, 993-4.
Rural District Council housing scheme, particulars being supplied, 814.

Lovat-Fraser, Mr. J. A.:
Aviation:
  Ice on wings and fuselages, formation, 1892.
  Noise, importance of reducing and question of prospects, 1891-2.
Edinburgh, Advocate's Close, destruction question, 557.
Loitering with intent to commit felony, convictions of persons under 21 during 1931, 542.
Motor cycles, silencers, number of cases of enforcement during 1932 of regulations forbidding use of cycles not fitted with, 360.
Motor vehicles:
  Horn, standard, reference of question to committee of research, 360.
  Number of convictions of persons using, for offences involving making of noise during 1930, 1931 and 1932, 1325.
Poverty, widespread, Debate on Motion, 1213.
Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Bill, 2R, 720-2.
Supply, Air Estimates, Sir Philip Sassoon's statement, 1891-2.
Traffic noises, appointment of noise abatement committee as in New York, suggestion, 359.
Wormwood Scrubs, number of persons sent to, during 1931 committed for loitering with intent to commit felony, 542.

Lowdham Grange Borstal Institution:
Officer promoted over others, number of hours worked per fortnight before promotion, 1792.
Officers, eight-hour day, 1792.

Lunn, Mr. W.:
Air Force, recruiting, numbers rejected on medical or other grounds, 1931 and 1932, 178.
Arms and munitions of war:
  Exports to China and Japan, contracts, renewable clauses, 797.
  Factories abroad owned by British firms, position re sale of arms and munitions to China and Japan, 797.
Army, recruits, number of rejections on medical or other grounds, 1931 and 1932, 177.
East Africa, railway rates and finance, action on Mr. Gibb's Report, 1159.
Education:
  Continuation schools, 2126.
  Elementary schools:
    Encouragement of children continuing at school, or provision of employment, 1330, 2115-6.
    Number of boys and girls leaving, at end of each school period, 1330.
Hong Kong, Mui-tsai, periodical publication of inspectors' reports, 1160.
Irish Free State, trade with, effect of recent policy, 984.
Navy, recruits, number of rejections on medical or other grounds, 1931 and 1932, 178.
Supply, Civil Estimates, Vote on Account, Rep., 608.
Unemployment:
  Debate on Vote on Account, Rep., 608.
  Local authorities schemes, grants for, 2118.
Unemployment benefit, transitional payments, means test, assessment of gross or net earnings of family, 1618.
Woollen and worsted industry, decrease in number of insured persons in, in June, 1923 to 1932, and increase in number of unemployment, and question as to steps for assistance of industry, 1321, 1322.
Yorkshire, West Riding, transitional payments, administration, 608.

Lyons, Mr. A. M.,
Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Bill, 2R, 730-5.

Mabane, Mr. W.:
Canada, exchange dumping duty, 169-70.
China and Japan:
  Debate in Committee on Supply, 48, 84-90.
  Economic boycott question, 89.
Denmark, Falster Zealand bridge, position re contract provisionally secured by Messrs. Dorman Long for erection of, 1601.
Economic situation, Government policy, 1172.
Gift Coupons Bill, 2R, 1568-72, 1575, 1576, 1578.

Mabane, Mr. W.:—cont.
Price level, internal, action for preventing fall in, 553.
Stoke-on-Trent Corporation, position as to raising of loan by, 1966.
Supply, Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 48, 84-90.
Switzerland, woollen and worsted tissues, import restrictions, 555, 1601.
Unemployment, work schemes, Ministry of Health intentions, 803.

Mablethorpe,
bombing and machine gun practice, see Bombing and machine gun practice, Lincolnshire Coast, under Air Force.

MacAndrew, Captain J. O.,
Liverpool, sale of Ayrshire coal in, 1771-2.

Macdonald, Mr. G.:
Arms and munitions, exports 1932, and January and February, 1933, to all countries, excluding China and Japan, and re-exports, 554.
Coal mining industry, wages, action to be taken by Government, 166, 167.
India:
  Berar, creation as separate province, position re, 786.
  Cotton and sugar-cane and their rotation crops, nature of inquiry under consideration with regard to cost of cultivation, 786.
  Land mortgage banks for provision of long-term loans, action for establishment of, 786.
Poverty, widespread, Debate on Motion, 1235-9, 1240, 1243.
Supply, Air Estimates, Sir Philip Sassoon's statement, 1869.

MacDonald, Rt. Hon. J. R., Prime Minister:
Agriculture, milch cattle, committee on disease among, progress, 539-40.
Business of the House, course of, 560-1, 824.
League of Nations, Disarmament Conference:
  Statement issued to the Press, 821.
  forthcoming Visit of Foreign Secretary and Prime Minister, 820, 821-3.
Unemployment:
  Schemes for alleviation of, Government policy already explained, and further statement to be made in course of Debate, 532-3.
  Work schemes:
    Consideration of, with help of Departmental experts, 18.
    Government policy, previous reply referred to, and issue of White Paper not considered necessary, 802-3.
Unemployment insurance:
  Income limit, recommendations of Royal Commission under consideration, 17.
  Uninsured classes, relief, separate or preferential treatment not possible, 17.

[cont.

Macdonald, Rt. Hon. J. R.:—cont.

- United States of America:
  - British delegation to, personnel of, previous reply referred to, 370-1.
  - Discussions to be held with:
    - British Government policy, statement to the House and facilities for discussion before, no decision possible at present, 805.
    - Date not yet fixed, 805.
    - Scope of, previous reply referred to, 805.
  - Financial crisis, British Government attitude, and no action called for, 805.
- World Economic Conference, hours of labour, question not included in draft Agenda and no information at present as to discussion of, 271-2.

Macdonald, Captain P. Drummond:

- Admiralty, civilian staff, increase in proportion to active personnel, 2242-3.
- Agriculture, pig industry, progress in connection with co-ordination of schemes, 26.
- Arms and munitions of war, exports:
  - to China and Japan, embargo, number and names of countries agreeing to, and of countries not adopting policy, 794.
  - Licence system, question whether in force in any other country, 796.
  - to South American countries, position as to embargo, 1593.
- Dartmouth College, cost, reduction advocated, 2242.
- Hours Conventions, difficulties in connection with, 670.
- International Labour Office:
  - Hours of Work Convention, nations having ratified, 535.
  - Night Work Convention, position re, 534.
- International Labour Office, cost of, and question of value of, 669-70, 671-2, 689.
- Navy:
  - Cadets, from public schools, increase in number advocated, 2242.
  - Construction programme, justification, 2237-8.
  - Men, later age for retirement advocated, 2243.
  - Officers on retired and emergency list, 2241.
  - Personnel, importance of, and of maintenance of high standard of training, 2236-43.
  - Reserve, training, importance of, 2240-1.
  - Training:
    - in Sailing ships, desirability, 2239-40.
    - Sea-training, importance of, 2239.
- Passports, British visas held by Germans, number within the last fortnight, comparison with average, 798.
- Post Office, telegraph poles, Canadian supply, 24.
- Prison service, filling of vacancies in rank of Governor, 26-7.

Macdonald, Captain P. Drummond:—cont.

- South Africa:
  - Navy, reduction, 379.
  - Payment towards upkeep of British Navy, 379.
- South African station, H.M. vessels on, alterations in size of squadrons of, 379.
- Supply:
  - Civil Estimates, Vote on Account, Rep., 661, 669-72, 680, 689.
  - Navy Estimates, Sir Bolton Eyres Monsell's statement, Personnel, proposed amendment, 2236-43, 2260.
- Unemployment, Debate on Vote on Account, 661, 669-72, 680, 689.

McEntee, Mr. V. La Touche:

- Aviation, landing grounds, particulars requested, 355-6.
- British Industries Fair, results, and comparison with previous year, 788, 789.
- Broadcasting, licences, number taken out during 1932 and prosecutions for operation without and total amount of fines, 811.
- Ceylon, steps for unification of, with future federal Government of India, 781.
- Chingford, use of land scheduled for residential purposes for laundry extension, 2153.
- Cinematograph Fund, receipts, 27.
- Dartmoor Prison:
  - Farm bailiff, advertisement for, at salary in excess of that received by present bailiff, 2143-4.
  - Officers, passing over of, for promotion, 1327-8.
- Feltham Borstal Institution, officers passed over for promotion during last 12 months, and extent to which seniority and experience taken into consideration, 2143.
- Housing, Small Dwellings Acquisition Acts:
  - total Amount of advances under, in 1932, and number of houses purchased, 999.
  - Loans to local authorities, Government policy re, 999.
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 226-9, 237-8, 246, 280-2, 291-2, 293, 305-7, 311, 328, 343-4; Cons., 835-7; 3R, 941-4.
- India, long-staple cotton, measures for increasing consumption in Great Britain, 786.
- Municipal Corporations Audit Bill, 2R, 1543-8.
- Pensions:
  - Case of daughter of James Westbrook, 799.
  - Children reaching 21 and unable owing to defects to earn living, 799, 800.
  - Hospitals maintained by Ministry of Pensions, situation of, and question of closures since 1st January, 1932, 1599.
- Post Office:
  - Telephonists, numbers employed in London and the provinces, 1931 and 1932, 1605.

[cont.

McEntee, Mr. V. La Touche:—cont.
- Post Office:—cont.
  - Underground telephone cables, expenditure on laying, during 1932 and estimate for 1933, 1622.
- Taxation, excessive, Debate on Motion, 420-6.
- Tower, officer under arrest in:
  - Charges against, non-information of, 369-70.
  - Transfer to Aldershot to assist in preparation of defence, suggestion, 369.
  - Treatment of, 369-70.

McEwen, Captain J. H. F.:
- Arms and munitions of war, export to China and Japan, embargo, approval, 135-6.
- Berwickshire and East Lothian, smallholders, reduction of rents, request for, 970.
- China and Japan, Debate in Committee on Supply, Com., 135-7.
- Civil Service, clerical classes, number of P-class and S-class men promoted to, in each department from 1st April, 1932, to 28th February, 1933, 2154.
- Milk, certified, stating of date of production on caps of bottles, alteration of requirement requested, 550.
- Supply, Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 135-7.

McGovern, Mr. J.:
- Air Force, reduction advocated, 1915-22.
- Army, Scottish Command, Paymaster, vacation of post by Colonel Watkins, 569.
- Census returns, publication prospects, 546.
- Criminal prosecutions, Scotland, Miss Catherine Hamilton Wilson Craig, illegal operation on, 557.
- Glasgow:
  - Bribery case, setting up of judicial inquiry, 1345, 1347.
  - Edinburgh, new Government offices at, question of, 361.
  - Housebreaking by young men refused unemployment benefit, 637.
  - Housing:
    - by Corporation, in Shettlestone, statistics for each year from 1919, 157.
    - Sandyhills, construction, particulars requested for 1923-24 and present time, 194.
  - Magistrate's conviction:
    - Postponement of question, 558.
    - Question of setting up of judicial inquiry, 970, 971.
  - National Health Insurance Panel Committee, 158, 193.
  - Omnibus services, inadequacy in Tollcross area, and measures re, 357.
- Horticultural industry, unemployment, 518.
- Housing, Scotland, Slum Clearance Act, 1930, areas where houses built under, number of houses and rents, 157-8.
- India:
  - Baba Chuhar Singh, resolutions for release of, and steps re, 2155.
  - Dr. Mohamad Alam, refusal of passport to Kenya, 2155-6.

McGovern, Mr. J.:—cont.
- Irish Free State, dairy produce imports from, from passing of Import Duties Act to 1st March, 1933, and for similar period in previous year, 2151.
- Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill, 2R, 1027-30.
- Newfoundland, grant-in-aid, 1104.
- Post Office, telephone poles, 993.
- Poverty, widespread, Debate on Motion, 1224-30, 1236.
- Supply:
  - Air Estimates, number of Royal Air Force, Com., 1915-22.
  - Civil Estimates, Vote on Account, Rep., 627, 634-42, 675, 688.
  - Dominion Services, supplementary estimate, Com., 1104.
  - Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 151.
- Unemployment, Debate on Vote on Account, 627, 634-42, 675, 688.
- Unemployment benefit, transitional:
  - Administration, criticisms, 636-41.
  - Inadequacy, house-breaking cases due to, 368.
  - Responsibility for application of, question of, 635.
  - Young men and women excluded from homes by fathers, 637.
- Washington Hours Convention, Bill for giving effect to, non-proceeding with, 627.

Machine tools,
- import duty, 173-4.

Machinery,
- import duties, refund of, on certain machinery imported between 1st March and 16th June, 1931, impossibility, 552.

Machynlleth Rural District, Electricity Special Order,
- approved, 1499-500.

Machynlleth Urban District, Electricity Special Order,
- approved, 1499-500.

McKeag, Mr. W.:
- Aviation, Imperial Airways, Limited:
  - British staff in Egypt and elsewhere, rank and file, treatment of, 1866.
  - Subsidy to, and question as to control in connection with, 1865-6.
- Coal mining industry, Debate on Motion, 468.
- Durham, charge on rates for public assistance, increase in, and measures for relief of burden, 550.
- King's Proctor's Department:
  - Abolition question, 1775.
  - Cost for 1932 and number of cases intervened in, 1774.
- Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill, 2R, 1075-7.
- Public assistance, rate charges for, Debate on Motion for Adjournment, 1757.
- Supply, Air Estimates, Sir Philip Sassoon's statement, 1865-6.

[cont.

McKeag, Mr. W.:—cont.
- Unemployment Insurance, Royal Commission, prospects of legislation to give effect to recommendations of, and to give additional assistance to depressed areas, 1769.

McKie, Mr. J. H.:
- Agricultural Marketing Bill, 2R, 1708-12.
- Agriculture, potato imports from wart-disease scheduled districts in Irish Free State, prohibition, steps advocated, 807-8.
- Rural industries, Debate on Motion, 2083-5.

Maclay, Hon. J. P.:
- Aviation:
  - Bomb-proof shelters, subsidising of local authorities to carry out large-scale excavations for, for relief of unemployment, 20.
  - Municipal aerodromes, clearing and levelling ground for future, encouragement of, for relief of unemployment, 20.
- Unemployment, work schemes, analysis of schemes submitted by local authorities of distressed areas, suggestion, 997-8.

McLean, Major Sir Alan:
- Aliens, employment in beet-sugar factories, 2142-3.
- Brazil, British investors in, defaulted obligations of provincial and municipal authorities, presence of Ambassador during further negotiations, 1594.
- Rural industries, Debate on Motion, 2080-83.

Maclean, Mr. N.:
- Air Force:
  - Marine craft, information requested, 1813.
  - Officers, question as to possibility of living on pay, 1814.
  - Promotion, method, information requested, 1813-4.
  - Works and buildings, 1814.
- Airships, question as to future policy re, 1814.
- Aviation:
  - Aeroplane clubs, information requested, 1814.
  - International control, need for, and prohibition of use of aircraft for war advocated, 1809-13, 1814-5.
- Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill, 2R, 1060-3, 1065, 1066.
- Supply, Air Estimates, Sir Philip Sassoon's statement, 1808-15, `1817, 1821.

Macmillan, Mr. M. H.:
- Foreign loans, 1000-1.
- Wholesale prices, Debate on Motion, 1289-95.

Maghull hospital, near Liverpool,
- transfer of patients to Ministry hospital at Chepstow, 801, 1599.

Magistrates,
- Metropolitan area, binding over of people on condition of not living within certain radius of London, 818.

Magnay, Mr. T.,
- Benefices (Purchase of Rights of Patronage) Measure, 1933, Debate on Motion for presentation for Royal Assent, 1151.

Maitland, Mr. A.:
- Hours of labour, 40-hour week, difficulties in connection with, 653.
- Municipal Corporations Audit Bill, 2R, 1536-9.
- Supply, Civil Estimates, Vote on Account, Rep., 649-57.
- Unemployment:
  - Debate on Vote on Account, Rep., 649-57.
  - Remedies, manufacturing concerns, extension of income tax reliefs to encouragement, expansion and development of works, 655.
- Unemployment benefit, means test, justification for, 651-2.

Maitland, Rt. Hon. Sir Arthur H. D. R. Steel-, see Steel-Maitland, Rt. Hon. Sir Arthur H. D. R.

Makins, Brigadier-General E.:
- Army:
  - Arming of, 1402.
  - Cavalry:
    - Regiments, increase in number of troop horses desirable, 1405.
    - Value of, 1404-5.
  - Men leaving and entering Government civil employment, pension question, 1402-3.
  - Officers, restoration of titles of cornet and ensign, advocated, 1404.
  - Royal Military Academy and Royal Military College, amalgamation advocated, 1404.
  - Vocational training, 1402.
- National Association for the Employment of Ex-Sailors, Soldiers and Airmen, increased assistance advocated, 1403.
- Supply, Army Estimates, Mr. Cooper's statement, 1401-5.
- Territorial Army camps, restoration, approval, 1402.

Malayan Civil Service:
- Personnel selected under general system for Colonial Administrative Service, 352.
- Recruitment, selection system, 352-3.

Male servant licence duty,
- relief to persons genuinely giving work to men otherwise unemployed, previous reply referred to, 696.

Mallalieu, Mr. E. L.:
- Kenya:
  - Gold, discoveries by prospectors in areas not open to prospecting, 1160.
  - Land purchase, by natives outside reserve areas, 1160.

[cont.

Mallalieu, Mr. E. L.:—cont.
Kenya:—cont.
  Mining ordinance, claims granted under, 1160-1.
  Native reserves, prospecting in, 1179.
Visiting Forces (British Commonwealth) Bill, 3R, 1487-90.

Manchester Ship Canal Bill,
Standing Orders complied with, 967.

Manchukuo,
import duties on fruit, alteration of, but no evidence of discriminatory action in favour of Japanese, 2136.

Manchuria,
future Administration of, working out of constructive pan for, on lines suggested by Lytton report, no useful purpose to be served by, in absence of co-operation of parties immediately concerned, 1158.
Japanese recognition of, British Government attitude, 9-10.

Mander, Mr. G. le M.:
Aerial warfare, possibilites of, 1827-8.
Air Force:
  in Iraq, question as to future position of, 1826-7.
  Substitution for Territorial Army for defence of the country, consideration advocated, 1781, 1829.
  Taking over of certain work done by Army and Navy, economies to be produced by, 1828-9.
Aircraft, manufacture of British aircraft in Japan, effect of embargo on arms export, 1351.
Arms and munitions of war, exports:
  to Bolivia and Paraguay and Peru and Colombia, position with regard to, 1155.
  to China and Japan, embargo on, approval of policy, and desire for international action, 113-6.
  to South American belligerent states, question of, 11, 114-5.
Aviation, international control and abolition of military and naval air forces advocated, 1824-6.
Bolivia and Paraguay, dispute between, position, 10.
Business of the House, course of, 1356.
Canada:
  British citizens deported from, through becoming charge on public funds, 1931 and 1932, 185.
  Trade reciprocity with United States of America, negotiations for, 974.
China and Japan:
  Debate in Committee on Supply, 113-9.
  Economic boycott of Japan, consideration advocated, 116-9.
Disarmament, aerial, British Government proposals, comments on, 1824-5.
Foreign loans, embargo on, 1000.
Germany, breaches of Treaty of Versailles by, 2141.
Hours of work, 40-hour week, 535, 686.
Housing, door locks, quality, 1330-1.
Hungary, military aeroplanes from Italy, negotiations with French Government, 11, 12.

Mander, Mr. G. le M.:—cont.
International Labour Office:
  40-hour week proposals, British Government attitude, criticism, 628-9.
  Recommendation re Night Work for Women Convention, 199, 573.
Japan, imports from, into various parts of British Empire, 1932, and proportion to total export trade, 1759-60.
Kenya, Morris Carter report, prospects and question of interim report, 556.
League of Nations:
  Commission on Polish Corridor problem, suggestion, 1944.
  Covenant, breaches of, simultaneous withdrawal of Ambassadors and Ministers from capitals of nations found guilty of, 1157.
Locarno treaties, consultations between military, naval and air force staffs of signatories of, with view to putting into effective operation if necessary, 1964.
Manchukuo Government, modification of tariff in favour of Japanese fruit contrary to international treaties, 2136.
Manchuria, future administration of, proposal to League Council re working out constructive plan for, on lines suggested by Lytton report, 1158.
Narcotic Drugs, Convention for Limiting the Manufacture and Regulating the Distribution of, 1931, ratification question, 1360.
National Industrial Council Bill, Motion for leave to introduce, 1175-8.
Navy, Dominion contributions towards upkeep of, 1772.
New Zealand, primage duties, 553, 554.
Passports:
  Visa, countries whose citizens able to enter Great Britain without, 1943.
  Visa fees, remission of, with view to encouraging foreign visitors, 1001.
Peru and Colombia, dispute between, position, 10.
Sewer gas, protection against, 2130.
Supply:
  Air Estimates, Sir Philip Sassoon's statement, 1824-30.
  Civil Estimates, Vote on Account, Rep., 582, 622-30, 631, 686.
  Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 113-9.
Territorial Army, taking over of duties by Royal Air Force, 969.
Unemployment:
  Debate on Vote on Account, 622-30, 631, 686.
  Juveniles, instructional classes for, 626.
  Voluntary schemes for provision of occupation, 629-30.
  Work schemes, assistance of Members by expert officials, in preparation of, 18.
Unemployment benefit, transitional payments:
  Administration, criticism, 622-5.
  Applicants, right to personal hearing, advocated, 624.

[cont.

Mander, Mr. G. le M.:—cont.
- Unemployment benefit, transitional payments:—cont.
  - Estimate of weekly sum required for maintenance of life on reasonable standard of subsistence, and relation to amount of, 2112.
- Washington Hours Convention, Liberal party attitude, 626-8.
- Wolverhampton, transitional payments, administration, 622-4.
- Wolverhampton and district, schemes held up as result of economy policy, 571-2.

Margesson, Captain Rt. Hon. H. D. R.:
- Business of the House, course of, 1501.
- Visiting Forces (British Commonwealth) Bill, Cons., 1124.

Marsden, Commander A.:
- India, concession passages, expenditure incurred in, for 12 months ended 30th September, 1932, and amount used for passages in British ships, 779.
- Navy:
  - Promotion, 2246-7.
  - Short service system, suggestions, 2244-5.
  - Training:
    - greater Expenditure on fuel and munitions desirable, 2246-7, 2249.
    - in Sailing ships, suggestion re, 2248-9.
- Post Office, Central Telegraph Office, promotion stagnation and question of relief, 812.
- Supply, Navy Estimates, Sir Bolton Eyres Monsell's statement, 2244-9, 2251.

Martin, Mr. T. B.:
- Coal mining industry, Debate on Motion, 456, 505.
- Co-operative Societies, Committee, evidence, publication question, 1171.
- League of Nations, Convention for the limitation of miners hours, British Government policy, 165, 166.

Mason, Mr. D. M.:
- Arms and munitions of war, export to China and Japan, embargo, criticism of policy, 141-4.
- China and Japan:
  - Debate in Committee on Supply, 141-4, 154.
  - Economic boycott of Japan advocated, 142-4.
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, 3R, 894.
- Newfoundland, grant-in-aid, 1104-5.
- Supply:
  - Dominions Services, supplementary estimate, Com., 1104-5.
  - Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 141-4, 154.
- Wholesale prices, Debate on Motion, 1262, 1282-8, 1294, 1296.
- World Economic Conference, Debate on Motion, 1995, 2019.

Maternal mortality, see under Public health.

Maternity and child welfare services, see under Public health.

Mattresses, wire,
- imports, during years ended January, 1930, 1931 and 1932, 1343.

Maxton, Mr. J.:
- Afforestation, death-rate among trees, 183.
- Agricultural Marketing Bill, discussion facilities, 1354, 1355, 1356.
- Broadcasting, Empire station, 993.
- Business of the House, course of, 190, 1354, 1355, 1356.
- Canada, deportations from, 186.
- Census returns, delay in publication, 547.
- Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act (1912) Amendment Bill, 2R, 778.
- Coal mining industry Scotland, overtime, 164.
- Education, teachers, prosecution of Mr. and Mrs. Duncan, 544.
- Entertainments duty, 375.
- Europe, promotion of peace in, facilities for Debate, 2141.
- Exchange Equalisation Fund, 553.
- Germany, situation in, 377.
- House of Commons:
  - Memorials in, rules and regulations, 1348, 1349.
  - Standing Orders, Committee, composition, 1785.
- Irish Free State:
  - Relationship with, 987.
  - Sums withheld by, and amounts received from import duties on goods from, 984.
- League of Nations:
  - Contributions, position of countries in arrear, 798.
  - Disarmament Conference, forthcoming visit of Prime Minister and Foreign Secretary, 822.
- Newfoundland, grant-in-aid, 1105, 1107-9.
- Postmaster-General, visit to Glasgow, 1774.
- Poverty, widespread, Motion, 1183-92, 1203, 1241.
- "Royal Ransom," racehorse, customs duty on, 187.
- Steel sleepers, encouragement of sale of, 169.
- Supply:
  - Civil Estimates, Vote on Account, Rep., 675, 689.
  - Dominions Services, supplementary estimate, Com., 1105, 1107-9.
  - Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 58.
- Territorial Army review, incidence of cost of, 175.
- Tower, officer under arrest in, 369.
- Trade revival prospects, 17.
- Unemployment, Debate on Vote on Account, Rep., 675, 689.
- World Economic Conference, Agenda, 371.

Meat:
- Bacon, Wiltshire and Danish, wholesale prices, 3rd March, 1933, 981.
- Imports:
  - in February, 1933, compared with January, 1933 and February, 1932, 2136-7.

Meat:—cont.
  Imports:—cont.
    from the Argentine, 1931 and 1932, percentage in jute wrappers manufactured in United Kingdom, information not available, 8.
    Bacon and hams:
      Anticipated and actual imports during period 23rd November, 1932 to 22nd February, 1933, 2150-2.
      Arrangements and working of, 2150-2.
      Voluntary restriction of:
        Negotiations in respect of period from 23rd March to 22nd June proceeding, 1341-2.
        Quantities to be imported from certain countries during month ending 22nd March, 1341, 1342.
    Restrictions:
      Effect on home producer, previous reply referred to, and further improvement in livestock prices since, 988-9.
      no Evasions known to be taking place, 987-8.
      Previous replies referred to, 806.
    Voluntary regulation of, proposals to exporting countries, previous reply referred to, 162.

Meerut, see under India.

Members of Parliament:
  New Member, Rotherham Borough, William Dobbie, 562.
  New writs:
    Ashford Division, 347.
    Rhondda, Borough of, East Division, 1943.
  Personal explanation, Sir Arthur Steel-Maitland, 1786.

Mercantile marine:
  Unemployment:
    at 23rd January, 1933, and 25th July, 1932, 2116.
    Matter constantly under review, 2117.

Merriman, Sir F. Boyd, Solicitor-General:
  King's Proctor:
    Abolition, consideration not proposed, 1775.
    Department, expenditure during 1932 and number of cases intervened in, 1774-5, 1775.
  Visiting Forces (British Commonwealth) Bill, Cons., 1119-22, 1490-5.

Mersey Tunnel Bill,
  Reported, 1967.

Merton and Morden urban district,
  Order for extension of Section one of the Sunday Entertainments Act, to, approved, 1499.

Meteorological Office:
  Development and improvement, room for, 1837.
  Tribute to, 1875.

Midlothian County:
  Able-bodied relief, expenditure on, 1930, 1931 and 1932, 1006.
  Unemployment benefit, expenditure on, 1931 and 1932, 698.

Midnapore, see under India.

Milk:
  Marketing scheme, not yet received from producers, but steps to be taken when received, and proposals of Commission under consideration, 2138.
  Reorganisation Commission, legislation, no statement possible at present, need for expression of opinion by persons concerned, 12-13.

Milk and milk products,
  imports, position to be brought under review, 2137.

Milk (Special Designations) Order, 1923, requirements re stating date of production on caps of bottles of certified milk, alteration, consideration of, not proposed at present, 550-1.

Mills, Major J. D.,
  Westminster Hall, Warren Hastings tablet, wording of new tablet, 363.

Milne, Mr. C.,
  Coal mining industry, Debate on Motion, 506.

Milne, Sir John S. Wardlaw-, see Wardlaw-Milne, Sir John S.

Milner, Major J.:
  Agricultural Marketing Bill, 2R, 1698-703.
  Anglo-Persian Oil Company, dispute, position of, 799.
  Benefices (Purchase of Rights of Patronage) Measure, 1933, Debate on Motion for presentation for Royal Assent, 1145-6.
  Doncaster Area Drainage Bill, 3R, 964-5.
  Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 255-8; 3R, 890, 891, 894-5, 935-8.
  India:
    Alwar Meo Movement, number of persons arrested in British India in connection with, and procedure followed in connection with trial, 4.
    Berar, steps for taking wishes of people of, into consideration before deciding as to constitutional future of, 6.
    Provincial Legislative Councils, decisions as to second chambers, 5.
    Punjab Land Alienation Act, extension to Province of Delhi, 787.
    Reserve Bank, legislation question, 570.
    Universities, military science as optional subject, 570.
  Municipal Corporations Audit Bill, 2R, 1520-1, 1523-34.
  Visiting Forces (British Commonwealth) Bill, Cons., 1122-3.

Mining industry, see Coal mining industry.

Ministry of Health Provisional Order (Buckingham and Oxford) Bill,
Message from the Lords, 1789.

Ministry of Health Provisional Order (Chester and Lancaster) Bill,
Reported, 377; Cons., 517; 3R, 695.

Ministry of Health Provisional Order (Eton Joint Hospital District) Bill,
Reported, 377; Cons., 517; 3R, 695.

Ministry of Health Provisional Order (Leek) Bill,
Message from the Lords, 1789.

Ministry of Health Provisional Order (Rugby Joint Hospital District) Bill,
Message from the Lords, 1789.

Ministry of Health Provisional Order (Sheffield) Bill,
Intro. and 1R, 779; no Standing Orders applicable, 1759; 2R*, 1943.

Ministry of Health Provisional Order (Taunton and District Joint Hospital District) Bill,
Message from the Lords, 1789.

Ministry of Health Provisional Order (Torquay) Bill,
Intro. and 1R, 347; no Standing Orders applicable, 1759; 2R*, 1943.

Mitchell, Mr. H. P.,
Chiswick sewage works, complaints as to odour from, and action re, 1965.

Mitcheson, Mr. G. G.:
Cumberland Market, Crown property, unoccupied flats and turning away of applicants, 1961.
Post Office, Buy British stamp cancelling machines, origin of, 366.
St. Pancras borough, Crown estate, vacant rooms, and question of tenancies, 1961, 1962.
Shops Acts (1912 to 1928) Amendment Bill, 2R, 2283-90.

Molson, Mr. A. Hugh Elsdale,
Doncaster Drainage Bill, urgency of passing, 824.

Monmouthshire:
Roads, special grant in 1931-32, 1164-5.
Unemployment, 17th August, 1931, and 23rd August, 1933, 568.

Monsell, Commander Rt. Hon. Sir Bolton M. Eyres, First Lord of the Admiralty:
Admiralty:
  Accountant-General's and Secretary's Departments, merging of, and saving from, 2162-3.
  Naval and Marine officers employed at, numbers on 1st January, 1914 and 1933, and numbers of personnel on same dates, 1951.

Monsell, Commander Rt. Hon. Sir Bolton M. Eyres:—cont.
Dartmouth College:
  Cost, reduction of, 2163-4.
  Fees, system, 2212.
  Opening of, to boys not intending to make Navy a career, under consideration, 2164-5.
France, naval estimates, 1931, 1932 and 1933, 1970.
Italy, naval estimates, 1931, 1932 and 1933, 1970.
Navy:
  Beer bars in chief and petty officers' messes in shore establishments, management of, 1952.
  Clothing purchased for personal use, landing of, permitted if accompanied by pass, as for provisions, 1952.
  Construction:
    1933 programme, particulars of, and allocation of work, 2161-2.
    increase in Estimate and explanation, 2159.
  Cruisers, leaders and destroyers, and submarines, numbers over 15 years of age, 699.
  Estimates, increase, explanation, 2159-61.
  Fleet Air Arm, increase in estimate, explanation, 2160.
  Herring drifters, number taken up on charter during late War, and position in event of future war, 1950.
  Invalided ratings, total number during 1932, number with pulmonary tuberculosis and number with tuberculosis whose disability accepted as attributable to service, 1951-2.
  Officer entered as cadet at Dartmouth, and as special-entry cadet, approximate net cost to State, 1950, 2212.
  Personnel, increasing, 2168.
  Personnel of ships, frequent changes in, during commission, undesirability of, and steps taken to remedy, 2157-8.
  Petty officers, examinations for, change in system, 2170.
  Promotion:
    Balance between junior and senior officers, 2165-6.
    Improvement in position, 2168-9.
  Ratings, eligibility for advancement, 1968-9.
  Royal Marines, numbers of officers and men in sea-going ships of Royal Navy and serving in shore establishments and barracks, 1952.
  Training:
    in Sailing ships, reason for not carrying out scheme, 2170-1.
    in Seamanship, 2169.
Supply, Navy Estimates, statement, 2159-71, 2172, 2176, 2181, 2184, 2210, 2212.
United States of America, naval estimates, 1931, 1932 and 1933, 1970.

Montrose,
test work, proceedings re discontinuance, 158-9.

Moore, Lieut.-Colonel T. C. R.:
- Agriculture, potatoes, import duty, 563-4.
- Army, remounts, particulars as to purchases, 1932, and future policy re, 176-7.
- Ayrshire, experimental placing of unemployed men on the land in, 159.
- Coroners, prospects of legislation for revision of powers of, 381.
- Czechoslovakia, Rumania and Yugoslavia, Pact, action to be taken by British Government, 1597.
- Fishing industry, Scotland, artificial hatching of salmon in rivers, action re, 1347-8.
- Horses:
  - Draught, question as to adequacy of supply to meet demand necessitated by revival of arable agriculture, 808.
  - Heavy horse-breeding, encouragement, question as adequacy of schemes, 808.
- Shipping industry, obsolete tonnage, sale to foreign owners, 790.

Moore-Brabazon, Lieut.-Colonel J. T. C.:
- Aerial warfare:
  - Commercial aircraft as potential fighters, 1850.
  - Possibilities of, 1847-8.
- Aircraft factories, situation of, 1846.
- Aviation, International control, and abolition of air forces, criticisms of proposals, 1848-9.
- Coupon trading, investigation of question by Departmental Committee, 1601.
- Defence, consideration of estimates together desired, 1851.
- Disarmament, aerial, British Government proposals, criticism of, 1850-1.
- Gift Coupons Bill, 2R, 1563-8, 1573, 1579.
- Russia, British claims, addition of question to agenda of International Economic Conference, 1180.
- Supply, Air Estimates, Sir Philip Sassoon's statement, 1846-51.

Morris, Mr. J. P.:
- Public assistance expenditure:
  - Equalisation of burden, 1334, 1335.
  - of all Local authorities for last available year, 1334.
  - Rate charges for, equalisation, Debate on Motion for Adjournment, 1749-55, 1756, 1758.
- Rates, aggregate value of 1d. rate levied on total rateable value of all local authorities, 1333.
- Taxation, excessive, Debate on Motion, 416-20.

Morris, Mr. O. T.
- Business of Courts Committee, prospects of legislation to give effect to recommendations of, 1963.

Motor coaches, long distance,
- average number entering and leaving Metropolis from distance exceeding 30 miles, daily, information not available, 538.

Motor cycles,
- without silencers, required information not available, 360.

Motor vehicles:
- Drivers:
  - Hours:
    - Compliance with Road Traffic Act, kept in mind by authorities, 2122.
    - Enforcement of Section 19 of Road Traffic Act, difficulty and action re, 2123-4.
    - Operation of law re, previous reply referred to, 1959.
    - Prosecutions and convictions for offences under Section 19 of Road Traffic Act, 1930, Metropolitan Police district, none in 1931, and number in 1932, 2122.
  - Licences:
    - Knowledge of code of the road as condition of issue, under consideration, 820.
    - Oral examination on rules of the road for new applicants, legislation would be required and not considered necessary at present, but question to be borne in mind, 1326-7.
  - Physical fitness, declaration re, and imposition of further requirements undesirable at present, 359.
- Fire extinguishers, petrol-driven vehicles conveying explosives required to carry, but requirement for all vehicles not justified, 1959-60.
- Head lights, dazzle, revised draft of regulations issued and representations under consideration, 990.
- Insurance policies not affording full cover to owners in all caes, 1775-6.
- Licences expiring on 30th September, proposal re extension for one month not agreed to, but present arrangement re surrender of licence for period from 1st October to 31st December on 31st October, 1959.
- Lorries, drivers' hours:
  - Accidents at Kilndown and at Eastriggs where excessive hours had been worked, 2123.
  - more Effective means for enforcement of law re, under consideration, 2123, 2124.
- Motor-horn, standard type, experiments considered but decided against, 360.
- Rear lights, at top of vehicle, amendment of regulations under consideration, 1968.
- Taxation, American Reports known of, and Budget statement to be awaited for policy re, 1264-5.

Motoring offences,
- noise, convictions for, 1930 and 1931, figures for 1932 not yet available, 1325.

Municipal Corporations Audit Bill:
- 2R, 1503-63.
- Attitude of borough councils and Association of Municipal Corporations, 999.

Munro, Mr. P.,
- housing, applications from local authorities for sanction to erection by direct labour of schemes since 1st January, 1932, and number approved, 2153.

Musicians, orchestral,
- taxation of mechanical music apparatus to ensure abandonment in favour of employment of, not considered practicable, 200-1.

Nall, Sir Joseph:
- Ceylon, tea imports from, 1344.
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, 3R, 889, 891, 899, 927-31, 946.
- National finance, estimates, need for adequate system of examination, 1481-2.
- Rates, product of penny rate levied on total rateable value of all rateable properties, 1334.
- Supply, Army Estimates:
  - Mr. Cooper's statement, 1437.
  - Pensions and other non-effective charges, Com., 1481-2.

Nall-Cain, Hon. R.:
- Liverpool, Civil hospitals, number of Ministry of Pensions patients being treated for war disabilities in, and amount of accommodation in Mossley Hill hospital, 802.
- Taxation, excessive, Debate on Motion, 426-8.

Narcotic Drugs, Convention for Limiting the Manufacture and Regulating the Distribution of, 1931,
- to be ratified before date contemplated in Convention, 1360.

Nathan, Major H. L.,
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 307-10, 311-2; 3R, 923-7, 933.

Nation, Brigadier-General J. J. H.:
- Arms and munitions of war, export to China and Japan, embargo, approval of policy, 119-20.
- Army:
  - Half-pay establishement, abolition or reduction advocated, 1409-1.
  - Land purchase, explanation of increase in estimate desired, 1408.
  - Mechanisation, 968, 1407.
  - Mechanised brigade, reason for demechanisation, 967.
  - Movements, decreased estimate for, approval, and possibility for further, 1407, 1408.
  - Officers:
    - Promotion, criticism of working of, and need for improvement, 1411-2.
    - in Senior ranks, excessive number, 1409-10.
  - Royal Military Academy and Royal Millitary College, amalgamation advocated, 1409.
  - Royal Artillery, promotion, rate, 197.
  - Strength, deficiency, 1407.
- Cadet units, question of holding of camps, 1408.

Nation, Brigadier-General J. J. H.:— cont.
- China and Japan, Debate in Committee on Supply, 119-20.
- Oxford University, pacifist resolution, 1412.
- Supply:
  - Army Estimates:
    - Mr. Cooper's statement, 1381, 1405-13, 1458.
    - Number of land forces, Com., 1476, 1477.
  - Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 119-20.
- Territorial Army:
  - Mechanisation, 1407.
  - Review, forthcoming, 176.
  - Strength, reasons for reduction, 1476.

National Association for the Employment of Ex-Sailors, Soldiers and Airmen,
- increased assistance advocated, 1403.

National Council of Social Service,
- grant to, 593-4.

National finance:
- Estimates:
  - increased Control over, by House, suggestions for, 1428-9, 1430.
  - Examination:
    - Need for adequate system, 1481-2.
    - Suggestions re examination, difficulties of carrying out, 1430-1.
- Expenditure, investigation by Public Accounts Committee, 1430.
- 5 per cent. War Loan conversion, cost of advertising, 28-9.
- Foreign loans, embargo on, reason for policy, and reference to previous reply as to future of, 1000-1.
- Optional conversion issues, restriction:
  - Local authorities not prevented from issuing stock for purpose of funding mortgages, 1782.
  - Reason for, and no statement as to when to be withdrawn, 1782.
- Sterling:
  - Budgetary steps for reduction of value of, no intention of, 1339.
  - Rise in value of, effect on export trade, situation being closely watched, 1339.
- Trustee securities, new issues, 1782.

National Flying Services, see under Aviation.

National health insurance:
- Medical benefit, cessation of entitlement to, at end of 1933, 1337.
- Panel Committees, appointment, regulations re, 158.
- Unemployed persons, position of, in June, 2119-20.
- Voluntary contributors, opportunity of becoming, 2126-7.
- Voluntary insurance, no extension of scope in prospect, 2126-7.

National Industrial Council Bill,
- Motion for leave to introduce, 1175-8; Intro. and 1R, 1178.

National Savings Certificates,
- holding of, by Addison Gardens Committee, decision re, 810-1.

Naval Estimates,
- for 1931, 1932 and 1933 in France, Italy and U.S.A., 1970.

Navy:
- Battleships:
  - Abolition desired, 2192.
  - Reduction in size advocated, 2223.
- Beer bars in chief and petty officers' messes in short establishments, management of, 1952.
- Cadets, from public schools, increase in number advocated, 2242.
- Capital ships position re, 2228.
- Clothing purchased for personal use, landing of, permitted if accompanied by pass, as for provisions, 1952.
- Coal fuel, return to, prosperity of coal industry could not be restored by, 2229.
- Colloidal fuel, development of, desirable, 2198-201.
- Commander, numbers of ex-mates and ex-mates (E) and ex-special entry cadets promoted to, or to equivalent rank and years, 1953.
- Commander and engineer commander, numbers of promotions to, from ex-mates and ex-mates (E) and from ex-special service cadets, 1953, 1955.
- Commissioned rank, numbers of seaman and engine-room ratings taking higher educational examination for, in October, 1932, under new regulations, and number passing, 1955.
- Construction:
  - 1933 programme, 2228.
    - Approval, 2208.
    - Criticism, 2173-9.
    - Justification, 2237-8.
    - Particulars of, and allocation of work, 2161-2.
  - Allocation of work, 2181.
  - Destroyers, in dockyards and by private contract, comparison of cost, 2232-3.
  - increase in Estimate and explanation, 2159.
- Construction and repair work, spreading out of, among Government yards and contractors, 2233.
- no direct Contributions by Dominions to upkeep of, apart from New Zealand contribution towards Singapore Naval Base, but maintenance of naval forces and establishments at own cost, 1772.
- Cruisers:
  - Cost of, 2191.
  - Fitting out of, 2191.
  - Position, 2191-2.
- Cruisers, leaders and destroyers, and submarines, numbers over 15 years of age, 699.
- Diesel engines, position re, 2231-2.
- Engineering and executive branches:
  - Common entry for cadets in, and training, etc., 2259.

Navy:—cont.
- Engineering and executive branches:—cont
  - Number of cadets to be entered through Dartmouth and number of commissions to lower-deck ratings, during present year, information not yet available, 1953.
  - Number of cadetships to be offered at special entry examination in June, and total number of special entry executive cadetships in present year, 1953.
  - Numbers of special-entry cadets entered in, each year 1913 to 1933, 1953, 1954-5.
  - Promotions from lower deck, 1932, 1953.
- Estimates, 1933:
  - Sir Bolton Eyres Monsell's statement, 2159-262.
    - Personnel, Amendment (withdrawn), 2236-60.
  - *Com., 2261-3.
  - Increase:
    - Criticism, 2172-4, 2224-5.
    - Explanation, 2159-61.
- increased Expenditure, undesirability, 2250-2.
- Fleet Air Arm, increase in estimate, explanation, 2160.
- Flying boats, doubt as to value of, compared with cruisers, 2191.
- Food supplies, British-caught fish, position re, 350-1.
- Herring drifters, number taken up on charter during late War, and position in event of future war, 1949-50.
- real Increase in expenditure on naval side, information requested, 2189-90.
- Internal combustion or Diesel engines, question as to, 2180.
- Invalided ratings, total number during 1932, number with pulmonary tuberculosis and number with tuberculosis whose disability accepted as attributable to service, 1951-2.
- Medical branch, shortage of officers, 2259.
- Men, later age for retirement, advocated, 2243.
- Motor ambulance, withdrawal from Royal Naval Armament Depot at Priddy's Hard, and consequent arrangements, 700.
- Naval bases, situation of, 2185.
- Officer entered as cadet at Dartmouth, and as special-entry cadet, approximate net cost to State, 1950, 2212.
- Officers:
  - Increase in, and decrease in personnel, criticism, 2213.
  - Proportion to men excessive, 2196.
  - on Retired and emergency list, 2241.
  - Retirement of, at top of Navy List, 2196-7.
- Oil fuel:
  - Increase in use of, and decrease in use of coal, 2179.
  - Information requested re, 2179-80.
  - Low temporary carbonisation and hydrogenation processes, considerations in connection with, 2230-1.
- Oil fuel and coal, comparison, 2229-30.

Navy :—cont.
- Pay cuts :
  - Comparison of position of officers and men, 2213-4.
  - Restoration of some, advocated, 2214.
- Personnel :
  - Comparison with other countries, too much importance should not be attached to actual numbers, 2252-3.
  - Drafting problem, and measures re, 2253-5.
  - Estimate, *Com., 2261.
  - Importance of, and of maintenance of high standard of training, 2236-43.
  - Increase, question of effect on next year's estimates, 2190.
  - Increasing, 2168.
  - Reduction in, partly due to technical changes, 2249-50.
  - of Ships, frequent changes in, during commission, undesirability of, and steps taken to remedy, 2157-8.
- Petty officers, examinations for, change in system, 2170.
- Promotion :
  - see also under Commander above.
  - Balance between junior and senior officers, 2165-6.
  - Improvement in position, 2168-9, 2255-6.
  - Lower deck scheme, 1955-6, 2213, 2256.
  - to acting Mate and acting mate (E), each year 1913 to 1932, 1953-4.
  - Suggestions, 2246-7.
  - of Warrant officers, suggestion, 2246.
- Protection of trade by, value of trade, 2236.
- Ratings, eligibility for advancement, 1968-9.
- Recruiting number of men offering and number of rejections, 1930-31 and 1931-32, 178.
- Repair work and refitting, accumulation, 2207.
- Reserve, training, importance of, 2240-1.
- Royal dockyards :
  - Employés, wastage, 2233.
  - Reduction in number of workers, 2206.
  - Unestablished men :
    - Discharges avoided as far as possible, 830.
    - over 45, number, information not available, 828-9.
    - Position re establishment, 830.
- Royal Marines :
  - Numbers of officers and men in sea-going ships of Royal Navy and serving in shore establishments and barracks, 1952.
  - Promotion in, 2258-9.
- Royal Naval and Royal Naval Volunteer Reserves, Captains, grant of rank of Commodore to certain number, 2259-60.
- Short service system, 2244-5, 2256-7.
- Sisal cordage, result of trials, and decision re purchase of East African sisal, 183-4.
- Submarines, Davis submerged escape apparatus, 2180-1.
- Training :
  - greater Expenditure on fuel and munitions desirable, 2246-7, 2249.
  - Fuel allowance, cut restored, 2258.

Navy :—cont.
- Training :—cont.
  - in Sailing ships, 2170, 2219, 2239-40, 2248-9.
  - Sea-training, importance of, 2239.
  - in Seamanship, 2169.
- Victualling and Clothing, Estimate, *Com., 2262.
- Wages etc., Estimate, *Com., 2261-2.
- Works, Buildings and Repairs at Home and Abroad, Estimate, *Com., 2262.

Neath,
- numbers wholly unemployed, temporarily stopped and in casual employment, in February, 1929, 1930, 1931, 1932, 1933, 2158.

New Forest,
- electricity pylons, no announcement possible at present, 1167.

New Zealand.
- Dairy produce imports from, position, previous reply referred to, 1617.
- Eggs from, marking of, 541-2.
- Primage duties, no increase in, 553-4.
- Rate of exchange, alteration, previous reply referred to, 1764.
- Sales tax, imposition of, 554.

Newcastle-on-Tyne,
- unemployment, 25th January, 1932 and 23rd January, 1933, 518-9.

Newfoundland :
- British deportees, 1931 and 1932, 1002.
- Grant-in-aid, 179, 1097-109.

Newton, Sir Douglas G. C. :
- Agricultural Marketing Bill, 2R, 1721-6, 1733.
- Bacon, voluntary regulation of imports, negotiations with foreign countries, 1341, 1342.

Nicholson, Mr. G. :
- Benefices (Purchase of Rights of Patronage) Measure, 1933, Debate on Motion for presentation for Royal Assent, 1140.
- British Museum, Entomological Department, staffing of, 181, 182.
- Coal mining industry, Debate on Motion, 454.
- Coupon trading, inquiry by Commission, 1602.
- Prison service, applications from officers in London for transfers to provincial prisons during 1932, 2156.
- Spain, British coal import restrictions, 174, 175.
- Supply, Air Estimates, Sir Philip Sassoon's statement, 1821.
- Unemployment benefit, transitional payments, applicants, right of personal interview with commissioners, 525.

Nicholson, Colonel Rt. Hon. W. G. :
- Chairman's Panel, report from, 1789.
- Selection Committee, reports from, 23, 378, 1001, 1789-90, 2149.

Norfolk:
Agricultural workers, unemployment position, 200.
Road maintenance grant, 1164-5.
Wheat deficiency advance payments, amount, and amount of assignments, 808.

North Wales:
District audits, steps being taken to ensure adequate number of officers with competent knowledge of Welsh language, 1168-9.
Loans outstanding due from local authorities in six counties of, for 1921-22 and 1931-32, statement to be supplied, 185.

Northern Ireland,
spirits, beer and wine, quantities retained for consumption in, in 1932, and estimated attributable revenue, 28.

Northumberland, residential instructional centre to be established on Kielder Estate, 1319-20.

Norwich,
new Employment Exchange, difficulties overcome and work to proceed, 804.

Nunn, Mr. W.:
Aeroplanes, embargo on export to China, 1156.
Arms and munitions of war, export to China and Japan, embargo, approval of policy, 95, 100.
China:
  British aircraft, steps for bringing superior quality of, to notice of Chinese Government, 1598.
  British subjects, taxation of, 1946.
  Hankow, levy of business taxes from foreigners, 1946.
  and Japan, Debate in Committee on Supply, 95-101.
  London Purchasing Commission, purchase of British aircraft by, 1597-8.
Supply, Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 95-101.

O'Connor, Mr. T. J.:
Bank of England, gold holding, recent purchases, and suggestion re issue of weekly statement, 573.
Denmark, adverse balance of trade with, 1343.
Doncaster Area Drainage Bill, Com., 962.
France, lace machinery imports from Great Britain, surtax on, 976-7.
Municipal Corporations Audit Bill, attitude of Association of Municipal Corporations, 999.
Poverty, widespread, Debate on Motion, 1198-205.

O'Donovan, Dr. W. J.:
Greenwich, Royal Naval Hospital, criticism of charge for admission and condition of, 2225-6.
Rural industries, Debate on Motion, 2091-2.
Supply, Navy Estimates, Sir Bolton Eyres Monsell's statement, 2225-6.

Official Secrets Act,
officer under arrest in the Tower, see under Tower.

Old age pensions,
number of persons in receipt of, continuing to work, previous reply referred to, 566.

Oman, Sir Charles W. C.:
India, Joint Select Committee:
  Indian representatives, method of choosing and right of, to question witnesses, 1960.
  Representatives of the services, facilities for, 1961.
Road and rail transport, Government measure implementing Salter Report, prospects of placing before the House, 1165.

Ormsby-Gore, Rt. Hon. W. G. A., First Commissioner of Works:
Agricultural Marketing Bill, 2R, 1676.
Edinburgh, new Government offices, question of proceeding with scheme under consideration, 361.
Glasgow, new Government offices at, question not considered, Edinburgh regarded as administrative capital, 361.
Government offices, Whitehall scheme:
  Decision against building over open spaces by Embankment, reconsideration undesirable, 362.
  no Decision yet reached, 362.
  Modified scheme, question under consideration, 362.
House of Commons:
  Charles Bradlaugh, memorial to, no charge on public funds, possible, 1348.
  Memorials in, procedure re, and copy of rules and regulations to be supplied, 1348-9.
  Sir John Eliot, no public money to be expended on proposed memorial to, 1174.
Kensington Gardens, public convenience recently erected, planting of shrubs on garden site of, 1167-8.
Norwich, new Employment Exchange, difficulties overcome and work to proceed, 804.
Westminster Hall, Warren Hastings tablet, new inscription, 363.

Ouse River, Yorkshire, scheme for, grant, previous reply referred to, 809-10.

Owen, Major G.:
Carnarvonshire, increase in rate owing to additional demands for public assistance, 185.
Local authorities, increased burden on, owing to additional demands for public assistance, relief measures, 185.
North Wales, loans outstanding due from local authorities in six counties of, for 1921-22 and 1931-32, 185.

Oxford University, pacifist resolution, 1412.

Oxfordshire,
- wheat deficiency payments, advances, amount paid in, 2138.

Painswick,
- electricity supply under consideration, 697-8.

Palestine:
- Imperial preference to products of, considered but not found possible, 379, 829.
- Jewish watchman, Joseph Benjamini, death of, particulars of circumstances, 354-5.
- Private flying, assistance advocated, 1876.

Paraguay:
- Arms export to, see under Arms and Munitions of War.
- and Bolivia, dispute, position in, 10-1.

Parent Coal Corporation,
- investigation of affairs by Official Receiver, 202.

Parkinson, Mr. J. A.:
- Burma, Government, annual migration to Maymyo, suspension question, 6.
- Coal mining industry:
  - Debate on Motion, 486-91.
  - Pit head baths, 162.
- India:
  - All-India Medical Council Bill, delaying of introduction of, desirability, until Federal Legislature constituted, 6.
  - Indians, repatriated from South Africa, total number during 1932, and question as to provision for under assisted emigration scheme, 785.
  - Trade commissionerships in Europe and elsewhere, question of further appointments, 785.
- Kenya, goldfield, Kakamega, compensation paid to natives for disturbance or destruction, 1000.
- Motor drivers' hours, lack of observance of Section 19 of Road Traffic Act, and action re, 2123, 2124.
- Wigan:
  - Transitional payments, determinations by public assistance committee since January, 1932, 522-3.
  - Unemployment in January, 1932, and 1933, 529.

Parliamentary procedure:
- Adjournment, Motions for, 596.
- Chair, Member should address, 1213.
- Committee, merits or demerits of Bill cannot be debated, 960, 961.
- any Member moving a substantive Motion has right of reply, 1151.
- Members must not address questions directly to other Members, 1036.
- Questions to Ministers:
  - Absence of Members in whose names questions put down, 22-3.
  - re Alien Jews, no objection to, 1352.
  - dealing with Bank of England, 1966.
  - Debate, development into, 166.
  - Information being given, 1334.
  - Next question, 169, 803.

Parliamentary procedure:—cont.
- Questions to Ministers:—cont.
  - Notice required and question to be put down, 183, 186, 348, 361, 534, 780, 788, 796, 809, 1323, 1327, 1333, 1345, 1603, 1606, 1759, 1948, 1966, 2119.
  - Opinion, matter of, 1321, 1591.
  - no Point of Order, 167.
  - Private Notice, disallowance of question re Committee of Indians to be associated with Joint Select Committee, 561-2.
  - such Questions cannot be gone into, 1322.
  - Reading of statement or circulation in Official Report only, a matter for the House, 1595.
  - Supplementary:
    - not Arising, 810, 814, 1168, 1330.
    - Different question from that on Paper, 359.
    - too Far beyond original, 377.
    - Question could not be dealt with in answer to, 1321.
    - outside Scope of Private Notice question as submitted, 806.
- Supply, Committee, matters requiring legislation cannot be discussed, 1104, 1106, 1837, 1887.

Passports:
- British visas:
  - for Germans, requirements, and no information as to number within last fortnight, 798-9.
  - List of countries whose nationals not required to obtain, to enter Great Britain, 1943.
- Visa fees, remission, not possible at present, 1001.

Peake, Captain O.,
- Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act (1912) Amendment Bill, 2R, 762.

Penge Urban District,
- Order for extension of section one of Sunday Entertainments Act to, approved, 345-6.

Pensions:
- Attributability, consultation of medical specialists in doubtful and difficult cases, but appointment of independent medical arbitrator not possible, 1003.
- Cases:
  - Crabtree, H., 29-30.
  - Westbrook, James, daughter of, 799-800.
- Children reaching 21 and unable owing to defects to earn living, 799-800.
- Disallowed claims, procedure where fresh evidence produced, 20-1.
- total Expenditure, comparison with United States of America, impossibility owing to difference in systems of administration, 1004.
- Hospitals:
  - Civil, policy re use of, 801-2.
  - Highbury, Birmingham, closure, 1599.
  - Liverpool, see under Liverpool.
  - Maintained by Ministry, list of, 1599.
  - Number not under control of Ministry in which accommodation reserved for Ministry patients, 1599.

[cont.

Pensions:—cont.
Hospitals:—cont.
Transfer of patients from, no truth in statements, 801.
Independent tribunals, decisions final, 21.
Mental cases, policy as to treatment of, and no change in, statements in "Daily Herald" untrue, 800-1.
Pensioner's death, connection with War service, provision for dependents, 1004.
Seven years' limit, cases outside, results of those recognised during 1932, 363-4.
Treatment, by panel doctors, 1598.

Percy, Rt. Hon. Lord Eustace S. C.:
Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 218, 219, 292-4, 309-325.
Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill, 2R, 1022-7, 1047, 1069, 1071.

Performing Animals (Regulation) Amendment Bill, legislation on lines of, not possible at present, 1359.

Perkins, Mr. W. R. D.:
Abyssinia, prohibition of export of aircraft to, without licence, 1156.
Air Force:
Gypsy I engines, sale of, 1938-9.
Parachutes, types of, 1938.
Aviation:
Air Ministry control, relaxation advocated, 1908-9.
Flying over other countries, reciprocal abolition of requirements of permits, etc., suggested, 1911.
Light aeroplane clubs, subsidies, increase unjustified and unnecessary, 1906-10.
as Power for peace, 1910-1.
Private owners, 1909-10.
Butter, Russian, mixing with Empire butter by wholesale merchants and sale as Empire butter, 2152.
Machinery, result of tariff policy, 552.
Painswick, electricity, demand for supply and question as to prospects of, 697.
Supply, Air Estimates:
Sir Philip Sassoon's statement, 1906-11.
Technical and Warlike Stores, Com., 1938-9.

Persistent Offenders Committee, legislation to carry out recommendations of, under consideration, 1360.

Peru:
Arms export to, see under Arms and Munitions of war.
and Colombia, dispute, position in, 10-11.

Petherick, Mr. M.:
Cornwall, standard of health, 551.
Municipal Corporation Audit Bill, 2R, 1503-9, 1526, 1527, 1538, 1547.

Peto, Sir Basil E.:
Co-operative societies, deputation to Prime Minister, 19.
Glove industry, decision on recommendations of Import Duties Advisory Committee, 349, 506-9, 511-2, 515.

Peto, Sir Basil E.:—cont.
House of Commons:
Division Lists, non-printing of, in Votes and Proceedings, 1784.
Standing Orders, appointment of technical committee to revise, 1783.
Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 214.
Import Duties Act, Debate on Motion for Adjournment, 506-9, 511-2, 515.
Russia, trade with:
Balance of, during certain periods, and corresponding figures for trade between U.S.A. and, 348, 829.
Limitation of purchases from Soviet Government selling agency to amount corresponding with Soviet purchases of British goods, suggestion for, in any new Trade agreement, 348.

Petroleum (Motor Vehicles) Regulation, no reason to suppose that requirement as to fire-extinguishers not observed in Metropolitan area, but inquiry would be made on receipt of information to contrary, 1960.

Pickering, Mr. E. H.:
China and Japan, Debate in Committee on Supply, 137-9.
Naval Estimates for 1931, 1932 and 1933 in France, Italy and U.S.A., 1970.
Poverty, widespread, Debate on Motion, 1233-5, 1236.
Supply, Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 137-9.

Pickford, Hon. M. A.,
Shops Acts (1912 to 1928) Amendment Bill, 2R, 2314-7.

Pike, Mr. C. F.:
Broadcasting, Empire station, 993.
Cardonald, housing scheme, 973.
Coal mining industry, overtime, 1350.
Denmark, imports from, and exports to, 1932, 1342.
House of Commons, telephone kiosks, number erected or installed during Christmas Recess and total cost of, 1349.
Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Cons., 851-2, 853, 878-9, 3R, 947.
Jersey, Military force in, 970.
Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill, 2R, 1034, 1078, 1079.
Senior trade commissioner and commercial counsellor, business qualifications, 1600.
Supply:
Air Estimates, Sir Philip Sassoon's statement, 1812.
Army Estimates, Mr. Cooper's statement, 1432.
Territorial Army camps, attendance of men in receipt of public assistance, 1432.
Unemployment benefit, transitional payments, means test, family income, 1318.

Pocklington rural district, electricity supply, position as regards, 1341.

Police:
- Casts and moulds, Poller process, considered but adoption not proposed, 990.
- Organisation in regard to detection of crime, measures for improvement, and difficulties in connection with, 536.

Polish Corridor problem:
- League of Nations Commission on, suggestion not to be made, 1944.
- Position, 1944.

Political Honours Scrutiny Committee:
- Constitution, 179.
- regular Consultation of, and date of last meeting, 179.

Pontardawe,
- numbers wholly unemployed and temporarily stopped, February, 1929, 1930, 1931, 1932 and 1933, 2158.

Poor law:
- Casual wards:
  - Cumberland, highest number of persons counted in, 1930, 1931 and 1932, and increase in number of wards, 1929, 184-5.
  - London, average numbers in, on Fridays, November, December, 1932, and January, 1933 and 1931-32, further information required not available, 550.
- Expenditure:
  - 1930-31, 1334.
  - Equalisation, legislation not proposed at present, issues under consideration by Government in connection with Unemployment Insurance Commission report, 1334.
  - Local authorities not required to submit estimates, and required information not available, 548.
- London County Institutions, transference of aged people as result of improved classification of institutions, but measures taken to minimise inconvenience, 548-9.
- Relief:
  - Able-bodied unemployed, as national charge, opinion expressed by certain number of local authorities, 1175.
  - increased Burden, 577-8, 673,4, 690-1.
  - additional Demands for, relief of burden on local authorities, statement in Debate referred to, 185.
- Out relief:
  - Cumberland, numbers of persons including dependents in receipt of, 1930-31, and 1931-32, and cost of, 1790-1.
  - average Number of unemployed persons in receipt of, excluding dependents, in each week of January, 1933, 700.
  - Rate charges for, equalisation, Debate on Motion for Adjournment, 1749-58.
  - to Recipients of unemployment benefit or transitional payments, in area of London public assistance committee, 1323-4.

Poor law relief, Scotland:
- Able-bodied, expenditure on, in various counties and burghs for certain periods, 1006, 1793-4.
- Test work, Montrose, proceedings re, discontinuance, 158-9.

Port Talbot,
- juveniles, unemployment, 23rd January, 1933, 531.

Portsmouth:
- County Borough, Order for extension of Section one of Sunday Entertainments Act, to, approved, 1499.
- Dockyard, electrical fitters, discharges, 2207, 2233.

Portuguese ports,
- flag discrimination, 347.

Post Office:
- Advisory Committee, proceedings regarded as being confidential, and publication undesirable, 811.
- Air Mail service:
  - Development, proposals for, 1862-4.
  - Letters weighing less than quarter-ounce, provision, previous reply referred to, 23-4.
  - Parcel traffic, small decrease in, and no opportunity lost of encouraging, 813.
  - Post Office attitude, 1889-90.
- Central Telegraph Office, Cable room, stagnation of promotion and measures re, 812.
- Parcel traffic, decrease during last two years, 813.
- Savings Bank, depositors, deposits and withdrawal, 1929, 1930, 1931 and 1932, 202.
- Servants, contributory pensions, persons ceasing to be engaged in excepted employment, memorandum issued to, 13-14.
- Stamp-cancelling machines, country of origin of, 14-5, 366-7.
- Stamp machines, Colchester, extent of installation and extension under consideration, 811-2.
- Telegraph posts:
  - Damage during recent storm, 366, 1168.
  - Position re Canadian supply, 24.
  - Wooden, replacement by steel, reasons against, 365-6.
- Telephone service:
  - Automatic dialling, inefficiency not agreed to, though in some cases tuition course advisable, 813.
  - Automatic working, absorption of redundant staff in other exchanges, 1605.
  - Cables, expenditure on laying underground, 1932-33, and estimate for 1933-34, 1622.
  - Call Office at Kielder not possible owing to heavy costs, 1792.
  - Hand-microphone instrument, not specially liable to error, 812.
  - Sloane telephone exchange area, service found to be satisfactory, but specific instances of difficulty would be investigated, 812.

[cont.

Post Office:—cont.
Telephone service:—cont.
Trunk lines, proportion of, underground, and progress re substitution of underground for overhead lines, 992-3.
Telephonists, numbers employed on 31st December, 1931 and 1932, in London and in Provinces, 1605.

Postmaster-General,
visit to Glasgow, 1774.

Potter, Mr. J.,
Russia, British subjects, arrest and detention, 1944.

Pottery,
import duty question, 172, 509, 513.

Poverty, widespread,
Motion (Mr. Maxton), 1183-1250.

Pownall, Sir Assheton,
Russia, Commercial Counsellor at Moscow, question of publication of report from, on similar lines to that issued in 1931, 790.

Prescot, Lancs.,
post offices, pensions payments during 1932, 14.

Preston Corporation Bill,
Reported, 377; Cons., 967; 3R, 1501.

Price, Mr. G.:
Army estimates, increase, criticism, 1450-2.
Avon River, Warwick, scheme, position of, 809.
Barnsley, unemployment, 20th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, and number no longer signing on, 527.
Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act (1912) Amendment Bill, 2R, 767-9.
Cornwall, maternity and child welfare services, staff, 551.
Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 209-11; Cons., 847-9.
India:
Broadcasting, number of receiving licences in existence and proposed steps with view to development of broadcasting and prohibition of piracy, 785.
Civil aviation, steps for encouraging development of, 785.
Supply, Army Estimates, Mr. Cooper's statement, 1450-2.
Territorial Army, enlargement and building up, criticism of suggestions, 1450-2.
Unemployment, number of persons between ages of 18 and 21 unemployed, 1320.
Unemployment benefit:
Number of persons of ages 18 to 20 having exhausted their right to, and who are in receipt of transitional payment, 2111-2.
Transitional payments, means test, assessment of family income, gross or net earnings, 1317-8.

Price level,
internal, position re increase in, 553.

Prices, wholesale,
Motion (Mr. Hammersley), 1249-1308.

Prison Service:
Applications by officers in London for transfers to provinces, number during 1932 and reasons for, 2156-7.
Governor, filling of vacancies in rank of, procedure, 26-7.
Retirements between ages of 55 and 60 during five years ended 31st December, 1932, 1359-60.

Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899,
Commissioners, panel of, addition of members, 1001.

Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Bill,
*Intro., 562.

Privy Council Office,
Excess Vote, Resolution reported and agreed to, 965-6.

Procter, Major H. A.,
Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 268-70, 271, 272, 273.

Protection of Animals (Amendment) (No. 2) Bill,
*Intro., 827; Order for 2R read and discharged, Bill withdrawn, 562.

Public assistance, see Poor law relief.

Public health:
Hospitals, numbers, beds, and average cost per patient per week in each type, information to be supplied, 1778.
Maternal mortality, rates:
London, 1931, reference to Registrar-General's Statistical Review for 1931, 1338.
Reference to Registrar - General's Statistical Review for 1931 for required information, 1777-8.
Maternity and child welfare services, Cornwall, staff, inquiries being made, 551.

Public Health Service, Scotland, inquiry into, as recommended by Committee on Local Expenditure (Scotland), under consideration, 971-2.

Public Service Vehicles, road service licences, Stoke-on-Trent inquiry, 1005, 1166.

Public Works Facilities Scheme (Torquay Corporation) Bill,
Message from the Lords, 378.

Punjab, see under India.

Raikes, Mr. Henry V. A. M.,
Rural industries, Debate on Motion, 2087-90.

Rail and road transport:
- Committee on railway economies, setting up of, not desirable, 1165-6.
- further Consultation of interests concerned not necessary before introduction of legislation, but any suggestions in connection with scheme would be considered, 358.
- Report of American National Transport Committee, consideration to be given to, but conditions in America and England not entirely comparable, 1165.
- Salter Report, effect on rates, information not available, 1967-8.
- Taxation of road vehicles, Budget cannot be anticipated, 1325-6.

Railways:
- Agreement between London and North Eastern, London Midland and Scottish and Great Western Railway Companies, under consideration, and decision to be given at early date, 1163.
- Composition charging system, decision by Railway Rates Tribunal in connection with oil cake from Avonmouth Docks, position created by, under consideration, and appeal lodged by railway company, 1164.
- Steel sleepers, increased use of, 169.

Raiya, see under India.

Ramsbotham, Mr. Herwald, Parliamentary Secretary, Board of Education:
- Durham County, new school on road between Curley Crool and Boldon colliery, particulars re, accommodation of present schools in area, etc., 1362-4.
- Education:
  - Continuation schools, position re, 2125-6.
  - Elementary schools:
    - Numbers of children leaving, 1929-30, 1930-31 and 1931-32, 1330.
    - Warning of children by notice or special instruction on subject of traffic dangers, 1329-30.
  - Secondary school fees:
    - Alterations made in scales, White Paper will be issued showing, 1175.
    - Wales, progress in regard to new arrangements, 1502.
    - Position in Yorkshire under Circular 1421, 564.
  - Teachers:
    - Convicted of criminal offence, regulations re, 544.
    - Establishment proposed by local authorities for 1933-34 under Article 11 of Code still under consideration, 2150.
    - Numbers leaving training colleges and departments in 1932 and number unemployed 31st December, 1932, 2149.
    - Prosecutions of Mr. and Mrs. Duncan, particulars of cases, 543-5.

Ramsbotham, Mr. Herwald:—cont.
- Education:—cont.
  - Teachers:—cont.
    - Salaries, elementary:
      - Change from one scale to another, system, 1329.
      - estimated additional Cost for 1933-34 in consequence of number of annual increments payable in Scale IV areas being greater than in Scale III areas, system, 1329.
- Stoke-on-Trent, instruction of elementary school children on traffic dangers, 1329.

Ramsden, Sir Eugene,
- Commercial treaties, most-favoured-nation clause, infringements by foreign countries, 1762.

Rankin, Mr. R.:
- Brazil, British investors, official proposals offered re, 1172.
- Cotton goods, measures for increased preference within the Empire, 169, 348.
- Imports from Empire sources, percentage carried in British ships, 1931 and 1932, and steps for increase of, 981.
- Lancashire, estimated increase in rates in 1933 in each of 12 most populous towns, 197.
- Post Office, air mails, parcels and samples, steps for encouragement, 813.
- United States of America, British Empire building, New York, co-operation of Empire Marketing Board, 974.

Rates:
- Assessment committees, appeals from, 547.
- Assessment of houses on which work done as result of local campaigns for relief of unemployment, communication addressed to local authorities by Central Valuation Committee, 1778.
- Burden of public assistance, relief, previous reply referred to, 550.
- Increases in, owing to additional demands for public assistance, under consideration, 185.
- estimated Product of penny rate if levied on total rateable value of all rateable properties in England and Wales for current financial year, 1333-4.

Rathbone, Miss E.:
- Arms and munitions of war, exports embargo, negotiations re international agreement, 1594.
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 214, 302-3, 342-3.

Rawson, Sir Cooper:
- British Industries Fair, American device advertising product of Detroit, exhibited at, 1765.
- Housing, foreign bricks and cement, 832.

Ray, Sir William,
- Municipal Corporations Audit Bill, 2R, 1521-3.

Rea, Mr. W. R.:
Agriculture, wheat acreage prior to enactment of quota and area sown this year, 1604.
Housing, improvement areas, number scheduled since passing of 1930 Act, and period elapsing between passing of local authority's resolution and confirmation of order, 1331.
Unemployment benefit, transitional payments, amount included in Estimates for, in respect of, 25.

Redhill,
industrial analysis of persons recorded as unemployed at 20th February, 1933, 1618.

Registrar-General's Office, certificates issued by, checking of, 572.

Reid, Captain A. S. Cunningham, see Cunningham-Reid, Captain A. S.

Reid, Mr. J. S. C.,
World Economic Conference, Debate on Motion, 2045-7.

Remer, Mr. J. R.:
Coal mining industry, Debate on Motion, 500.
Import Duties Advisory Committee, recommendations of, countries with which negotiations proceeding, with, with result of non-confirmation, 172.
Pottery, import duty question, 172.
Shops Act (1912 to 1928) Amendment Bill, 2R, 2290-6, 2339.
Traffic, white lines, making of, compulsory at all corners, 819.

Renfrew County:
Able-bodied relief, expenditure on, in 12 months ended 15th May, 1930, 1931 and 1932, 1793-4.
Unemployment benefit, expenditure on, 1931 and 1932, 1793-4.

Rentoul, Sir Gervais S.,
Shops Acts (1912 to 1928) Amendment Bill, 2R, 2302-12.

Rhineland,
Mrs. Tebbitt's claim for compensation for loss of property in, position re, 382.

Rhys, Hon. C. A. U.,
Rural industries, Debate on Motion, 2085-7.

Riccall rural district,
electricity supply, position as regards, 1341.

Road Fund,
Irish Free State claim to, position re, 1361.

Road Traffic Act, 1930, Section 111 (2),
Regulations, consultation with representative organisations before making, 2124-5.

Road Traffic (Speedometer) Bill [Lords],
Message from the Lords, 193.

Road transport,
Bill re, to be introduced before Easter, 1165.

Road workers,
position re unemployment benefit for compulsory unemployment owing to bad weather, 1320.

Roads:
Expenditure, consideration of questions by Roads Advisory Committee, on which users of road transport represented, 1179.
Pedestrians' paths across London streets, indication of, under consideration by Committee on Traffic Signs, and suggestion as to use of metal studs to be brought to notice of Department, 1326.

Roberts, Sir Samuel:
Benefices (Purchase of Rights of Patronage) Measure, 1933, Debate on Motion for presentation for Royal Assent, 1149-51.
Taxation, excessive, Debate on Motion, 408-12.

Robinson, Mr. J. R.:
Army, pensions, men having served in campaigns prior to 1914-18, acceptance of birth certificates instead of date given on attestation as evidence of age, 175.
Cinematograph Fund and Film Institute, amount of money accumulated since 1st February and available for use of, 1610.
Coal mining industry, Debate on Motion, 484-6.
Housing, foreign materials, principal classes which local authorities find it necessary to use, 1780.
Japan, imports into Empire countries, compensating bounty to United Kingdom industries, 1760.
Prescot, Lancs, post office, pension payments 1932, 14.
Trade, exchange restrictions in foreign countries, arrangements for overcoming effect of, 1767.
Unemployment, local authorities' scheme, origin of materials, 2117-8, 2118.

Romford Employment Exchange, finding of employment for Irishmen, 526-7.

Ropner, Colonel L.:
Royal Seamen's Pension Fund:
  total Amount credited to, during 1932 out of contributions paid under National Health and Unemployment Insurance Acts, 2128.
  Number of pensions granted each year to seamen and to fishermen, 2129.
  Preference in award of pensions to masters and seamen having long sea-service in foreign-going ship, 2129.

Rosbotham, Sir Samuel,
- Agricultural Marketing Bill, 2R, 1717-21.

Ross, Mr. R.:
- Agricultural Marketing Bill, 2R, 1703-8.
- Army:
  - Arming of, 1421.
  - Infantry, question of protection against mechanised vehicles, 1421.
  - Mechanisation policy, information desired, 1420.
  - Organisation, question as to suitability of Cardwell system and need for consideration, 1419-20.
- Supply, Army Estimates, Mr. Cooper's statement, 1419-22, 1437, 1439.

Rosyth Dockyard:
- Position re, 2233-4.
- Position of, and effect on district, and reconsideration of question urged, 2215-7, 2234.
- Repair of oil ships advocated, 2217.

Rother Valley area,
- transitional payments, number of claims considered during last two months of 1932 and first two months of 1933, information to be supplied if obtainable, 2111.

Rotherham:
- Aldwarke Colliery, accident, 1610.
- Transitional payments:
  - Administration by public assistance committee, examples of, 608-10.
  - Public assistance commissioner:
    - Administration by, criticism, 612-4.
    - reasons for Appointment of, and particulars of administration, 608-11.
    - Name, 518.
    - Salary, previous reply referred to, 518.

Rothschild, Mr. J. A. de:
- Agricultural Marketing Bill, 2R, 1686-94.
- "Royal Ransom," racehorse, customs duty on, 187, 1340-1.

"Royal Ransom,"
- racehorse, position re customs duty on, 186-7, 1340-1.

Royal Seamen's Pension Fund:
- Administration, changes, improvement in position of fishermen by, and no dissatisfaction known of, 1332-3.
- Administration scheme, copy to be placed in Library, 1333.
- Amount credited to, during 1932, out of contributions paid under National Health and Unemployment Insurance Acts, 2128-9.
- Governing body, no vacancies on, at present, but suggestion as to representation on would be considered, 1333.
- Pensions:
  - Conditions governing award of, reference to copy of scheme in Library, and no reason to think that terms departed from, but any particular case would be inquired into, 1778-9.

Royal Seamen's Pension Fund:—cont.
- Pensions:—cont.
  - Numbers of awards, and numbers to fishermen, in 1929, 1930, 1931 and 1932, 2129.
  - Preference to masters and seamen who have served in foreign-going ships, 2129-30.
  - Refusal of, normal practice to inform applicant of reason, 1779.
- Unsuccessful applicants, submission of subsequent applications, 1779-80.

Rubber footwear, see Boots and shoes, rubber.

Rumania,
- pact with Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia, see under Czechoslovakia.

Runciman, Rt. Hon. W., President, Board of Trade:
- Aeroplanes and parts, Exports during 1932, value of, 1759.
- Agriculture:
  - Bankruptcies among farmers occupying 50 acres or more and less than 50 acres, during each of last five years, information not available, 162.
  - Imports, oats:
    - 1932, shown as consigned from Germany, not of German origin, 161.
    - Prohibition or control, no power of, 161.
  - Wheat, prices in local currency and in terms of gold at latest available date, in Great Britain, Belgium, France, Germany and Italy, 1794.
- Aliens, bankruptcies, during each of past 10 years, information not available, 1763.
- Argentina:
  - Commercial negotiations with, proceeding, 171.
  - Exchange restrictions, relaxation of, under discussion, 172, 977.
  - Oats imports from, negotiations in progress, but details cannot be given, 160.
  - Railways, British, purchase of greatest part of requirements in United Kingdom, 1791.
  - Trade delegation from, results, statement to be made in due course, 977.
- Arms and munitions of war, exports to all countries, excluding China and Japan, 1932 and January and February, 1933, required information to be supplied, 554-5.
- Bacon, Wiltshire and Danish, wholesale prices, 3rd March, 1933, 981.
- Boots and shoes, rubber:
  - Import duty on, action re, 980.
  - Imports from Japan, 1931 and 1932, 980.
- Canada, exports to, increase in, since grant of preferences arising out of Ottawa Agreements, 170.
- Chocolate milk, nutritive value of, from different classes of imported milk, question of action re, 174.

[cont.

Runciman, Rt. Hon. W.:—cont.

- Cinematograph films, marking of country of creation or origin, legislation not proposed at present, but suggestion noted, 982.
- Coke oven industry, required information not available, 196.
- Commercial treaties, Most-favoured-nation clause:
  - Infringements by foreign countries, no important cases of kind mentioned known of, during last three years, 1762.
  - Value of, to United Kingdom, 1763.
- Cotton industry, Japanese competition:
  - Consideration of question, and previous reply refered to, 975, 976.
  - Deputation received from Manchester of Commerce, 976.
- Coupon trading, departmental committee, composition and terms of reference under conisderation, 2134-5.
- Denmark:
  - Anglo-Danish Exhibition, subsequent imports of British goods, position re, 172-3.
  - Commercial negotiations with, 171, 1762, 2139.
- Electricity undertakings, capital expenditure, profits, etc., particulars for 1929-30 and 1930-31, 196-8.
- Flour, contracts, form of, 565.
- Food Council:
  - total Cost for 1932, 565.
  - Dispensing with, not proposed, 565.
- France:
  - Discrimination against United Kingdom goods, question under consideration, 977.
  - Lace machinery imports from Great Britain, surtax on, representations made re, 977.
- Gas undertakings, capital, receipts, expenditure and profits, particulars for 1929, 1930 and 1931, 196.
- Germany, oats, export bond system, 161-2.
- Holland, no commercial negotiations with, 171.
- Import duties, Empire content, percentages of, in operation in Great Britain, and main classes of imports affected, 171.
- Import Duties Advisory Committee, recommendations, deferring of decision on certain, in present stage of commercial negotiations and discussions with Denmark and Germany, 172.
- Imports:
  - from Empire sources, percentage carried in British ships, 1931 and 1932, information not available, and action for increase in, not proposed, 981.
  - Retained, of articles wholly or mainly manufactured, volume in 1923 and 1924, comparison with 1932, 1762.
- Japan:
  - China imports from, January and February, 1930, 1931 and 1932, 1761.
  - Exports to Empire countries:
    - Compensation bounty to United Kingdom industries, previous reply referred to, 1761.

Runciman, Rt. Hon. W.:—cont.

- Japan:—cont.
  - Exports to Empire countries:—cont.
    - Value during 1932, and proportion of total exports, 1760.
  - Trade Agreement with, abrogation question, consideration of, 975.
- Irish Free State, dairy produce imports from, required statement to be circulated as soon as possible, 2151.
- Jersey, lights and fog signals, measures re, 560.
- Linseed and linseed oil, imports and duties on, from India and the Argentine, 977-8.
- Machine tools, import duty, 173-4.
- Meat, import restrictions, no evasions known to be taking place, 987-8.
- Parent Coal Corporation, investigation of affairs by Official Receiver, 202.
- Pottery, import duty question to be borne in mind, 172.
- Russia, timber, contract of Timber Distributors, Ltd., position as regards Ottawa Agreements, 978.
- Spain, British coal import restrictions, 174-5.
- Sweden, commercial negotiations with, proceeding, 171.
- Switzerland, woollen and worsted tissues, import restrictions, 555.
- Tariffs, agreement for lowering, all round, proposals at World Economic Conference, previous reply referred to, 1763.
- Timber-growing industry, consideration of interests of, in trade negotiations with foreign countries, 979.
- Trade:
  - Exchange restrictions in foreign countries, action re, previous replies referred to, and prospects of report of committee, 1767.
  - Negotiations with foreign countries:
    - Constant touch with Ministry of Agriculture, 2139.
    - Progress, 983.
- Unemployment, loss in national income and national wealth in 1932 due to, estimates not possible, 1002.
- World Economic Conference, Debate on Motion, 2015-25.

Rural Industries,

- Motion (Brigadier-General Clifton Brown), 2049-106.

Russia:

- British diplomatic representatives in, rights and privileges of, negotiations re, 791-3.
- Imports from, and exports to:
  - 1922 to 1932, 829.
  - 1932, 829.
- Lena Goldfields, Limited, history of case since arbitral award, present position and attitude of British Government, 1595-7.
- Metropolitan Vickers Company, raids on offices of, and arrest of officials, 1597, 1944-6.
- Soviet trading organizations, record being kept and available for consultation and revised information to be published as soon as practicable, 790.

[cont.

Russia:—cont.
  Timber, contract of Timber Distributors, Limited, position as regards Ottawa Agreements, 978.
  Trade agreement with:
    Expiry, date of, 349.
    New:
      Negotiations continuing, but no statement possible, 349.
      Submission to the House in draft for consideration prior to signature not in accordance with constitutional practice, but agreement would be laid before the House prior to ratification, 6-7.
  Trade with, balance of:
    during past 11 years, and corresponding figures for trade of U.S.A. with Russia, 348.
    Improvement in, aim in present trade negotiations, 348.

Rutherford, Mr. J. (formerly Mr. John Rutherford Chalmers). entertainments duty, exemption to trade exhibitions, 1364.

St. Helens Corporation Bill,
  2R* deferred, 157; 2R,* 1315.

St. Pancras borough, Crown estate, vacant rooms, and intended use of, 1961-2.

Saint Thomas Rural District Electricity Special Order,
  approved, 1500.

Salford Corporation Bill [Lords],
  Standing Orders not complied with, 967; Standing Orders dispensed with, 2147-8.

Salmon, Sir Isidore,
  Shops Acts (1912 to 1928) Amendment Bill, 2R, 2325-9.

Salter, Dr. A.:
  Beer, imported, number of bulk barrels in respect of which rebate allowed in 1932, 695.
  Beer, spirits, British wine and hops, net receipts of duty on, 1932, 696.
  India, Meerut prisoners, treatment of, 569-70.
  Tramcars, number of people killed and injured by motor vehicles while boarding or alighting from, 1932, 26.

Samuel, Sir Arthur Michael (Farnham):
  Afforestation, record showing percentage of trees planted that have lived, and over-all average cost per living tree, 183.
  Argentina, exchange restrictions, relaxation of, 171.
  Brazil, British investors, 1173.
  British Industries Fair, entrance fee, 790.
  Companies Act, 1929, Departmental Committee Motion, 2106.
  Jersey, number of regular troops in, number of staff officers and pay and emoluments, 175.

Samuel, Rt. Hon. Sir Herbert:
  Agricultural Marketing Bill:
    2R, 1634, 1642.
    Discussion facilities, 1355.
  Arms and munitions of war, export to China and Japan, embargo question, 62-6.
  Beet-sugar subsidy, prospects of committee on, 2132, 2133.
  China and Japan:
    Debate in Committee on Supply, 59-67.
    League of Nations decision, 60-1.
    Loans and credit to Japan, embargo advocated, 66-7.
    Lytton report, 60.
  Coal mining industry, Debate on Motion, 500, 502.
  Disarmament Conference, naval proposals, information requested in connection with, 2187-9.
  House of Commons Division Lists, question of discontinuance of printing in Votes and Proceedings, 1785.
  Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, 3R, 894.
  Navy:
    real Increase in expenditure on naval side, information requested, 2189-90.
    Personnel, increase, question of effect on next year's estimates, 2190.
  Poverty, widespread, Debate on Motion, 1243.
  Russia, trade agreement with, date on which notice of termination expires and progress in negotiations for new agreement, 349.
  Supply:
    Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 59-67.
    Navy Estimates, Sir Bolton Eyres Monsell's statement, 2186-90.
  Visiting Forces (British Commonwealth) Bill:
    Cons., 1113-9.
    Legislation on lines of, in Dominions, 1773, 1774.
  World Economic Conference, Debate on Motion, 1987, 1992, 1996, 2028-38, 2046.

Sandeman, Sir Alexander N. S.:
  China and Japan, Debate in Committee on Supply, 150-2.
  India:
    Railways:
      Contracts to Continental firms, 2136.
      Engines for, 2.
    Viceroy, question of appointment of Moslem adviser to, 779.
  Licensed premises, rateable values, 182.
  Supply, Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 150-2.

Sanderson, Sir Frank B.:
  Belgium, settlement of 1839, question as to signatories of, 793.
  Government Departments, ex-service men, messengers, etc., question of grant of pensionable status, 556.
  Import Duties Act, Debate on Motion for Adjournment, 511-2.
  Juvenile Offenders, Ealing, case of George Samuel Woodward, 1327.

[cont.

Sanderson, Sir Frank B.:—cont.
Linseed, position re import duties, Debate on Motion for Adjournment, 511.
Linseed and linseed oil, imports of, and question re duties, 977, 978.
London and North Eastern, London Midland and Scottish and Great Western Railway Companies, agreement, approval question, 1163.
Railways, composite charging system, 1164.

Sassoon, Rt. Hon. Sir Philip A. G. D., Under-Secretary of State for Air:
African air route, 1895.
Air Estimates, reduction, 1795.
Air Force:
Aviation petrol from British coal, price, contrary to practice to disclose, 1968.
Bombing and machine gun practice, Lincolnshire coast and Mablethorpe, position re, and further concessions to be considered, 1936-7.
Chief of the Air Staff, resignation of Sir John Salmond, 1799.
Co-operation with the Army, 1894.
Expenditure, decrease in, and increase in other countries, 1796.
Flying boats, desirability of development, 1893.
Flying training schools, closure of one, 1795.
Gipsy I engines, sale of, information to be obtained, 1939.
Home Defence Force, strength of, and no provision for increase, 1795-6.
Indian Wing, Risalpur to Gilgit flight, 1801.
Iraq, work in, during past year, 1800-1.
Lighter for bulk storage of petrol at Mount Batten, provision of, and provision of storage tanks ashore, Report of Comptroller and Auditor General, and statement re, before examination by Public Accounts Committee contrary to custom, 1958.
Long distance flights, 1802, 1804-5.
Manning system, changes in, 1798-9.
Marine aircraft, 1892.
Middle East air stations, tour by Secretary of State for Air, 1800.
Officers, possibility of living on pay, 1893.
Parachutes, types of, required information to be obtained, 1939.
Police and protective, etc., work of, 1807-8.
Promotion, position re, 1892-3.
Reduction, proposals not agreed with, 1928.
Short service commission system, 1893-4.
Strength, comparison with other powers, 1796.
Supplies, obtaining through agency of other Departments, 1767-8.
Transport of British infantry battalion by air from Egypt to Iraq, 1801-2.
Work during past year, review of, 1799-804.
Works and buildings, 1798.

Sassoon, Rt. Hon. Sir Philip A. G. D.:—cont.
Aviation:
Air Ministry control, 1895.
Committee to investigate question of, suggestion to be conveyed to Secretary of State for Air, 1912.
England and Australian service, position re, 1806.
Ice, formation of, on wings and fuselages, progress in prevention of, 1896.
Light aeroplane clubs, encouragement of movement, measures re, 1911-2.
Noise, reduction, 1895-6.
Progress during past year, 1805-7.
Cape to Cairo air route, surveys of ground organisation, and publication not proposed, 378.
Cardington, skeleton staff, and work of, 1805, 1893.
Disarmament, aerial, British Government attitude, 1796-7.
Gibraltar, development of use of, on route to Malta, desirability agreed with, 1893.
Hampstead Heath, Heath Brow, buildings, another design to be prepared for approval of London County Council and Borough Council, 1937-8.
Harlescot, former Air Force Mechanical transport repair depot, position re disposal, 1937.
Iraq, Hinaidi aerodrome:
Abandonment of, 1957.
Permanent buildings and plant, original cost, 1957.
Supply, Air Estimates, 1933:
Statement, 1795-808, 1892-6, 1911-2.
Number of Royal Air Force, Com., 1928.
Technical and Warlike Stores, Com., 1939.
Works, Buildings and Lands, Com., 1936-8.

Scone, Lord:
Errol, electricity supply, position re, 559.
Traffic Commissioners, total expenditure incurred by Commissioners for Scotland (Northern) and Scotland (Southern) areas, 1931 and 1932, 538.

Scotland:
Agriculture, see that title.
Criminal prosecutions, see that title.
Fishing industry, see that title.
Poor law relief, see that title.
Public health service, see that title.
St Andrew's Cross and Lion flag, display of, 1792.
Unemployment benefit, see that title.

Scottish Standing Committee:
Chairman, 1789.
Members:
Addition of, 1790.
Appointment of, 23.
Discharge of, 23

Scrymgeour-Wedderburn, Mr. H. J.,
Edinburgh, new Government offices, Government intentions re, 360.

Sedgefield unemployment centre, contract for cupboards for public assistance committee, further inquiries being made, 1319.

Selby toll bridge, purchase and freeing of, position as to, 1178-9.

Selection Committee,
Reports from, 23, 378, 1001, 1789-90, 2149.

Severn Barrage scheme,
Committee's report under consideration, 1776-7, 2157-8.

Sewer gas,
protection of local authorities' employés against, 2130.

Shakespeare, Mr. G. H., Parliamentary Secretary, Ministry of Health:
Aerodromes, municipal, acquisition of land and works in connection with, position re loans for, 20.
Black country, land reclamation schemes, loans for, Government policy re, 367.
Bomb-proof shelters, provision of, not a function of local authorities, and approval of loans for, would be warranted at present time, 20.
Chiswick sewage works, complaints as to odour from, being investigated, 1965.
Cumberland:
  Casual wards, highest number of persons counted in, 1930, 1931 and 1932, and increase in number of wards, 1929, 185.
  Out-relief, numbers of persons, including dependents, in receipt of, 1930-31 and 1931-32, and cost of, 1791.
Horden, Durham:
  Ex-service men living in huts, no knowledge of, but any information would be considered, 999.
  Wooden huts, notice to tenants to leave, and non-provision of other accommodation, inquiries being made, 1962.
Housing:
  Reconditioning in urban districts, position re, 1612.
  Rural Workers Act, 1926, measures for encouragement of use of, 15.
  Slum Clearance Act, 1930:
    Application to rural areas, question of issue of statement to local authorities, 184.
    Subsidy under, in terms of rent, 184.
  Small Dwellings Acquisition Acts:
    Advances under, total amount in 12 months ended 30th September, 1932, and number of houses, 999.
    Loans to local authorities, refusal of applications for, no knowledge of, but inquiries would be made, 999.
Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 285-6, 330-1, 332; Cons., 871-3; 3R, 949-54.

Shakespeare, Mr. G. H.:—cont.
Liverpool Corporation, deputation from, re expenditure on unemployed, agreed notice published after, to be supplied, 1175.
Local Authorities, expenditure, estimated reduction, 16.
Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill, 2R, 1007-11.
Municipal Corporations Audit Bill:
  2R, 1519.
  Attitude of borough councils, and Association of Municipal Corporations, 999.
North Wales:
  District audits, steps being taken to ensure adequate number officers with competent knowledge of Welsh language, 1169.
  Loans outstanding due from local authorities in six counties of, for 1921-22 and 1931-32, statement to be supplied, 185.
Poor law relief:
  Able-bodied unemployed, as national charge, opinion expressed by certain number of local authorities, 1175.
  additional Demands for, relief of burden on local authorities, statement in Debate referred to, 185.
  Rate charges for:
    Debate on Motion for Adjournment, 1753, 1755-8.
    under consideration, 185.
Unemployment:
  Relief works, loans, Government policy re, 367.
  Work schemes:
    Expenditure of one million pounds, numbers employed by, 998.
    Government attitude, 998.

Shanghai, see under China.

Shaw, Mr. W. T.,
potatoes, temporary prohibition of import, 807.

Shipbreaking,
duty on ships imported for, if effect injurious, representations could be made to Advisory Committee, 1767.

Shipping,
Obsolete tonnage:
  Question of disposal of, constantly under consideration, 790-1.
  Sold to foreign owners, tonnage at present in existence, information not available, 790.

Shops Acts (1912 to 1928) Amendment Bill,
2R, 2273-354.

Sidcup Urban District,
Sunday cinemas, rejection of Order by the House, and position as to re-submission in event of change of circumstances re amalgamation with Chislehurst, 188, 991-2.

Simmonds, Mr. O. E.:
Aviation:
  Air Ministry control, relaxation advocated, 1883-8.
  Imperial Airways, tribute to, 1882-3.
Supply, Air Estimates, Sir Philip Sassoon's statement, 1881-8.

Simon, Rt. Hon. Sir John, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs:
Anglo-Persian Oil Company dispute, position of, 799.
Argentine Railways, British capital, 791, 830.
Arms and munitions of war, export:
  to Bolivia and Paraguay, embargo on:
    Memorandum to the League of Nations and consideration of question by, and position as to, 1155.
    Suggestions made to League of Nations Council as to type of arms, and would no doubt be borne in mind if any indication of general agreement as to embargo on export to China and Japan, 1157.
  to China and Japan, embargo:
    British Government policy, 55-9, 67, 155-6.
    no Indication of universal agreement with policy of, consequent position of Great Britain, and proposed discussion at Geneva, 794-5.
  Licence system, not in force in any other country, 796.
  to Peru and Colombia, embargo, no question of, owing to cessation of hostilities, 1155.
Belgian Settlement of 1839, treaties, and signatories, 793.
Bolivia and Paraguay, dispute, position in, 11.
Brazil, British investors:
  in Leopoldina Railroad Company and Leopoldina Railroad Terminal Company, position, 1172, 1173.
  Official proposals offered regarding defaulted obligations of provincial and municipal authorities, 1172.
China and Japan:
  British Government attitude, 50-9, 155-6.
  British interests in North China, communications to Japanese Government re, 796.
  Debate in Committee on Supply, 40, 50-9, 67, 74, 108, 109, 152-6.
  Japanese ultimatum of 23rd February, 796.
  Jehol, military situation in, 9.
  League of Nations, decision re, 54.
  Lytton report, 51-4.
Colombia and Peru, dispute:
  Position in, 11.
  Settlement, League of Nations endeavouring to effect, and hostilities ceased, 1155.
Czechoslovakia, Rumania and Yugoslavia Treaty, 1157-8.

Simon, Rt. Hon. Sir John:—cont.
Foreign Embassies and Legations, diplomatic immunity, reference to legal works on subject, 12.
Germany:
  British Indian subjects, arrest of Mr. Naidu and Mr. Nambian, and release of Mr. Naidu, 1352-3.
  British lives and property, responsibility for safety of, 376.
  Situation in, British Government in frequent communication with Ambassador in, 376, 377.
Greece, guaranteed loan to, of 1932:
  Date of discharge of whole loan, information cannot be given at moment, 350.
  non-Payment of instalment due 31st December, 1932, and correspondence taking place re, 350.
Hungary, military aeroplanes from Italy, previous reply referred to, and attitude of His Majesty's Government, 12.
Japan:
  Aircraft manufacture in, not affected by arms embargo, 1351.
  Emperor, memorandum alleged to have been presented to, by General Tanaka in 1927, authenticity denied by Japanese Government, 74.
  Relations with Great Britain, position re obligations of Washington Treaty, 10.
League of Nations.
  new Buildings:
    total Estimated cost, value of contracts and value of those allocated to British firms, 374.
    Tenders, consideration of, 374.
  Contributions, Chinese arrears:
    1931 and 1932, 798.
    Arrangements re payment by instalments, 797-8.
  Covenant, breaches of, simultaneous withdrawal of Ambassadors and Ministers from capitals of nations found guilty of, not recently under consideration, 1157.
Manchukuo, State of, Japanese recognition of, British Government attitude, 9-10.
Manchuria, future administration of, working out of constructive plans far, on lines suggested by Lytton report, no useful purpose to be served by, in absence of co-operation of parties immediately concerned, 1158.
Passports, British visas:
  for Germans, requirements and no information as to number within last fortnight, 798-9.
  Remission fees, not possible at present, 1001.
Portuguese ports, flag discrimination, 347.
Rhineland, Mrs. Tebbitt's claim for compensation for loss of property in, position re, 382.

[cont.

Simon, Rt. Hon. Sir John:—cont.
- Russia:
  - British diplomatic representatives in, rights and privileges of, negotiations re, 792-3.
  - Metropolitan Vickers Company, raids on offices of, and arrest of officials, 1597.
  - Trading Agreement with, submission to the House in draft for consideration prior to signature not in accordance with constitutional practice, but agreement would be laid before the House prior to ratification, 7.
- Supply, Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 40, 50-9, 67, 74, 108, 109, 142, 152-6.
- World Economic Conference, agenda, addition of question of British claims against Russia to, not proposed, 1180.

Sinclair, Major Rt. Hon. Sir Archibald:
- Housing, Scotland:
  - Number of houses under construction on 1st October, 1930, 1931 and 1932, and on 1st of each month since, and number of houses approved but not begun, 1613-4.
  - Number of slum clearance houses under construction on 1st January each year, 1925 to 1932, and on 1st of each month since January, 1932, 1613-4.
  - Rural Housing Act, 1931, number of houses constructed under, and particulars re subsidies, 1615.
  - Rural Workers Act:
    - County councils operating, on 1st March, 1932 and 1933, 1616.
    - Number of houses in which certificates approving of assistance by way of loan and by way of grant issued in each of last eight months, 1616.
  - certain Statistics requested, 1612.

Singapore base:
- Expenditure on, and question as to future of, 2186.
- Future of, 2235.
- Military expenditure, 1383.

Skelton, Mr. A. N., Under-Secretary of State for Scotland:
- Agricultural Marketing Bill, 2R, 1634, 1635.
- Agriculture, Scotland, oats, prices, Debate on Motion for Adjournment, 1309.
- Blanefield, Stirlingshire:
  - Basement house, no formation regarding, but inquiries being made, 558.
  - Housing, requests for public inquiry, 558.
- Cardonald, housing scheme, sub-contractor, non-payment of wages by, and failure to stamp insurance cards, and payment of subsidy not affected by, 972-3.

Skelton, Mr. A. N.:—cont.
- Glasgow:
  - Housing by corporation, in Shettleston area, yearly, since 1st January, 1919, particulars to be supplied, 157.
  - National Health Insurance Panel Committee:
    - Administration expenses, defraying of, by means of voluntary subscriptions by practitioners, 158.
    - Membership of non-panel doctors, 158.
- Housing, Scotland:
  - Slum Clearance Act, 1930, areas where houses built under, number of houses and rents, statement being supplied, 158.
  - Subsidy houses, question of extension of date for completion, 373-4.
- Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill, 2R, 1063-7; Com., 1940-2.
- Montrose, test work, proceedings re discontinuance, 159.
- National Health Insurance Panel Committees, appointment, regulations re, 158.
- Public health service, Scotland, inquiry into, as recommended by Committee on Local Expenditure (Scotland), under consideration, 972.
- Strathblane, Stirlingshire, housing, requests for public inquiry, 558.

Slater, Mr. J.:
- Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act (1912) Amendment Bill, 2R, 769-75.
- Coal mining industry, Debate on Motion, 474, 502.
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Cons., 879-80.

Smiles, Lieut.-Colonel Sir Walter D.,
- Assam, grievance re contribution of oil to central finances without benefit to Assam, 1587.

Smith, Sir Jonah Walker,
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 229-34, 325; 3R, 918-23.

Smith, Mr. L. W.:
- Air Force:
  - Aviation petrol made from British coal, price, 1968.
  - Bombing and machine gun practice, Lincolnshire coast, appeal for extension of restriction in holiday period, 1936.
- Bentley area, floods, 1336.
- Housing:
  - Municipal subsidised houses, advice to municipalities to raise rents to full economic level when circumstances of tenants permit, 2271-2.
  - Subsidised houses, etc., class of tenants, 1332.
- Import duties, raising of, correspondingly to rise in value of sterling, need for, 1766.

[cont.

Smith, Mr. L. W.:—cont.
- Officers Training Corps, strength of, at present as compared with 1932, 1931 and 1930, 2156.
- Pensions, total expenditure, certain information requested, 1004.
- Portuguese ports, flag discrimination, 347.
- Severn Barrage Committee, Government policy in relation to final report of, 1776-7.
- Supply, Air Estimates, Works, Buildings and Lands, Com., 1936.

Smith, Mr. R. W.,
- Oats, oatmeal, etc., imports, 160, 161.

Somerville, Mr. D. G.,
- motor vehicles, taxation, 1364-5.

Sotheron-Estcourt, Captain T. E.,
- Spain, British coal import restrictions, 174.

South Africa:
- British deportees, 1931 and 1932, 1002.
- Navy reorganisation, 379.
- Payment towards maintenance of staff officer at Cape for liaison with Naval Staff in London, 379.
- H.M. Vessel on South African station, no alteration to be made in size of squadrons of, 379.

South American states,
- arms export, see under Arms and munitions of war.

South Kensington,
- highway thefts, cases during last six months, one arrest and conviction, and decrease in, 1169-70.

South Shields area:
- Ecclesiastical Commissioners building leases, parties interested invited to conference, 995.
- Insured persons, employment and unemployment in coal mining, iron and steel and tinplate industries, 1924, 1931 and 1932, 1620.

South Wales:
- Coal mining industry, unemployment, 530, 698, 699.
- Iron and steel and tinplate industries in, numbers of employed persons in mining, 1921, 1931 and 1932, 1324.
- Unemployment, average numbers in 1921 and 1932, 1323.
- Unemployment in iron and steel, tinplate, engineering, etc., industries, at 23rd January, 1933, and percentage of unemployed to number insured at July, 1932, 698.

Southern Railway Bill,
- Standing Orders complied with, 1315.

Spain,
- British coal import restrictions, 174-5.

Speaker and Deputy-Speaker, Rulings of:
- Agricultural Marketing Bill, discussion, 1356.
- Benefices (Purchase of Rights of Patronage) Measure, Debate on Motion for presentations for Royal Assent, 1151.
- Coal mining industry, Debate on Motion, 483.
- House of Commons:
  - Division Lists, discontinuance of printing, in Votes and Proceedings, various parties consulted re, but failure to get agreement and no action proposed, 1784-6.
  - Standing Orders, appointment of technical committee, composition and terms of reference, 1783-4, 1785.
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Instruction to Committee not necessary, 203; Cons., 862-3; 3R, 889, 890. 906, 912.
- Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill, 2R, 1015-6; 1040, 1048, 1050.
- Municipal Corporations Audit Bill, 2R, 1553, 1556.
- Parliamentary procedure:
  - Adjournment, Motions for, 596.
  - Chair, Members should address, 1213.
  - any Member moving a substantive Motion has right of reply, 1151.
  - Members must not address questions directly to other Members, 1036.
  - Questions to Ministers:
    - Absence of Members in whose names questions put down, 23.
    - re Alien Jews, no objection to, 1352.
    - dealing with Bank of England, 1966.
    - Debate, development into, 166.
    - Information being given, 1334.
    - Next question, 169, 803.
    - Opinion, matter of, 1321, 1591.
    - no Point of Order, 167.
    - Private Notice, disallowance of question re Committee of Indians to be associated with Joint Select Committee, 561, 562.
    - to be Put down, 1966.
    - such Questions cannot be gone into, 1322.
    - Reading of statement or circulation in Official Report only, a matter for the House, 1595.
    - Supplementary:
      - too Far beyond original, 377.
      - outside Scope of Private Notice question as submitted, 806.
  - Supply, proposals requiring legislation cannot be discussed, 1837, 1887.
- Poverty, widespread, Debate on Motion, 1213.
- Rural industries, Debate on Motion, 2084.
- Shops Acts (1912 to 1928) Amendment Bill, 2R, 2352.
- Supply:
  - Air Estimates, Sir Philip Sassoon's statement, 1837, 1877, 1887.
  - Army Estimates, Mr. Cooper's statement, 1460.
  - Civil Estimates, Vote on Account, Rep., 595, 596, 601, 602, 603, 648.

[cont.

Speaker and Deputy-Speaker, Rulings of:—cont.
- Taxation, excessive, Debate on Motion, 396.
- Unemployment, Debate on Vote on Account, 595, 596, 601, 602, 603, 648.
- Wholesale prices, Debate on Motion, 1275.

Spears, Brigadier-General E. L.:
- Army:
  - Administration of justice, system and criticism, 1424.
  - Distinguished and Meritorious Service Fund, officers in receipt of grants from:
    - Names of, and amount of grants, 1768.
    - Publication of names, 1423, 1768.
- Defence, Imperial, Committee of inquiry advocated, 1422-3.
- Fighting forces, amalgamation of certain services, inquiry desirable, 1422-3.
- Supply, Army Estimates, Mr. Cooper's statement, 1422-4, 1438.
- Wormwood Scrubs Prison, second division prisoners, treatment of, 2121-2.

Spencer, Mr. R. A.:
- Pensions, where war service contributory factor in causing death, appropriate pension for dependents, 1004.
- Unemployment, occupational centres, free provision of wireless sets for, question of remission of licence duty, 2120-1.

Spirits, duties,
- rates of, and revenue received, in certain periods, 179-80, 696.

Standing Committee A:
- Chairman, 1789.
- Members:
  - Addition of, 1790.
  - Appointment of, 378, 2149.
  - Discharge of, 378, 2149.

Standing Committee B:
- Chairman, 1789.
- Members, addition of, 1790.

Standing Committees,
- leave to print and circulate with Votes the Minutes of Proceedings and any amended Clauses of Bills, 562.

Standing Orders,
- Sittings of the House, exemption from, 190-2, 824-8, 1356-60, 1786-90, 2146-8.

Standing Orders Committee,
- Panel, appointment of member, 1789.

Standing Orders, Select Committee,
- Resolution reported from, 2147-8.

Stanley, Lord, Parliamentary and Financial Secretary, Admiralty:
- Dartmouth College, continuance, desirability, 2258.

Stanley, Lord:—cont.
- Navy:
  - Commander and engineer commander, numbers of promotions to, from ex-mates and ex-mates (E) and from ex-special service cadets, 1955.
  - Engineering and executive branches:
    - Common entry for cadets in, and training, etc., 2259.
    - Number of cadets to be entered through Dartmouth and number of commissions to lower-deck ratings, during present year, information not yet available, 1953.
    - Number of cadetships to be offered at special entry examination in June, and total number of special entry executive cadetships in present year, 1953.
    - Numbers of special-entry cadets entered in, each year 1913 to 1933, 1954-5.
    - Promotions from lower deck, 1932, 1953.
  - Food supplies, British-caught fish, position re, 350-1.
  - Medical branch, shortage of officers, 2259.
  - Motor ambulance, withdrawal from Royal Naval Armament Depot at Priddy's Hard, and consequent arrangements, 700.
  - Officers, promotion, measures for improvement, 2255-6.
  - Personnel:
    - Comparison with other countries, too much importance should not be attached to actual numbers, 2252-3.
    - Drafting problem, and measures re, 2253-5.
  - Promotions:
    - to Acting mate and acting mate (E), each year 1913 to 1932, 1954.
    - Lower deck scheme, 2256.
  - Recruiting, number of men offering and number of rejections, 1930-31 and 1931-32, 178.
  - Royal Dockyards, unestablished men:
    - Discharges avoided as far as possible, 830.
    - Establishment, position re, 830.
    - over 45, number, information not available, 829.
  - Royal Marines, promotion in, 2258-9.
  - Royal Naval and Royal Naval Volunteer Reserves, Captains, grant of rank of Commodore to certain number, 2259-60.
  - Short service system and difficulty of adopting suggestion of taking unemployed men from mercantile marine, 2256-7.
  - Sisal cordage, result of trials, and decision re purchase of East African sisal, 183-4.
  - Training, fuel allowance, cut restored, 2258.

[cont.

Stanley, Lord:—cont.
- South Africa:
  - Navy reorganisation, 379.
  - Payment towards maintenance of staff officer at Cape for liaison with Naval Staff in London, 379.
  - H.M. Vessel on South African station, no alteration to be made in size of squadrons of, 379.
- Supply, Navy Estimates, Sir Bolton Eyres Monsell's statement, 2252-60.

Stanley, Hon. O. F. G. (Westmorland), Minister of Transport:
- Durham county, omnibus fares, raising of, in certain cases, 1166-7, 2157-8.
- Electricity supply:
  - Extension to different areas, a matter for various local authorities and companies concerned, but position being closely watched by Electricity Commissioners, 1161-2.
  - Grid:
    - total Capital expenditure on, 1162.
    - Completion prospects, 1162.
- Errol, electricity supply, position re, 559.
- Glasgow, omnibus service in Tollcross area, no appeal known of, but further inquiries would be made, 357-8.
- Glasgow-Inverness trunk route, portion between Tyndrum and Carnach, cost of, and reason for expenditure, 358-9.
- Monmouthshire roads, special grant in 1931-32, 1164-5.
- Motor coaches, long distance, average number entering and leaving Metropolis from distance exceeding 30 miles, daily, information not available, 538.
- Motor vehicles:
  - Drivers:
    - Hours, operation of law re, previous reply referred to, 1959.
    - Physical fitness, declaration re, and imposition of further requirements undesirable at present, 359.
  - Fire extinguishers, petrol-driven vehicles conveying explosives required to carry, but requirement for all vehicles not justified, 1960.
  - Head lights, dazzle, revised draft of regulations issued and representations under consideration, 990.
  - Insurance policies not affording full cover to owners in all cases, 1776.
  - Licences expiring on 30th September, proposal re extension for one month not agreed to, but present arrangement re surrender of licence for period from 1st October to 31st December on 31st October, 1959.
  - Motor-horn, standard type, experiments considered but decided against, 360.
  - Rear lights, at top of vehicle, amendment of regulations under consideration, 1968.
- New Forest, electricity pylons, no announcement possible at present, 1167.
- Norfolk, road maintenance grant, 1164-5.

Stanley, Hon. O. F. G.:—cont.
- Painswick, electricity supply under consideration, 697-8.
- Rail and road transport:
  - Committee on railway economies, setting up of, not desirable, 1165-6.
  - further Consultation of interests concerned not necessary before introduction of legislation, but any suggestions in connection with scheme would be considered, 358.
  - Report of American National Transport Committee, consideration to be given to but conditions in America and England not entirely comparable, 1165.
  - Salter Report, effect on rates, information not available, 1968.
- Railways:
  - Agreement between London and North-Eastern, London Midland and Scottish and Great Eastern Railway Companies, under consideration, and decision to be given at an early date, 1163.
  - Composition charging system, decision by Railway Rates Tribunal in connection with oil cake from Avonmouth Docks, position created by, under consideration, and appeal lodged by railway company, 1164.
- Road transport, Bill re, to be introduced before Easter, 1165.
- Roads, expenditure, consideration of questions by Roads Advisory Committee, on which users of road transport represented, 1179.
- Selby toll bridge, purchase and freeing of, position as to, 1178-9.
- Severn Barrage scheme, Committee's report under consideration, 1776-7, 2158.
- Stoke-on-Trent:
  - Omnibuses, forthcoming inquiry, previous reply referred to, 1166.
  - Road service licences, inquiry, production of documents at, 1005.
- Traffic:
  - Automatic signals, use of arrows on, where filtration to the left permitted, 1958-9.
  - Noises, noise abatement committee of New York, inquiries being made re, 359.
- Traffic Commissioners:
  - First annual reports for period up to 31st March, 1932, published and made available for Members, 1775.
  - Powers re fares, 1166.
  - Scotland (Northern) and Scotland (Southern), total expenditure incurred in 1931-32, and estimate for 1932-33, 538.
- Waterloo Bridge, reconditioning:
  - Action of House necessary for commencement, 1163.
  - Contracts, approval of Minister of Transport necessary, but procedure for inviting and accepting tenders not yet settled, 1162-3.

Stationery Office,
- advertising contracts, placing of, after competitive tender, 1966-7.

Steel-Maitland, Rt. Hon. Sir Arthur H. D. R.:
Carlton House Terrace, Debate, personal explanation in connection with, 1786.
Supply, Civil Estimates, Vote on Account, Rep., 581.
Unemployment, Debate on Vote on Account, 581.

Stewart, Mr. J. H.,
World Economic Conference, Debate on Motion, 1999-2003.

Stoke-on-Trent:
Corporation, raising of loan by, permission not refused, if prior agreement reached with Bank of England as to amount and date of issue, 1965-6.
Instruction of elementary school children on traffic dangers, 1329.
Road service licences, inquiry, 1005, 1166.

Storey, Mr. S.,
Coupon trading, departmental committee, terms of reference, 2134-5.

Stourton, Hon. J. J.:
Aliens, bankruptcies, during each of past 10 years, 1763.
Beer duty, reduction of, to enable price to be reduced by 2d. a pint, brewers bearing 25 per cent. of loss of revenue, suggestion, 1781-2.
Denmark, Falster Zealand Bridge contract, 1765-6.

Straits Settlements:
Cracker firing by Chinese during New Year festival, restriction, and inquiry will be made, 1956.
Sir Samuel Wilson's Report, publication, prospects, and to be issued simultaneously in England and Malaya, 1161.
Workmen's Compensation Act, position re putting into force, inquiry being made, 351-2.

Strathblane, Stirlingshire, housing, requests for public inquiry, 558.

Streatham:
Licensed premises, refusal to serve half-pint, no offence, 189.
Parliamentary Division, division into wards, considerations in connection with, and no information of desired in Borough of Wandsworth for, 21.

Stretford and District Electricity Board, transfer of undertaking authorised by the Irlam Electric Lighting Order, 1915, to, Special Order approved, 1500.

Strickland, Captain W. F.:
Arms, etc., export to Japan, embargo question, 46.
Supply, Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 46.

Stuart, Hon. J.:
Oats, Scotland:
Government measures for assistance of growers of, 971.

Stuart, Hon. J.:—cont.
Oats, Scotland:—cont.
Debate on Motion for Adjournment, 1310-11, 1312.
Oats, oatmeal and oatmeal products, imports, Scotland, and question of assisting home producer, 159, 160.

Sueter, Rear-Admiral M. F.:
Aerial warfare, civil machines, possibility of military use, 1869-70.
Air estimates:
Inadequacy of, as compared with estimates for Army and Navy, 1866-8.
Reduction, criticism, 1866-7.
Air Force, one-power standard advocated, 1868, 1872.
Argentina, Railways, British investors, 791, 1594.
Aviation:
Development of air routes, need for increased expenditure, 1870-1.
International air force under League, impracticability of, 1868-9.
International control and abolition of military and naval air forces, impracticability, 1869-70.
British Industries Fair, clocks of foreign manufacture, sale of, 1764, 1765.
Civil Service, ex-service P-class clerks in tax inspectorate, withholding from promotion to established class, 995.
Supply, Air Estimates, Sir Philip Sassoon's statement, 1826, 1866-71.
Taximeter-cabs, Metropolitan district, hiring flags, compulsory illumination in case of all new cabs, 537.

Suffolk,
agricultural workers, unemployment position, 200.

Sugar-beet industry:
Factories, aliens in, see under Aliens.
Proposals submitted by beet-sugar and sugar-refining industries and under consideration, and appointment of committee deferred, 2132-3.

Sugden, Sir Wilfrid H.:
Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Cons., 849.
Shops Acts (1912 to 1928) Amendment Bill, 2R, 2350-2.
Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Bill, 2R, 727-30.
Unemployment training centres, ex-service instructional staff, conditions of employment, 567.

Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Bill,
2R, 701-58.

Summersby, Mr. C. H.,
musicians, orchestral, increase of unemployment among, and question of further taxation upon mechanical music instruments, 200-1.

Sunday Entertainments Act:
Authorities taking action under, 819.
Orders for extension of Section 1:
  Approval of:
    Acton, borough of, 345.
    Edmonton urban district, 966.
    Hayes and Harlington urban district, 966.
    Leominster borough, 1499.
    Merton and Morden urban district, 1499.
    Penge urban district, 345-6.
    Portsmouth county borough, 1499.
  Rejected, Sidcup urban district, 188, 991-2.
Polls under, particulars as to, 188.
Schemes under, power of House over, 188, 819.

Supply:
Air Estimates, 1933:
  Sir Philip Sassoon's statement, 1795-896:
    Amateur flying, Amendment (withdrawn), 1896-913.
  Com., 1915-39.
  Civil Aviation, Resolution, 1939.
  Number of Air Force, Com., 1915-30.
  Pay, etc., Resolution, 1929.
  Technical and Warlike Stores, Com., 1938-9.
  Works, Buildings and Lands, Com., 1930-8.
Army Estimates, 1933:
  Mr. Cooper's statement, 1367-474.
    Territorial Army, Amendment (withdrawn), 1439-72.
  Com., 1473-82.
  Civil Superannuation, Compensation, Gratuities, Com., 1482.
  Half-pay, retired pay and other Non-Effective Charges, Com., 1481.
  Miscellaneous Effective Services, *Com., 1481.
  Number of land forces, Com., 1473-9.
  Pay, etc., *Com., 1479.
  Pensions and other Non-effective charges, Com., 1481-2.
  Works, Buildings and Lands, Com., 1479-81.
Civil (Excess), 1931, Class I, Privy Council Office, Resolution reported and agreed to, 965-6.
Civil Estimates, Supplementary Estimate, Estimate, 1932:
  Presented, referred to Committee of Supply and to be printed, 378.
  Com., 1097-109; Resolution reported and agreed to, 1482.
  Class II, Dominion Services, Com., 1097-109.
Civil Estimates and Estimates for Revenue Departments, 1933 (Vote on Account):
  Com., 31-156; Rep., 575-694.
  Class II, Foreign Office, Com., 31, 34-156.
Navy Estimates, 1933:
  Sir Bolton Eyres Monsell's statement, 2159-262.
    Personnel, Amendment (withdrawn), 2236-60.

Supply:—cont.
Navy Estimates, 1933:—cont.
  *Com., 2261-3.
  Personnel, *Com., 2261.
  Victualling and Clothing, *Com., 2262.
  Wages, etc., *Com., 2261-2.
  Works, Buildings and Repairs at Home and Abroad, *Com., 2262.

Sutcliffe, Mr. H.,
British Industries Fair, textile section, results and comparison with previous year, 789.

Sutton Bridge Farm Settlement, financial particulars, 989-90.

Swansea,
unemployment, 13th January, 1930, 12th January, 1931, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 568.

Sweden,
commercial negotiations with, proceeding, 171.

Sweepstakes:
in aid of Humanitarian Rescue Workers' Organisation, proceedings pending against organisers and printers of tickets, 1608.
Legislation to await final report of Royal Commission, 1608.
Swindles, action by police on indication of, 1608.

Switzerland,
woollen and worsted tissues, import restrictions, 555, 1601.

Taxation,
Excessive, Motion (Mr. Boulton), 383-448.

Taximeter cabs:
Fares, increase, representations received, and consideration of, 991.
Metropolitan district:
  Flags, illumination of, requirement in new regulations, 537-8.
  Number licensed by Metropolitan Police, total and numbers over 20 years old and between 10 and 20 years old, 537.

Taylor, Mr. R.:
Flax cultivation, advice by Ministry of Agriculture, 1604.
Motor drivers, physical fitness test, 359.

Tea duties,
change in, estimate of effect, Budget statement must be awaited, 1781.

Territorial Army: Camps:
  1932:
    non-Holding of, and tribute to attitude of force, 1368.
    Voluntary camps, 1368-9, 1462.
  1933, provision for, 1368, 1469-70.
    Approval of, 1398-9, 1140-2, 1426.
    Criticism of, 1380-1, 1424-6, 1460-2, 1464.

[cont.

Territorial Army:—cont.
- Camps:—cont.
  - Attendance of men in receipt of public assistance, 1432.
  - Value of, 1431-2.
- Coast defence duties, 1468.
- Encouragement and building up, advocated, and suggested measures, 1440-7, 1447-50, 1452-5, 1459, 1463-6.
  - Criticism of suggestions, 1450-2.
- Mechanisation, 1407.
- Nature of, 1471.
- Pledge, 1468-9.
- Recruiting:
  - Appeal to employers, 1370.
  - Decline, 1369-70.
  - Special campaign, 1370, 1768-9.
- Representation of, at the War Office, 1467-8.
- forthcoming Review, 1370, 1443-4, 1466, 1469.
  - Command, question of, 176.
  - Cost of, meeting of, 176.
  - no Decision yet made, but would be confined to troops in vicinity of London, 176.
- Shortage, measures for making good, previous reply referred to, 969.
- Strength, reasons for reduction, 1476.

Thames River,
- works, on particulars as to schemes, 809.

Thomas, Rt. Hon. J. H., Secretary of State for the Dominions:
- Australia, felt hat hoods, import prohibition, report of Tariff Board under consideration by Australian Government, 25.
- Canada:
  - Exchange dumping duties:
    - on French goods, non-imposition of, 169.
    - on United Kingdom goods, undertaking as to reduction and ultimate abolition of, 170.
  - Ottawa Agreement with, Great Britain to carry out, 974.
  - Trade reciprocity with United States of America, negotiations, no communication received from Canadian Government and statement not possible, 974.
- Cotton goods, increased sale within the Empire, no chance of providing opportunities to be neglected, 169.
- Dominions, British deportees, 1931 and 1932, 1002.
- Economic Consultation and Co-operation, Committee on:
  - Expenses, arrangements re payment of, 1763-4.
  - Secretarial assistance and office accommodation, provision of facilities, 1763-4.
- Irish Free State:
  - Claim to share of Road Fund, position re, 1361.
  - Financial dispute, arbitration or negotiation, British Government attitude, 985-7.
  - Imposition of further duty on Irish imports, previous reply referred to, 1964.

Thomas, Rt. Hon. J. H.:—cont.
- Irish Free State:—cont.
  - Sums withheld by:
    - Previous replies referred to, as to obtaining equivalent sums, 1774-5.
    - Retention in separate Suspense Account terminated and moneys to be used for normal Exchequer requirements, 986.
    - Safeguarding of British taxpayer against loss, question under constant consideration, 983.
    - Total, and total amount collected from import duties on Irish goods, 983-4.
- Japan, trading agreement with, no negotiations with Dominions with regard to their withdrawal from, but any communications would be seriously considered, 2134.
- Navy, no direct contributions by Dominions to upkeep of, apart from New Zealand contribution towards Singapore Naval Base, but maintenance of naval forces and establishments at own cost, 1772.
- New Zealand:
  - Primage duties, no increase in, 554.
  - Rate of exchange, alteration, previous reply referred to, 1764.
  - Sales tax, imposition of, 554.
- Newfoundland, grant-in-aid, 1098-100, 1105.
- Railways, steel sleepers, increased use of, 169.
- Supply, Dominion Services, spplementary estimate, 1098-100, 1105-8.
- United States of America, British Empire building, New York, no proposal for co-operation in scheme brought before Empire Marketing Board, 979.
- Visiting Forces (British Commonwealth) Bill, Dominion legislation on lines of Position re, 1773-4.

Thomas, Mr. J. P. L.,
- Rural industries, Debate on Motion, 2070-4.

Thomson, Sir Frederick C., Treasurer of the Household:
- Aviation:
  - Aerodromes and landing grounds, particulars re, 356.
  - Irish Free State, no direct communication, but establishment of service would be a matter for private enterprise, 356-7.
- Great Harwood, unemployment, 21st September, 1931, and 23rd January, 1933, 804.
- International Labour Office, Hours of Work, resolution and results of voting, 815-7.

Thorne, Mr. W. J.:
- Agriculture, Wheat Commission, date when next subsidy due to be paid to farmers, and total amount paid up to nearest available date, 365.
- Arms and munitions of war, exports, to China and Japan, removal of embargo on, 1593.

[cont.

Thorne, Mr. W. J.:—cont.
Beer duty, cost of reduction of 1d. a pint, 1781.
Cinemas, Sunday opening, referendums taken by local authorities, particulars re, 188.
Education, secondary school fees, alterations made in scales, 1175.
Employment, total number of work-people employed in 1920 and 1930, 2141-2.
Essex, wheat deficiency payments in, 1603.
Flour, standard graded, selling price and effect of wheat subsidy, 1962-3.
Hours of work, 40-hour week, 536.
House of Commons Standing Orders, Committee, functions, 1785.
Housing, applications by Tring and Leek Urban District Councils and Loughborough Rural District Council, particulars of houses requested, 814.
Irish Free State, outstanding amount due to, from Road Fund, and reasons for non-payment, 1361.
Jersey, lights and fog signals, 559.
League of Nations, 40-hour week, resolution in connection with, terms of, and number of delegates voting for and against, 815.
Liverpool Corporation, deputation re local expenditure on unemployed, 1175.
Maternal mortality rates in Metropolitan boroughs and City of London, 1338.
Poor law relief, able-bodied unemployed, as national charge, 1175.
Russia, British subjects, arrest, 1946.
Sidcup Urban District, Sunday cinemas, rejection of Order by the House, and question of rescinding decision, 991, 992.
Stoke-on-Trent Corporation, refusal to permit raising of loan by, reason for, and reconsideration of decision suggested, 1965, 1966.
Streatham:
  Licensed premises, impossibility of obtaining beer in measured half-pint glass, and question of action re, 189.
  Parliamentary Division, division into four wards and increase in number of councillors, suggestion, 21.
Sunday Entertainments Act, Orders under, power of House, 819.
Supply, Navy Estimates, Sir Bolton Eyres Monsell's statement, 2189.
Trade Unions:
  Membership in 1930 and 1931, 1606.
  Registered and unregistered, numbers and membership in 1920 and 1930, 2142.
West Ham, unemployment at end of January, 1932, and corresponding date in 1933, 18-19.

Thorp, Mr. L. T.:
Arms and munitions of war, export to China and Japan, embargo, probable results, 140-1.
China and Japan, Debate in Committee on Supply, 139-41.
London County Council, sale of Numbers Farm, King's Langley, Herts, 832.

Thorp, Mr. L. T.:—cont.
Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Bill, 2R, 718-20.
Supply, Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 139-41.

Timber-growing industry, consideration of interests of, in trade negotiations with foreign countries, 979.

Tinker, Mr. J. J.:
Army:
  Clothing, reform, suggestions, 1395-6.
  Estimates, increase, further explanation desired, 1396.
  Household Cavalry regiments, cost of, 1351, 1397.
  Recruiting, increase in number of rejections, 1396.
  Vocational training centres, decrease in number of men passing through, 1396.
Burma, Government, annual migration to Maymyo, suspension question, 6.
Coal Mining industry:
  Hours, prosecutions for breaches of 7½ Hours Act, and number of convictions during 1932, 1770.
  Overtime work, and need for strengthening law re, 163, 1770, 1771.
Defence services, co-ordination, advocated, 1397-8.
Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 265-8; 3R, 916-8.
India, All-India Medical Council Bill, delaying of introduction of, desirability, until Federal Legislature constituted, 6.
Lancashire, transitional payments, administration, criticism, 619-21.
Supply:
  Army Estimates, Mr. Cooper's statement, 1395-8, 1405.
  Civil Estimates, Vote on Account, Rep., 618-22, 684.
Unemployment:
  Debate on Vote on Account, 618-22, 684.
  Numbers wholly unemployed and partially unemployed, January, 1932 and 1933, 532.
  Training centres, away from homes, information requested, 619.
Unemployment benefit, transitional:
  Ex-service men, allowances to wife and children, treatment of, 532, 619-20.
  Young men and women leaving home and going into lodgings, 620-1, 684.

Tinplate industry,
South Wales, insured persons, employment and unemployment, 1924, 1931 and 1932, 1620.

Titchfield, Major the Marquess of,
Agricultural Marketing Bill, 2R, 1671, 1694-8.

Todd, Captain Alfred J.,
teachers, prosecutions of, cases of Mr. and Mrs. Duncan, 543, 544.

Torrington Rural District Electricity Special Order,
- approved, 1500.

Touche, Mr. G. C.:
- Dorking, principal trade categories of persons registered as unemployed at, 1618.
- Rates, assessment of houses on which work done as result of local campaigns for relief of unemployment, 1778.
- Redhill, principal trade categories of persons registered as unemployed at, 1618.

Tower, officer under arrest in:
- Communication with solicitors, 370.
- Information given to, of charges, 370.
- Transfer to Aldershot not considered desirable for preparation of defence, 369.
- Treatment of, 370.

Trade and industry:
- adverse Balance:
  - 1932, estimate for, 1766.
  - Less in 1932 than in 1931, other information desired not available, 1947.
- Exchange, restrictions in foreign countries, action re, previous replies referred to, and prospects of report of committee, 1767.
- Imports:
  - Analysis of, in connection with starting of industries in United Kingdom, present sources of information re, and issue of special statement not considered necessary, 1600-1.
  - from Empire sources, percentage carried in British ships, 1931 and 1932, information not available, and action for increase in, not proposed, 981.
  - Retained, of articles wholly or mainly manufactured, volume in 1923 and 1924, comparison with 1932, 1762.
- Negotiations with foreign countries:
  - Constant touch with Ministry of Agriculture, 2139.
  - Progress, 983.

Trade, Board of,
- staff necessitated by administration of Import Duties Act, number and cost, 27-8.

Trade routes,
- protection of, regulation by international law with provision of tribunal for consideration of disputes, suggestion, 2203-6.

Trade Unions:
- total Membership at end of 1920 and at end of 1930, 1605-6.
- Registered and unregistered, numbers and membership, 1920 and 1930, 2142.

Traffic:
- Accidents:
  - Causes, removal by further legislation, doubt as to, 819-20.
  - Fatal, investigation of causes, 820.

Traffic:—cont.
- Accidents:—cont.
  - Tramcars, number of persons killed by motor vehicles while boarding or alighting from, in Metropolitan Police District, in 1932, 26.
- Automatic signals, use of arrows on, where filtration to the left permitted, 1958-9.
- Noises, noise abatement committee of New York, inquiries being made re, 359.
- Pedestrians' crossing places, see under Roads.
- White lines:
  - at Corners, order to make compulsory, no power to make, 819.
  - Use of, to be dealt with in report of Departmental Committee, 819.

Traffic Commissioners:
- First annual reports for period up to 31st March, 1932, published and made available for Members, 1775.
- Powers re fares, 1166.
- Scotland (Northern) and Scotland (Southern), total expenditure incurred in 1931-32, and estimate for 1932-33, 538.

Transjordan, Air Force in:
- Armoured cars, need for replacement, 1874.
- Use of pamphlets and loud speakers, 1874.

Tring Urban District Council,
- housing scheme, particulars being supplied, 814.

Troyte, Lieut.-Colonel G. J. Acland-, see Acland-Troyte, Lieut.-Colonel G. J.

Tryon, Major Rt. Hon. G. C., Minister of Pensions:
- Liverpool:
  - Civil hospitals, no Ministry of Pensions pensioners being treated in, for war disabilities, 802.
  - Hospitals, lack of accommodation, no complaints received and no foundation for newspaper statements, 802.
  - Maghull hospital, transfer of patients to Ministry hospital at Chepstow, 801, 1599.
  - Mossley Hill Ministry of Pensions Hospital, number of beds and number occupied, 802.
- Pensions:
  - Attributability, consultation of medical specialists in doubtful and difficult cases, but appointment of independent medical arbitrator not possible, 1003.
  - Cases:
    - Crabtree, H., 30.
    - Westbrook, James, daughter of, 799-800.
  - Children reaching 21 and unable owing to defects to earn living, 799-800.
  - Disallowed claims, procedure where fresh evidence produced, 20-1.
  - Hospitals:
    - Civil, policy re use of, 801-2.
    - Highbury, Birmingham, closure, 1599.

[cont.

Tryon, Major Rt. Hon. G. C.:—cont.
- Pensions:—cont.
  - Hospitals:—cont.
    - Maintained by Ministry, list of, 1599.
    - Number not under control of Ministry in which accommodation reserved for Ministry patients, 1599.
    - Transfer of patients from, no truth in statements, 801.
  - Independent tribunals, decisions final, 21.
  - Mental cases, policy as to treatment of, and no change in, statements in "Daily Herald" untrue, 800-1.
  - Pensioner's death, connection with War service, provision for dependents, 1004.
  - Seven years' limit, cases outside, results of those recognised during 1932, 364.
  - Total expenditure, comparison with United States of America, impossibility owing to difference in systems of administration, 1004.
  - Treatment, by panel doctors, 1598.
- Poverty, widespread, Debate on Motion, 1239-44.

Turkey,
- flying over, position re, 1876.

Turton, Mr. R. H.:
- Courts of summary jurisdiction, appeals from, 1932, particulars re, 372, 373.
- Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Bill, 2R, 701-9, 763.

Tyne fishery,
- conference of local authorities, if arranged, officials of Ministry of Agriculture and Ministry of Health would attend, 1617.

Tyneside area,
- transitional payments, differences in scales in, and question to be borne in mind in connection with future legislation, 368.

Unemployment:
- Agricultural workers, position in certain counties, 200.
- Craft industries, question as to position re unemployment benefit in event of starting of, 668.
- Debate on Vote on Account, 575-694.
- Dorking, industrial analysis at 20th February, 1933, 1618.
- Employment Exchanges and unemployment insurance, German system, 666.
- Estimate of, on which estimate of cost of Ministry for 1933-34 based, 525-6.
- Ex-service men and Territorials, position re pressing claims of, upon employers, 1768-9.
- Juveniles, number of 16 and 17 years never having had employment since reaching insurable age, information not available, but sample case might be obtained, 2115.
- Juveniles and young persons, increase in number between 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 565-6.

Unemployment:—cont.
- Local authorities schemes:
  - British materials, position re use of, 2117-8.
  - further Circular not considered necessary, 803, 2118-9.
- Loss in national income and national wealth in 1932 due to, estimates not possible, 1002.
- Meals, provision of, by Employment Exchanges at cost price, suggestion, 666.
- Number of persons having ceased to register as result of recent legislative changes, previous reply referred to, 566.
- Number of young persons added to register during last 12 months, 565.
- Redhill, industrial analysis of persons at, recorded as unemployed at 20th February, 1933, 1618.
- Reduction of registered employed owing to legislative and administrative changes, previous reply referred to, 1321.
- Remedies:
  - Far-reaching policy of reconstruction, 643-9.
  - Hours, reduction of, 679.
  - Manufacturing concerns, extension of income tax reliefs to encouragement, expansion and development of works, 655.
  - Redistribution of wealth, 657, 660-1.
  - School-leaving age, raising of, 678-9.
- Road and sewage work on private estates, cases must be considered on merits, 533.
- Schemes for alleviation of, Government policy:
  - already Explained, and further statement to be made in course of Debate, 532-3.
  - Previous reply referred to, and issue of White Paper not considered necessary, 802-3.
- Statistics:
  - Barmen and barmaids, separate statistics not available, 25.
  - Barnsley, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 527.
  - Bradford, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 525.
  - Breconshire, 17th August, 1931, and 23rd January, 1933, 568.
  - Brixton, men, boys, women and girls, and classification of industries, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 527-30.
  - Carmarthenshire, 17th August, 1931, and 23rd January, 1933, 568.
  - Chester-le-Street, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 527-8.
  - Comparison of various periods, and decrease anticipated for February, 611-2.
  - Darlington, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 567.
  - Dewsbury, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 518-9.
  - Distributive trades, 1929, 1930, 1931, 1932, 16-18.

[cont.

Unemployment:—cont.
- Statistics:—cont.
  - Gateshead, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 518-9.
  - Glamorganshire, 531, 568.
  - Great Harwood, 21st September, 1931, and 23rd January, 1933, 804.
  - Juveniles, 531, 1320-1, 1361.
  - Mercantile Marine, at 23rd January, 1933, and 25th July, 1932, 2116.
  - Monmouthshire, 17th August, 1931, and 23rd August, 1933, 568.
  - Neath, February, 1929, 1930, 1931, 1932 and 1933, 2158.
  - Newcastle-on-Tyne, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 518-9.
  - Pontardawe, February 1929, 1930, 1931, 1932 and 1933, 2158.
  - South Wales, 530, 698, 699, 1323, 1620.
  - Swansea, January, 1930, 1931, 1932 and 1933, 568.
  - Wales, 25th January, 1932 and 1933, 530-1.
  - West Ham, numbers on registers of Canning Town and Stratford Exchanges, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 18-9.
  - Wholly unemployed and temporarily stopped, numbers 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 532.
  - Wigan, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 529.
  - Woollen and worsted industry, June, 1923, 1931 and 1932, 520.
  - Woolwich, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 528.
- Training:
  - Aberavon division, number of persons having received training in residential centres, and number having secured jobs after, information to be supplied, 2113.
  - Centres:
    - Cost of training at, and proportions of trainees finding employment on leaving, 2113-4.
    - Instructors, conditions of service, 567.
    - Men sent to, away from homes, system, 619, 682.
    - Particulars re, 681-2.
    - Refusal to attend, provision in Act for refusal of benefit, but little made use of, 591-2.
- Training and instructional centres, review of work of, 590-8.
- Voluntary schemes for occupation of unemployed, 592-4, 629-30, 667-8.
- Women, training of, 592.
- Work schemes:
  - Consideration of, with help of Departmental experts, 18.
  - Electric lighting, water and sewage schemes, proposals dealt with by appropriate Government Departments, and consultation of business men not found necessary, 2119.
  - Government attitude, 998, 2121.
  - Loans, Government policy re, 367.
  - by Local authorities, issue of further communication re, not necessary, 803.

Unemployment:—cont.
- Work schemes:—cont.
  - average Number of persons directly employed on, over period October, 1931, to January, 1933, and number directly employed at end of January, 1933, 2113.
  - One million pounds expenditure:
    - Allocation to wages, materials, purchase of land and interest, not possible, 1324.
    - Numbers employed by, 998.
  - Sewerage schemes, responsibility of district councils, and attitude re loans, 533.
  - Use of unemployment pay as subsidy to wages, danger of, but whole matter being again examined, 1619-20, 2107-8.
  - total Value of, at end of January, 1933, not readily available, 2113.
  - Water schemes, attitude re, 533-4.

Unemployment benefit:
- Anomalies Act, no changes recently made in working of, and not the function of Advisory Committee to make requests for, 566-7.
- Disallowances on ground of not being in normal insurance, 673.
- Juveniles in receipt of, numbers, 681.
- Married women in receipt of, whose husbands working, statistics not available, 566.
- Persons of ages 18 to 20, number having had applications authorised for transitional payments, at 20th February, 1933, 2112.
- Substituted work, position re, 632, 687.
- Supply of land and materials for building house in place of some of payments, suggestion, 666-7.
- Transitional:
  - Administration:
    - Cost should be borne by Government, 665.
    - Criticism, 622-5, 636-41, 674-7.
  - Amount included in Estimates for 1932-33 in respect of, and reference to previous reply for cost of, from 30th June, 1933, to 31st March, 1934, 25.
  - Applicants:
    - Number at 23rd January, 1933, and 25th January, 1932, 379.
    - Personal hearing of, 524-5, 624, 684.
  - Commissioners:
    - see also under particular areas.
    - Administration by, criticism, 586, 676-7.
    - Determinations by:
      - Birmingham, between 5th December, 1932, and 4th February, 1933, 522.
      - Carmarthenshire, between 12th November, 1931, and 7th January, 1933, 523-4.
      - Wigan, between 25th January, 1932, and 4th February, 1933, 521-2.
    - Payments out of moneys provided by Parliament in respect of remuneration and expenses of, 517-8.

[cont.

Unemployment benefit:—cont.
- Transitional:—cont.
  - Cost from 1st July, 1933, to 31st March, 1934, provisional estimate, 16.
  - Dating back, question of, and position re, 685.
  - Determinations, retrospective effect, provision for, 1317.
  - Disabled men receiving, no separate statistics of, 2110.
  - Heads of families having had payment reduced on account of wages of children, information not available, 2111.
  - Means test:
    - Abolition:
      - Advocated, 613-4, 658-9.
      - the Policy of the Labour party, 651.
    - Allowances for payment of premiums on endowment policies, a matter for authority concerned, 2109-10.
    - Army reserve pay, 968, 1316.
    - Disability pensions, 1360.
    - Ex-service men, allowances for dependents, 532, 619-20, 682-3.
    - Family income, system, 607, 1317-8.
    - Justification for, 651-2.
  - Persons of ages 18 to 20 having had payment reduced on account of family income, information not available, 2111.
  - Rates, lack of uniformity in, 614-7.
  - Recipients, number 23rd January, 1933, 568.
  - Responsibility for application of, question of, 635.
  - Uniformity of practice, action re, 685-6.
  - Unofficial estimates of sum necessary to provide for hypothetical standards of living, but no value in connection with, 2112.
  - Young men and women leaving home and going into lodgings, 620-1, 637, 683-4.

Unemployment benefit, Scotland,
- expenditure in certain counties in 1931 and 1932, 698, 1793-4.

Unemployment insurance:
- Extension of scheme advocated, 665-6.
- Income limit, recommendations of Royal Commission under consideration, 17.
- Seasonal workers, position re, 566, 632-4, 661, 687, 688.
- Uninsured classes, relief, separate or preferential treatment not possible, 17.

Unemployment Insurance, Royal Commission,
- recommendations, under consideration, but date of introducing legislation cannot yet be stated, 1769, 2121.

United States of America:
- British delegation to, personnel of, previous reply referred to, 370-1.

United States of America:—cont.
- British Empire building, New York, no proposal for co-operation in scheme brought before Empire Marketing Board, 978-9.
- forthcoming Discussions with:
  - British Government policy, statement to the House and facilities for discussion before, no decision possible at present, 805.
  - Date not yet fixed, 805.
  - Scope of, previous reply referred to, 804-5.
- Financial crisis, British Government attitude, and no action called for, 805.
- Naval estimates, 1931, 1932 and 1933, 1970.
- Trade reciprocity with Canada, negotiations, no communication received from Canadian Government and statement not possible, 974.

Visiting Forces (British Commonwealth Bill [Lords]:
- Reported, 193; Order that Bill as amended be printed, read and discharged, 377; *Cons. 1109-30; 3R, 1483-500; Message from the Lords, 1967.
- Dominion legislation on lines of, position re, 1773-4.

Wages and salaries:
- actual Amounts paid in 1924 and 1932, information not available, 199.
- average Level in 1932 compared with 1924, 199.

Wales:
- Difference between money value of determinations of claims for transitional benefit from November, 1931, to latest available date, and amount which would have been paid at ordinary rate of benefit, possibility of supply of information to be considered, 1323.
- Insured persons under 21, numbers unemployed, at 20th February, 1933, percentage unemployed and numbers with applications authorised for transitional payments, 2114-6.
- Secondary school fees, progress in regard to new arrangements, 1502.
- State assisted work schemes, expenditure on, for each of last five years, and number of people directly employed, inquiries being made, 2113.
- Training camps, establishment under similar conditions as on Kielder estate under consideration, 2117.
- Transfers from, since 1921, statistics not available, 1322-3.
- Transitional payments, number of applications and determinations by public assistance authorities between 12th November, 1931, and 7th January, 1933, 521-4.
- Unemployment:
  - Increase in number of wholly unemployed persons from January, 1932, to January, 1933, principally due to reduction of employment in coal mining industry, 1322.

[cont.

Wales :—cont.
Unemployment : —cont.
in Iron and steel, tinplate, engineering and coal-mining industries, required information being obtained, 529-30.
Numbers of wholly unemployed and temporarily stopped, 25th January, 1932, and 1933, 530-1.

Wallace, Captain E., Civil Lord of the Admiralty:
Admiralty :
Co-operation with Air Force, 2234-5.
Staff, number compared with navy personnel, Memorandum of Secretary of the Admiralty referred to, for justification, 2234.
Dartmouth College, fees, numbers of cadets being educated at different scales of, 1950-1.
Disarmament, Naval, Hoover v. British proposals, 2228-9.
Greenwich Royal Hospital School, removal to the country, and proposed creation of Naval Museum, 2235-6.
Navy :
Capital ships, position re, 2228.
Coal fuel, return to, prosperity of coal industry could not be restored by, 2229.
Commissioned rank, numbers of seaman and engine-room ratings taking higher educational examination for, in October, 1932, under new regulations, and number passing, 1955.
Construction :
1933 programme, 2228.
Destroyers, in dockyards and by private contract, comparison of cost, 2232-3.
Construction and repair work, spreading out of, among Government yards and contractors, 2233.
Diesel engines, position re, 2231-2.
Oil fuel, low temporary carbonisation and hydrogenation processes, considerations in connection with, 2230-1.
Oil fuel and coal, comparison, 2229-30.
Promotion, lower deck, under new scheme, training, 1956.
Protection of trade by, value of trade, 2236.
Royal dockyards, employés, wastage, 2233.
Portsmouth dockyard, discharge of electrical fitters, 2233.
Rosyth Dockyard, position re, 2233-4.
Singapore base, future of, 2235.
Supply, Navy Estimates, Sir Bolton Eyres Monsell's statement, 2226-36.

Wallace, Mr. J. :
Coal mining industry, Scotland, Low-temperature carbonisation scheme, 167-8.
Rosyth Dockyard :
Position of, and effect on district, and reconsideration of question urged, 2215-7, 2234.
Repair of oil ships advocated, 2217.

Wallace, Mr. J. :—cont.
Supply, Navy Estimates, Sir Bolton Eyres Monsell's statement, 2214-7, 2234.

Wallhead, Mr. R. C. :
China and Japan :
Debate in Committee on Supply, 64, 76, 81, 127-30,
Economic boycott of Japan advocated, 128-30.
Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill, 2R, 1066.
Poverty, widespread, Debate on Motion, 1192-8.
Shops Acts (1912 to 1928) Amendment Bill, 2R, 2306.
Supply, Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 64, 76, 81, 127-30.

War Department,
Ministers, number of, reply to criticism, 1436-7.

War Office :
Army Pay Department, mechanisation progress, 1391.
permanent Committee for discussion and advice, suggestion, 1394-5.
Financial staff, total civilian personnel in 1933, and information as to number having had actual experience in out-stations not available at short notice, 1350.
Regimental pay offices at home and overseas, machines used by, 1350.
Staff, 1384-5.
1933 and 1914, 1350.
Increase :
Criticism of, 1390-1.
Justification, 1433-4.

Wardlaw-Milne, Sir John S. :
Rhineland, claim of Mrs. Tebbitt, 382.
Taxation, excessive, Debate on Motion, 391-401.
United States of America, discussions to be held with, date, 805.

Warrender, Sir Victor, Vice-Chamberlain of the Household:
Air Force :
Buildings to be erected at Heath Brow, Hampstead Heath, negotiations still in progress, 814.
Recruiting, number of application forms completed, number of applications taken up and number of rejections, 1931 to 1932, 178.

Washington Hours Convention :
Bill, for giving effect to, non-proceeding with, 627.
British Government attitude, criticism, 581-2, 627.
Liberal party attitude, 626-8.
Ratification position, 535.

Waterhouse, Captain C.,
wholesale prices, Debate on Motion, 1286-7.

Waterloo Bridge, reconditioning:
- Commencement, action of House necessary for, 1163.
- Contracts, approval of Minister of Transport necessary, but procedure for inviting and accepting tenders not yet settled, 1162-3.

Watt, Captain G. S. H.:
- Supply, Army Estimates, Mr. Cooper's statement, Territorial Army, proposed Amendment, 1439-47, 1450, 1456, 1472.
- Territorial Army:
  - Encouragement and maintenance and increase of efficiency, advocated, and suggested measures, 1440-7, 1450.
  - forthcoming Review, 1443-4.

Wayland, Sir William A.:
- Prison service:
  - Number of officers compulsorily retired during five years ending 31st December, 1932, and total additional cost, 1359.
  - Retirement otherwise than through ill health at 55, approximate additional cost, 1359.

Ways and Means,
- Resolutions, *Com., 2263.

Webb, Colonel J. Baldwin-, see Baldwin-Webb, Colonel J.

Wedderburn, Mr. H. J. Scrymgeour-, see Scrymgeour Wedderburn, Mr. H. J.

Wedgwood, Colonel Rt. Hon. J. C.:
- Arms and munitions of war, exports to China and Japan, embargo on, 795.
- Benefices (Purchase of Rights of Patronage) Measure, 1933, Debate on Motion for presentation for Royal Assent, 1146-8.
- China and Japan, Debate in Committee on Supply, 90-1.
- Cotton industry, Japanese competition, 976.
- Germany:
  - British subjects, protection of, and question of news of Mr. Nambiar and Mrs. Naidu's son, 2155.
  - Situation in, 376.
- House of Commons, Charles Bradlaugh, question of erection of tablet or memorial to, 1348.
- India, Meerut conspiracy trial, appeals against sentences, question as to lodging of, and undergoing of hard labour until date of hearing, 782.
- National finance, rise in value of sterling, effect on export trade, and measures re, 1339.
- Newfoundland, grant-in-aid, 1102.
- Palestine, Joseph Benjamini, killing of, in raid by Bedouins against Jewish settlement, 354.
- Supply:
  - Dominion Services, Supplementary Estimate, Com., 1102-4, 1105.
  - Foreign Office, Vote on Account, Com., 90-1.

Wemyss Coal Company,
- complaint by Hawick Co-operative Society against standard tonnage allotted to, finding of Scottish Committee of Investigation, and members of Committee, 2139-40.

West Ham,
- unemployment, numbers on registers of Canning Town and Stratford Exchanges, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 18-19.

West Indies,
- sugar industry, effect of increased preferences, 1174.

West Lothian:
- Able-bodied relief, expenditure on, 1930, 1931 and 1932, 1006.
- Unemployment benefit, expenditure in 1931 and 1932, 698.

Wey River,
- works, particulars as to schemes, 809.

Wheat, see under Agriculture.

White, Mr. H. G.:
- Agriculture:
  - Allotment gardens, provision for unemployed, and grants for provision of seeds, etc., 2120.
  - Wheat:
    - Acreage prior to enactment of quota and area sown this year, 1604.
    - Prices in local currency and in terms of gold at latest date available, in Great Britain, Belgium, France, Germany and Italy, 1782-3.
    - Subsidy, amount of wheat on which paid, and amount failing to receive, on ground of not being of millable quality, 1180-1.
- Army:
  - Clothing factory, Pimlico, closure of, 1392-3.
  - Motor vehicles, cost of repair compared with outside concerns, 1393-4.
- Canada, British citizens deported from, through becoming charge on public funds, 1931 and 1932, 185.
- Defence forces, co-ordination question, discussion desired, 1389-90.
- Dominions, British deportees, 1930-31 and 1931-32, 1002.
- Employment Exchanges, green card procedure, 521.
- Foreign loans, embargo on, 1000.
- France, lace machinery imports from Great Britain, surtax on, 977.
- Import duties, revenue from, to last available date, 2132.
- Kenya goldfield:
  - Land not required for gold winning and restored to natives, provision in lease for repair of surface disturbance, 353.
  - Natives employed in gold winning, prospects of legislation for accidents and diseases compensation, 354.

[cont.

White, Mr. H. G.:—cont.
- Linoleum, drawback in respect of linseed-oil content of, when exported, 2133-4.
- Passports, visa fees, remission of, with view to encouraging foreign visitors, 1001.
- Supply, Army Estimates, Mr. Cooper's statement, 1389-95.
- War Office:
  - Army Pay Department, mechanisation, 1350, 1391.
  - Civilian finance branch, total personnel and proportion having had actual experience of working conditions in out-stations, 1350.
  - permanent Committee for discussion and advice, suggestion, 1394-5.
  - Personnel, criticism of increase, 1390-1.
  - total Personnel at present and in March, 1914, 1350.
- World Economic Conference, Debate on Motion, 1971-80, 1991, 2048.

Whiteside, Mr. B. N. H.:
- Aerial warfare, civilian machines, potential fighters, if military aircraft abolished, 1856.
- Air Force, certain work done by Army and Navy could be carried out by, more economically, 1859.
- Aviation:
  - A.I.D. inspection, relaxation suggested, 1860.
  - Aerodromes, provision for, in town and country planning bills suggested, 1862.
  - Air Ministry control, certain relaxation suggested, 1860.
  - British machines, pushing of, by Consuls advocated, 1862.
  - Freedom of the air over other countries, inclusion in commercial agreements advocated, 1862.
  - International control, impracticability of, 1858.
  - League air arm, impracticability, 1856-8.
  - Mail service, development, proposals for, 1862-4.
  - Military psychology in connection of, and results, 1855.
  - Propaganda work, suggestion, 1864-5.
  - Subsidies, limitation and final abolition advocated, 1862.
  - Value of, as power for peace, 1859-60, 1861-2.
- Supply, Air Estimates, Sir Philip Sassoon's statement, 1855-65.

Wigan:
- Transitional payments, determinations by public assistance committee between 25th January, 1932, and 4th February, 1933, 521-2.
- Unemployment, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 529.

Willenhall,
- Council offices and fire station, loan for, refusal of sanction, 571-2.

Williams, Mr. C.:
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 208-9, 246-7.
- India, police, Government proposals, prospects of publication, 782.

Williams, Mr. C.:—cont.
- Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill, 2R, 1051-4, 1058, 1065; Com., 1939-40, 1942.
- Meat import restrictions, evasion question, 988.
- Municipal Corporations Audit Bill, 2R, 1540-3, 1544, 1555.
- Post Office, stamp-cancelling machines, 15.
- Royal Seamen's Pension Fund, 1333.
- Trade Unions, membership, 1606.

Williams, Mr. E. J.:
- Aerial warfare, possibilities of, 1847, 1848.
- Aviation, international control advocated, 1851-5.
- Burma, separation from India, Round Table Conference for further consideration of, 787.
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Cons., 877-8, 879.
- India, Meerut prisoners, prisons where confined, 828.
- International Labour Office, 40-hour week Convention, British Government attitude, criticism, 661-2.
- Lincoln, percentage of inhabitants in receipt of public assistance, measures for dealing with situation, 1335.
- Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill, 2R, 1024, 1069-75.
- Supply:
  - Air Estimates, Sir Philip Sassoon's statement, 1847, 1848, 1851-5.
  - Civil Estimates, Vote on Account, Rep., 656-63.
- Unemployment:
  - Debate on Vote on Account, 656-63.
  - Remedy, redistribution of wealth, 657, 660-1.
- Unemployment benefit, transitional:
  - Adjustment of payment to recipient owing to drop in family income, retrospective payment from time of changed circumstances advocated, 1317.
  - Means test, abolition advocated, 658-9.
- Unemployment insurance, seasonal workers, 661.

Williams, Mr. H. G.:
- Agriculture, wheat acreage, 1933, 1605.
- Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act (1912) Amendment Bill, 2R, 762, 775-7.
- Coupon trading, inquiry by Committee, 1602.
- Currency, managed, disadvantage of, 1339.
- Dogs, inoculation treatment for distemper, 1607, 1608.
- Gift Coupons Bill, 2R, 1581.
- Government offices, Whitehall scheme, 362.
- Hours of labour, reduction question, 372.
- Local authorities, expenditure:
  - Aggregate, for 1929-30, and estimates for 1930-31, 1931-32 and 1932-33, 547, 548.
  - certain Particulars requested, 813.
  - estimated Reduction, basis of, 15-16.
- Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill, 2R, 1018, 1030-9, 1040.
- Meat imports, need for further steps to assist live-stock industry, and question of, 2136, 2137.

[cont.

Williams, Mr. H. G.:—cont.
- Milk deliveries, 13.
- Municipal Corporation Audit Bill, 2R, 1505, 1552-61, 1563.
- Parliamentary procedure, questions on Paper, answers to which have been in Library for several weeks, 519, 523.
- Post Office:
  - Sloane telephone exchange area, frequency of breakdowns and mechanical errors in automatic dialling machines, 812.
  - Telephone service, hand-microphone instruments, extra charge, abolition question, 812.
- Seamen, unemployment, 2117.
- Shops Acts (1912 to 1928) Amendment Bill, 2R, 2339, 2340, 2343-50.
- Taxation, excessive, Debate on Motion, 396.
- Unemployment statistics, question as to necessity for questions, 519.
- Unemployment benefit, transitional payments, additional sum required for, 1st July, 1933, to 31st March, 1934, on basis of extension of existing law, 16.
- Wholesale prices, Debate on Motion, 1252.
- World Economic Conference, Debate on Motion, 1984, 1993-9.

Williams, Dr. J. H.:
- Carmarthenshire, transitional benefit, number of claims and determinations, 523-4.
- Hospitals, numbers, beds and average cost per patient per week in each type, statement requested, 1778.
- India:
  - Alwar State, requisitioning of services of member of Indian Civil Service for use in, for revenue purposes, 4.
  - Communal representation, Government decision, 3.
- Iron, steel and tinplate industries, number of insured female workers in, and percentage of unemployed as compared with other industries, 2114.
- Maternal mortality, five highest and five lowest rates in county councils and county boroughs for latest possible year, 1777-8.
- South Wales, employment in mining, iron and steel and tinplate industries in 1921, 1931 and 1932, 1324, 1620.
- Wales:
  - Juveniles, number of persons under 21 unemployed, percentage of unemployment of young persons of both sexes and number eligible for transitional payment, 2114-5.
  - State assisted work schemes, expenditure on, for each of last five years, and number of people directly employed, 2113.
  - Transitional benefit, number of claims and determinations, 521-2.
  - Unemployment in iron and steel, tinplate, engineering and coal-mining industries at latest available date, 529, 697-8.

Williams, Mr. T.:
- Agricultural Marketing Act, 1931, annual value of crops being marketed under scheme formulated under, 1603.
- Agricultural Marketing Bill, 2R, 1630, 1643-55, 1681, 1682, 1745.
- Agriculture:
  - Allotments, provision for unemployed, 2120.
  - Marketing schemes, number produced or in course of preparation under Act of 1931, 1603.
- Aircraft, export to Japan without licence, 1156.
- Arms and munitions of war, exports to China and Japan, embargo:
  - International agreement, British Government efforts, nature of, 1949.
  - Negotiations by League of Nations for establishment of, progress, 794.
- Army, recruiting, causes of large volume of rejections, 178.
- Bacon, Wiltshire and Danish, prices, 981.
- Banks, nationalisation scheme, 181.
- Bentley district, floods:
  - total Cost to Council and West Riding public assistance committee, 1335.
  - Tenants evicted from houses, national assistance for, 1535, 1336.
- Bradford, unemployment on 20th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, and number no longer signing on at Exchange, 525.
- Canada, bacon imports, 1342.
- Coal mining industry:
  - Overtime work, 1771.
  - Ringrose Alarm, reports on tests, prospects of, and available of, 973, 974.
  - Wages, refusal of coalowners to negotiate with Miners' Federation, 167.
  - Commercial treaties, negotiations with Denmark, Sweden, Holland and the Argentine, progress, 171.
- Co-operative societies, Committee:
  - Number of witnesses heard and question of publication of evidence, 1170, 1171.
  - Prospects of adoption of recommendations as to income tax, 1782.
  - Report, publication, 20.
- Darlington, unemployment, 20th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, and number no longer signing on, 567.
- Denmark, trade with, 1343.
- Disarmament Conference, Questionnaire on private manufacture of arms, replies to, 1948, 1949.
- Don Valley area:
  - Assistance from national funds to small farmers whose crops destroyed in three successive seasons on account of floods, 1361.
  - Floods, communications from local authorities, and reply, 1780.
  - Transitional payments, number of claims considered and number refused during last two months of 1932 and first two months of 1933, 2111.

Williams, Mr. T.:—cont.

- Doncaster drainage area, floods:
  - Position re, 188.
  - Warning to residents in case of danger, question of use of wireless, 188-9.
- Doncaster Area Drainage Bill, Com., 959-61; 3R, 963-4.
- East Africa, Government Departments, appointment of Indians to superior posts in, 1159.
- Entertainments duty, 375.
- Floods, drainage work, financial assistance, 1337.
- Gift Coupons Bill, 2R, 1572-80.
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Cons., 352-6.
- India:
  - Allahabad, prohibition of meeting at, under presidency of Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, 782-3.
  - Alwar, Meo movement, number of persons arrested in British India in connection with, and procedure followed in connection with trial, 4.
  - Benares, women volunteers case, 1585-6.
  - Berar, steps for taking wishes of people of, into consideration before deciding as to constitutional future of, 6.
  - Provincial Legislative Councils, decisions as to second chambers, 5.
  - Railway Board:
    - Indian members, 2.
    - Secretary, appointment of Indian, 2.
  - Raiya riot case, strictures passed by High Court on administration of justice in lower courts, action on, 3.
- Insurance policies of poor policyholders, lapsing of, 22.
- International Labour Office, 40-hour week Convention, British Government attitude, criticism, 579-83, 605.
- Kenya and Uganda Railway, number of Indians in service of, 1921 and 1932, 1180.
- Meat import restrictions, 988, 989, 1621.
- Municipal Corporations Audit Bill:
  - 2R, 1551.
  - Number of borough and county borough councils making representations in favour of, 999.
- Newcastle, transitional payments, scales, 368.
- Norfolk, wheat subsidy payments to farmers to last available date, and amount assigned to landowners, banks and merchants, 808.
- Nottinghamshire Colliery, overtime, 164.
  - Parliamentary Procedure, Questions to Ministers, absence of Members in whose names questions put down, 22-3.
- Poor law relief, increasing burden of, 577-8.
- Private enterprise, interference with, 13.
- Public assistance, expenditure, estimates for 1933-34, 548.
- Road and rail transport, Government proposals, adequate notice to member before introduction of, requested, 358.

Williams, Mr. T.:—cont.

- Rother Valley area, transitional payments, number of claims considered and number refused during last two months of 1932 and first two months of 1933, 2111.
- Rotherham, public assistance Commissioner, name and salary, 518.
- Rural industries, Debate on Motion, 2099-102.
- Sewer gas, protection against, 2130.
- Supply, Civil Estimates, Vote on Account, Rep., 575-87, 605, 608, 626, 627, 650, 652, 690, 691, 692.
- Textile industries, increase of unemployment, 1322.
- Thames and Wey Rivers, works schemes, 809.
- Timber imports, 979.
- Unemployment:
  - Debate on Vote on Account, 575-87, 605, 608, 626, 627, 650, 652, 690, 691, 692.
  - Reduction of registered employed owing to legislative and administrative changes, 1321.
  - Remedy question, 368.
  - Statistics, asking of questions re, 520.
- Unemployment benefit, transitional:
  - Administration by commissioners, criticism, 586.
  - Means test:
    - Assessment of family income on gross earnings, 1318.
    - Payment of premiums on endowment policies, allowances for, 2110.
  - Payments, number of applicants at present and in January, 1932, 379.
- Washington Hours Convention, British Government attitude, criticism, 581-2, 627.
- Wath Main and Bentley collieries, working days lost during flood periods in 1931 and 1932, and total loss of wages incurred, 1169.
- West Riding, transitional payments, administration, 583-6, 608, 2111.
- Yorkshire river schemes, grant question, 810.

Wills, Mr. W. D.:

- Barbados, cotton growing, 1173.
- Colonial sugar industry position, 1174.
- Jamaica, Japanese imports, competition with Empire products, 1173-4.

Wilson, Mr. G. H. A.:

- Aviation:
  - Aerodromes and landing grounds, increased facilities advocated, 1897.
  - Development and encouragement advocated, 1896-902.
  - National Flying Services, non-fulfilment of contract and question of future of clubs affiliated to, 1898-9.
  - Reserve of trained pilots, importance of, 1896, 1899-900, 1902.
  - University air squadrons, 1800-2.
- Supply, Air Estimates, Sir Philip Sassoon's statement, amateur flying, proposed amendment, 1896-902, 1913.

Windsor-Clive, Lieut.-Colonel G.:
- Army:
  - Household Cavalry, cost of, 1418.
  - Officers, number not excessive, 1419.
  - Reserve, reduction in strength and need for keeping up, 1418-9.
  - Supplementary Reserve, officers, doubt as to adequacy of number, 1419.
  - new Uniform, criticism, 1417.
- Defence, Imperial, Committee of inquiry into question of, advocated, 1417-8.
- Fighting services, discussion of estimates together desirable, 1418.
- Supply, Army Estimates, Mr. Cooper's statement, 1417-9.

Wine,
- British, net receipts of duty from, in 1932, 696.

Winterton, Rt. Hon. Earl,
- arms and munitions of war, exports to China and Japan, contracts, renewable clauses, 797.

Wise, Mr. A. R.,
- Navy, sisal cordage, position re use of, 183, 184.

Wolmer, Rt. Hon. Viscount,
- Agricultural Marketing Bill, 2R, 1680-6.

Wolverhampton,
- transitional payments, administration, 622-4, 684.

Womersley, Mr. W. J.,
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 257.

Wood, Rt. Hon. Sir Howard Kingsley, Postmaster-General:
- Addison Gardens Committee, holding of National Savings Certificates, decision re, 810-1.
- British Broadcasting Corporation:
  - Accounts, examination of, 1610.
  - Contribution by, in respect of coming financial year, 1774.
- Broadcasting, receiving licences, number issued during 1932, number of prosecutions for use of unlicensed sets and total amount of fines and costs, 811.
- Colchester, stamp machines, extent of installation and extension under consideration, 812.
- Dollis Hill, Post Office Research Station, cinema apparatus, contract given to American company, question as condition that British labour and material to be used, inquiry being made, 24.
- Kielder, telephone call office at, not possible, owing to heavy costs, 1792.
- Prescot, Lancs., post offices, pensions payments during 1932, 14.
- Post Office:
  - Advisory Committee, proceedings regarded as being confidential, and publication undesirable, 811.
  - Air Mails:
    - Letters weighing less than quarter-ounce, provision, previous reply referred to, 24.

Wood, Rt. Hon. Sir Howard Kingsley:— cont.
- Post Office:—cont.
  - Air Mails:—cont.
    - Parcel traffic, small decrease in, and no opportunity lost of encouraging, 813.
  - Central Telegraph Office, Cable room, stagnation of promotion and measures re, 812.
  - Parcel traffic, decrease during last two years, 813.
  - Savings Bank, depositors, deposits and withdrawal, 1929, 1930, 1931 and 1932, 202.
  - Servants, contributory pensions, persons ceasing to be engaged in excepted employment, memorandum issued to, 14.
  - Stamp-cancelling machines, country of origin of, 15.
  - Telegraph poles, position re Canadian supply, 24.
  - Telephone service:
    - Automatic dialling, inefficiency not agreed to, though in some cases tuition course advisable, 813.
    - Automatic working, absorption of redundant staff in other exchanges, 1605.
    - Cables, expenditure on laying underground, 1932-33 and estimate for 1933-34, 1622.
    - Hand-microphone instrument, not specially liable to error, 812.
    - Sloane telephone exchange area service found to be satisfactory, but specific instances of difficulty would be investigated, 812.
  - Telephonists, numbers employed on 31st December, 1931 and 1932, in London and in Provinces, 1605.
- Postmaster-General, visit to Glasgow, 1774.

Wood, Sir Murdoch McKenzie:
- Harris, land seizures in, 1345.
- Navy, herring drifters, number used during the War, and position in event of future war, 1949-50.
- Royal Seamen's Pension Fund:
  - Administration, dissatisfaction with regard to recent changes in, and inquiry into grievances suggested, 1332.
  - Governing body, representation of seamen's organisations and Officers' Federation, 1333.
  - Pension awards, 2129.
  - Refusal of pension, renewal of application, 1779.
- Wheat, prices in local currency and in terms of gold at latest date available, in Great Britain, Belgium, France, Germany and Italy, 1782-3.

Woollen and worsted industry:
- Insured persons in, decrease in number in June, 1923, to June, 1932, 1321.
- Number of insured persons and of unemployed, 25th June, 1923, 22nd June, 1931, and 27th June, 1932, 520.
- Unemployment, decrease in, 1321-2.

Woolwich:
- Ordnance factory, position re allocation of work to, 1416.
- Unemployment, statistics for men, boys, women and girls, and classification of industries, 25th January, 1932, and 23rd January, 1933, 528.

World Economic Conference:
- Agenda:
  - British claims against Russia, addition of question to, not proposed, 1180.
  - Hours of labour, question not included in draft Agenda and no information at present as to discussion of, 271-2.
- British representatives and experts to be attached to, no statement possible at present, 1364.
- Motion (Mr. Graham White), 1974-2050.
- previous Statements referred to, 1763, 2128.

Wormwood Scrubs Prison,
- Number of persons sent to, committed with loitering with intent to commit felony, 1931, information not available and collection of not justifiable, 542.
- Second division prisoners, treatment of, 2121-2.

York Corporation Transport Bill,
- 2R deferred, 695; 2R*, 1501.

Yorkshire:
- Agricultural workers, unemployment position, 200.
- Public works. number of loans sanctioned but separate returns not available, 571.
- Secondary school fees, position under Circular 1421, 563-4.
- West Riding, transitional payments:
  - Assessment of gross or nett earnings of family, a matter for authority concerned, and basis under review by, 2111.
  - Means test, administration, 583-6, 605-8.

Young, Rt. Hon. Sir Edward Hilton, Minister of Health:
- Bentley area floods:
  - Expenses incurred by urban district council and expenditure on public assistance, 1335.
  - Legislation under consideration, 1336.
  - no National funds available for assistance of tenants of houses, but needs being met locally, 1335-6.
- Census returns, publication prospects, and no delay, 546-7.
- Chepping Wycombe borough, extension, position re, 380.
- Chingford, town planning scheme, laundry extension, 2153.
- Cornwall, maternity and child welfare services, staff, inquiries being made, 551.
- Eastington Rural District Council, sewerage schemes in preparation by, applications for sanction to loan will be considered in light of Government policy already explained, 803-4.

Young, Rt. Hon. Sir Edward Hilton:— cont.
- Enamelled ware, antimony poisoning from use, no power to lay standard of safe manufacture, but circular recently issued on subject, 1338.
- Housing:
  - Direct labour, number of local authorities having commenced house building operations by, since 1st January, 1932, 2153.
  - Door locks, quality, 1331.
  - Improvement areas, number of local authorities making resolutions and number of areas affected, since passing of 1930 Act, confirmation of declarations by Minister not required, 1331.
  - Reconditioning, committee, prospects of report, 545.
  - Rural districts, contributions by county councils towards provision of houses for members of agricultural population, 2128.
  - Rural Workers Acts:
    - Administration by rural district councils, sympathetic consideration to be given to any application, 2127.
    - Houses dealt with under, required statement to be supplied, 572.
  - Slum clearance orders:
    - Confirmation of, time ordinarily taken for, 545-6.
    - Simplification of machinery and expedition of procedure, constant attention to question of, 546.
  - Subsidised houses, class of tenants, previous reply referred to, and measures taken re, 1331-2, 2272.
  - Syndicates subsidised by local authorities, no knowledge of, 832.
  - Working-class houses, Committee, terms of reference and composition, 814-5.
- Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, Com., 211-5, 220-1, 237, 242-4, 245, 253-6, 290-1, 296, 299-301, 302, 303, 307, 310-1, 321-2, 323-4, 326-7, 340; Cons., 839-41, 848, 863-5, 880-1, 882; 3R, 883-9, 891-7.
- Lancashire, rates, estimated increase or decrease in rate income in 1932-33 as compared with preceding year, in each of 12 most populous towns, 198.
- Leek Urban District Council, housing scheme, particulars being supplied, 814.
- Lincoln, public assistance, percentages of inhabitants in receipt of, 31st December, 1932, and 25th February, 1933, and special steps being taken by Council to review situation, 1335.
- Liverpool, public assistance, estimated expenditure for 1932-33 and 1933-34, information not possessed, 572.
- Local authorities:
  - Expenditure:
    - 1929-30 on education and highways, no information for current year, 813.
    - Estimates, not submitted to Minister, 550.

[cont

Young, Rt. Hon. Sir Edward Hilton:— cont.
Local authorities:—cont.
  Expenditure:—cont.
    Falling on rates and grants, aggregate in 1929-30 and 1930-31, estimates for two following years not yet available, 547-8.
    on Roads and scavenging, admission for block grant, but allocation of grant to special headings not possible, 1611.
  Public works loans, total amount sanctioned from beginning of April, 1932, to end of January, 1933, 571.
Local Government (General Exchequer Contributions) Bill, 2R, 1043, 1050, 1076, 1086-96; 3R, 2267-70.
London County Council, sale of Numbers Farm, King's Langley, 832.
Loughborough Rural District Council housing scheme, particulars being supplied, 814.
Maternal mortality rates, London, 1931, reference to Registrar-General's Statistical Review for 1931, 1338.
Milk (Special Designations) Order, 1923, requirements re stating date of production on caps of bottles of certified milk, alteration, consideration of, not proposed at present, 550-1.
National health insurance:
  Medical benefit, cessation of entitlement to, at end of 1933, 1337.
  Unemployed persons, position of, in June, 2119-20.
  Voluntary contributors, opportunity of becoming, 2126-7.
  Voluntary insurance, no extension of scope in prospect, 2126-27, 2127.
Poor law:
  Casual wards, London, average numbers in, on Fridays, November, December, 1932, and January, 1933, and 1931-32, further information required not available, 550.
  Expenditure:
    1930-31, 1334.
    Equalisation, legislation not proposed at present, issues under consideration by Government in connection with Unemployment Insurance Commission report, 1334.
    Local authorities not required to submit estimates, and required information not available, 548.
  London County Institutions, transference of aged people as result of improved classification of institutions, but measures taken to minimise inconvenience, 549.
  Outdoor relief, average number of unemployed persons in receipt of, excluding dependents, in each week of January, 1933, 700.
  Relief to recipients of unemployed benefit or transitional payments, in area of London public assistance committee, 1323-4.

Young, Rt. Hon. Sir Edward Hilton:— cont.
Rates:
  Assessment committees, appeals from, 547.
  Burden of public assistance, relief, previous reply referred to, 550.
  estimated Product of penny rate if levied on total rateable value of all rateable properties in England and Wales for current financial year, 1333-4, 1334.
Registrar-General's Office, certificates issued by, checking of, 572.
Royal Seamen's Pension Fund:
  Administration, changes, improvement in position of fishermen by, and no dissatisfaction known of, 1332-3.
  Administration scheme, copy to be placed in Library, 1333.
  Amount credited to, during 1932, out of contributions paid under National Health and Unemployment Insurance Acts, 2128-9.
  Governing body, no vacancies on, at present, but suggestions as to representation on, would be considered, 1333.
  Pensions:
    Number of awards, and numbers to fishermen, in 1929, 1930, 1931 and 1932, 2129.
    Preference to masters and seamen who have served in foreign-going ships, 2129-30.
Sewer gas, protection of local authorities employés against, 2130.
Tring Urban District Council, housing scheme, particulars being supplied, 814.
Unemployment:
  Local authorities schemes:
    British materials, position re use of, 2118.
    further Circular not considered necessary, 803, 2118-9.
  Relief works:
    Sewerage schemes, responsibility of district councils, and attitude re loans, 533.
    Water schemes, attitude re, 534.
  Road and sewage work on private estates, cases must be considered on merits, 533.
  Work schemes, one million pounds expenditure, allocation to wages, materials, purchase of land and interest, not possible, 1324.
Unemployment benefit, transitional, treatment of disability pensions, 1360.
Willenhall, Council offices and fire station, loan for, refusal of sanction, 571-2, 572.
Yorkshire, public works, number of loans sanctioned, but separate returns not available, 571.

Yugoslavia,
Pact with Czechoslovakia and Rumania, see under Czechoslovakia.

Printed by H.M. Stationery Office Press, Pocock Street, S.E.1.